Mrs. Barney's Bible Readings are so well known, and Mrs. Barney herself is so well loved of white-ribboners, that in announcing a Reading from her pen we feel sure of giving pleasure. As World's superintendent of penal, charitable and reformatory work and National evangelist, Mrs. Barney is, as may be imagined, one of the busiest of busy W. C. T. U. women; nevertheless she consented (at the urgent request of the editor) to prepare upon short notice the Reading for September. Her subject is "Heart Enlargement," and her words breathe that consecrated, uplifting spirit, that closeness to the divine and to the human, which is possible only to the soul whose life is "hid with Christ in God." The Reading is one which cannot fail to reach the heart and quicken the spiritual life of every reader.

We are pleased to receive thus early $5 orders for leaflets, and in reply to some inquiries will state that until October 1, $8 worth of literature may be ordered from the catalogue and $5 sent to pay the bill. It will be necessary to say when sending the order, that this is in reply to our Special Premium Offer. If we are out of any leaflets ordered we shall be compelled to use our own discretion in substituting others.

The time for the fall conventions approaches, when state and district unions will be preparing for the musical part of their programs. For good and appropriate music send a two-cent stamp to the W. T. P. A. and obtain its complete list of temperance and prohibition music.

The Grand Canyon

Of the Yellowstone is 1,200 feet deep. It has been excavated out of hard volcanic rock. You can imagine how many million years it has taken to do this. It is a wonderful combination in form and color. You ought to see it. Probably you intend to some time. Better go this year. Rates are low. Send six cents to Chas. S. Fee, General Passenger Agent of the Northern Pacific R. R., St. Paul, Minn., for a tourist book of the park.

Harvest Excursions

Will be run by the Burlington Route on Aug. 29, Sept. 10 and Sept. 24, from Chicago, Peoria St. Louis and other points on the line to the farming regions of the West, Northwest and Southwest. Very low round-trip rates will be in effect. For folder giving details or for land pamphlets, apply to P. S. Eustis, Gen'l. Pass. Agt., C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill.

MEMBERSHIP WEEK.

September 22-28.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Queen Liliuokalani has been granted a full pardon, and is no longer a prisoner in her own house.

The Columbian liberty bell started on its round-the-world voyage, Friday, in a special car, for Atlanta.

The Catholic University at Washington, D. C., over which Bishop Keane has jurisdiction, has opened its doors to women.

A bill to make only white citizens eligible to the franchise has been presented to the South Carolina Constitutional Convention.

Legal proceedings to test and uphold the validity of the prohibitory clauses in the deeds were entered Monday by the temperance citizens of Harvey, Ill.

The National Women's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, met in annual convention at Louisville, Ky., Friday. The order has a membership of thirty thousand.

The Catholic Knights of Ohio, in session at Fremont last week, virtually closed their doors to saloon-keepers by refusing applications for membership from those engaged in a business in which the death rate exceeds twenty in a thousand.

A frightful wreck on the Union Pacific was averted by the quick action of Mrs. Olstrom, wife of a section hand, at Wolcott Station, Friday, who, seeing that a wooden bridge was on fire, sped down the track and flagged the approaching fast train, which stopped within a few feet of danger.

EX-GOVERNOR ST. JOHN called at our office Monday to announce the sad news of the death of Mrs. Lulu V. Reynolds, in Detroit, Mich., September 14. Mrs. Reynolds was one of the strongest white-ribboners in Michigan, and had edited Living Issues for years. Her husband is Dr. Henry Reynolds, leader of the noted red ribbon movement, who has probably influenced more men to sign and to keep the pledge than any other living man.

ELEVEN women delegates to the Detroit M. E. conference at Ann Arbor Friday, were admitted almost without dissent. The representatives elected to the general conference at Cleveland, in May next, were pledged to vote for the admission of women, and the meeting sensibly resolved that there should be no further question of women's rights in this particular. This is another notable instance of the leaven that worketh in the Methodist lump.

THAT the temperance agitation will go on in England with increased rather than diminished force as a result of the elections is apparent. The London Times has already begun the publication of a series of elaborate articles in which the temperance laws of the United States are passed in review with great particularity, and the Swedish method of handling the liquor traffic is defended. The point made is that if the motive to sell as much strong drink as he can were eliminated from the saloon-keeper's mind, it would be of great value to the public. This will be controverted by the temperance people, and education will go on centering round the Swedish system, the compensation, and most of all around the principle that the people ought to have the power to regulate the traffic in their own localities. It is now well nigh universally believed that if the name of the bill had been People's Control of the Liquor Traffic instead of Direct Veto, the outcome of the election would have been different. There is no doubt that teaching phrases are not so plentiful as they ought to be in the vocabulary of the average temperance reformer. It is for this reason that we have so earnestly hoped that Home Protection might be the name of our party. It is a conciliatory name, it places in the foreground in public thought the most attractive object in the world, it disarms opposition, it obliges the mind to dwell upon the duty of a nation to care for the homes that are its centers of happiness and fortresses of power.

WE have already called attention to the resolution of the wine, liquor and beer dealers' association of New York city. This resolution is to the effect that beginning with September 1, any member of the association who keeps his place of business open on Sunday shall be expelled from the association. We have selected the following paragraph from the address of the president of the association, as presumably giving the reason for the action: "The time has now come when we should take a step forward, and that can be accomplished by placing ourselves in the category of citizens who respect the law, be it what it may. We have established the fact beyond contention that the police cannot stop the sale of liquor on Sunday by their own exertions, yet this result is attended with circumstances which are annoying and discomforting to us. Hovering over all of us is that hideous reputation of constant violaters of the law, which is wont to burden with humiliation and disgrace not only ourselves but our families, whom surely every good father should love and respect and shield from degradation. To avoid such a stigma let us demonstrate to the people that while no power at the disposal of the police could enforce the law, we ourselves are going to abide by it and help enforce it, so that the peace and order of the community can be maintained by the police, who heretofore were placed as guards of honor before the doors of our stores. I reiterate, let us comply with the law for the present and assume our places in the community as law-abiding citizens, and then in this status let us concentrate our skill and energy in an unremitting and persevering campaign for the procurement of such excise laws as will afford us such relief as our rights, privileges and immunities as citizens guarantee to us; such laws as will suffer us to go unmolested and unencumbered in the pursuit of our avocation in life." For a body of reputable business men to pass a resolution to expel from their association anyone who violated the laws of the state or the city, is proper enough, though the fact of there being any necessity for such action would excite severe comment if it were done by men in any other business under the sun. But the reasons for such action as given by President Hirsch may well be considered as one of the most remarkable statements ever made. What would be the general sentiment toward any other association of business men who proposed to "take a step forward" by placing themselves "in the category of citizens who respect the law!" We do not suppose anyone is startled, or even surprised to learn of the deliberate, persistent violation of law by liquor dealers as a class; because everybody knew it before. We confess, however, we are somewhat surprised at this open boast of having heretofore successfully defied the authorities, and we are still more surprised that not a single one, so far as we have seen, of the secular papers calls attention to the significance of this monstrous admission, or once suggests that a body of men who can make it, not only openly but boastingly, are proper candidates for the penitentiary.

THE International Alcohol Congress in Basle convened four hundred and seventy-six delegates from ten countries. The Pope was represented by the Bishop of St. Gall and the French Minister of Education was also represented. The secretary of the committee of arrangements was Dr. John Hay, an English gentleman long resident in Basle. The president was the well known Professor Burckhardt. Among the English delegates was the Dean of Hereford, Joseph Malins, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Osborn, Mrs. Selmer and other well known temperance workers. Dr. Gaule, professor of physiology in the Zurich University, read a paper on "Alcohol from a Physiological Point of View." The doctor said the question had passed through three stages, first, the "gift of God" stage, second, the "moderation," third, the "total abstinence" and had arrived at the fourth stage, viz., the standpoint of physiology. He then showed by the aid of a diagram in the most conclusive manner that the use of alcoholic drinks in small or large doses "has the invariable effect of undermining the physical basis of the mind." Dr. Smith, the superintendent of the home for inebriates near Lake Constance, proved that the use of alcohol in small or large doses "has a distinct tendency to paralyze the mental faculties." Dr. Furer, of Heidelberg, stated that he had been able by means of an ingenious electric clock to prove that "so small a quantity of alcohol as seven grammes tended to suspend or paralyze the movements of the muscles." This clock was so made as to divide the minute space into one thousand parts. Dr. Legrain, medical superintendent of an important lunatic asylum in France, stated that insanity was greatly on the increase in France and that "a large proportion is clearly traceable to drink." His conclusions were as follows; First, madness in any country is increased in proportion to the increase in the consumption of alcohol. Second, the chief cause of insanity in France is drink, for the increase in the number of admissions into lunatic asylums is more marked in those departments where there is the largest consumption of alcohol. On the last day's session it was resolved with but three negative votes that the "Congress decides respectfully to approach all of the European governments requesting them to take effective steps for the total and definitive prohibition of the traffic in spirits among the natives of Africa."

JOY AND PAIN.

BY HARRIET NEWELL SWANWICK.

'Tis well that the "Harvest Home" be glad,
That the full heart overflow with praise;
Forgetting not all His benefits,
Which with plenty crown the autumn days.

Yet, as we garner the wealth of fields—
And thus the essence of summer hold—
Into our song steals a chord of pain,
A blight corrupts the precious gold;

For part is destined—alas! the shame—
To be perverted to evil ends;
While one sheaf blesses and upbuilds,
On another misery attends.

Mankind still wrongeth his brother man;
Giveth a stone, and taketh his bread;
The weaker fall—ah! their moans we hear,
As the curse descends on the helpless head.

To the rescue! Ye of the strong, true heart;
No longer let selfish greed control,
Nor turn God's gifts into chains that bind
Forever and aye, an immortal soul.

REAPING THE WHIRLWIND.

A Tale of the Social Inquisition.

In Two Chapters.

BY FRANCES RHODES SAUNDERS.

CHAPTER II.

When the meeting closed, Mrs. Leon, with a pale, startled face, hurried Constance out of the house, but not until the frightened blue eyes had involuntarily met the gaze of the tall young man about whom now gathered many welcoming faces.

As the shivering girl walked with unsteady steps toward the sleigh into which her father hastily tucked her and her baby, there came to her ears the sound of kind voices crying, "Why, Harry Deane! When did you get home?" "So glad to see you!" "Do come right over!" and many other words of friendly greeting and hospitality from her old-time friends and their gentle mothers.

As Constance pressed her poor, little, nameless child to her rebellious heart, knowing so well what it meant to be a dishonored woman, she asked herself the question: "What does it take to make a dishonored man?"

It happened that I was from home that week until Thursday evening, when, taking up the county paper that had just been brought in, my eye caught the notice: "Married, on Monday, January 20, 187– at the home of the bride's parents in Lincoln township, the Rev. Peter Goodenough officiating, Mr. Henry Clay Deane, of Colorado, to Miss Constance Leon."

I laid the paper down and wet my handkerchief with the best and holiest tears that ever fell from my eyes.

Poor Connie! Poor little broken flower! Her baby would have a name now, and she would have some shelter from the scorn of a virtuous world. Perhaps the hunted look would leave her blue eyes.

As I sat thinking it all over there came a knock at the door. I opened, and there stood—Harry Deane!

"Come in," I said, a little more graciously than I could have spoken half an hour ago. The tall young fellow came in and took the seat I offered with what seemed to me an air of humility. Then he began to talk, with no preliminary attempt at discussing the weather, general health and all the little excuses at conversation with which we are wont to prelude our real words.

"Mrs. S.," he said, "I came to talk to you about my wife and baby—Connie sent me."

I offered him my hand with full graciousness at these words, spoken with a lifting of the head and a fine manliness of expression.

"Connie asked me to come and tell you all about it, because you have been good to her. And oh, may God bless you for being good to Connie."

I think we both cried a little here, while I said nothing, but waited eagerly for him to go on.

"I know you think me a dog, as I was, to go off and leave her so. I cannot understand now how I ever did it. She was always a thousand times better than I was, and I knew it, too. Can you believe me, Mrs. S., that I never meant to wrong her in the beginning, never truly meant it at all. We were both so young and so fond of each other—but how can I explain? Only, Mrs. S., Connie and I are going to try to keep our boys and girls from being thrown too much at the mercy of their own passions. We mean to try to guard them more jealously than ever we were guarded, and not the less if they are deeply in love and engaged to be married. I'm not very old, Mrs. S., but I've done a lot of thinking in the last three years."

I began to understand the man as I had long felt sure I understood the woman.

"Well, I was to tell you about our marriage. But first I want to explain about my going away. I did not know what to do. I had no place to take a wife. There was no room and I was sure there would be no welcome for us at my father's house under the circumstances, for I felt that we would both be disgraced. Then, like a fool, I took counsel of another young fellow, who advised me to leave the country. At first I would not think of it; but he said that was what any fellow of sense would do, that Connie had a good home, and when I was gone would probably fix things up all right, as lots of girls did, and then I could come back and nothing would ever be said.

"Finally I weakly yielded to this cursed influence, and leaving a cowardly letter for my poor girl ran away and left her to bear the consequences of what had been so much more my fault than hers.

"After I had gone I wanted to come back but had not the courage. I supposed that whatever happened Connie would hate me. No one knew my address except the young villain whose counsel had sent me off—though of course I needn't have taken his advice," with a tone of self-contempt.

"Finally he wrote as he had promised, not what he had assured me would be his message, but coarsely joking me on being 'the father of a bouncing boy.' Mrs. S., I was in a perfect hell of remorse, for you must believe I am not quite the heartless wretch some fellows are. I could not come home then, I thought it was too late.

"At last I wrote to my brother and learned that I was not utterly disowned by my family. Then the great longing to see them and Connie and the child grew on me until it brought me home. I came Saturday, and Sunday morning I went to church, where my brother said was the only place I was likely to see either the baby or his mother. Feeling like the meanest wretch that ever showed himself among decent people, I went, expecting to be treated with the contempt I deserved, but resolved to see Connie and the child, at any rate, and then go away again.

"But, Mrs. S., I was hailed good fellow by everybody but you. And I saw the same women who smiled upon me, draw back from touching that poor girl, and none of our old set spoke to her. I was angry and disgusted. I saw that Connie looked tired and worn, and she was leading a little fellow so much like me that I trembled with the strangest feeling, and longed to take him in my arms! I did not even know what she called our child.

"In the afternoon I rode over and begged an interview with Connie's father. He was very good not to kick me off the place. I asked him at last to call Connie, and when she came into the room trembling so her father's arm could hardly keep her from falling, I told her why I had come and begged her to try to trust me again, and if she had the courage to marry the cowardly dog I had shown myself to be, we would be married. The poor girl fainted dead away in her father's arms, but he would not let me touch her! I didn't blame him any.

"We were married the next day, and I shall try to make my poor Connie happy even yet, for strangely enough, she loves me still! There is no accounting for the faithfulness of a woman's love, Mrs. S.," with a sob in his voice.

"You will go back to Colorado?" I asked.

"No," he said, "Connie would rather stay here, she thinks, where people know all about us. She has a horror of having stories of the past follow her among strangers; so we shall make our home here where there is nothing new to learn about us."

I shook the young man's hand warmly at parting, feeling in my heart that perhaps there was some sunshine for Constance Deane, even yet.

The good people of Lincoln township were, for the most part, highly gratified in being free to take up again, without tongs, their old-time favorite, and there were few who did not rejoice, in their virtuous conclaves, that Harry Deane was so honorable as to come back and make an honest woman of Connie Leon.

A new light came into Connie's eyes—a peaceful, quiet, restful light that spoke of calm after a tempest. But never again has come back the joyous lightness of heart nor the old merry look. People often remark that Constance has made Harry Deane a good, faithful wife, as if there were something remarkable in the fact.

When her old friends began to come around her Connie opened her blue eyes in bewilderment, and she cannot even yet understand why she is any better than she would have been if Harry had not come back to do her tardy justice. Certain it is, that she had not been a year Mrs. Harry Deane until all her old friends had returned to her with more or less cordiality, and when her little girl was born it was the pet of the community, though baby Connie was not so sweet and pretty as little Arthur had been.

Yes, I believe Constance is happy in her quiet, chastened way, loving her husband and children—Arthur, perhaps most of all, but she has never quite recovered from the shadow of those three years in the black dungeon of the social inquisition.

SOUND MINDS IN SOUND BODIES.

BY MARY B. WILLARD.

"Think upward and be light!" The command given in a clear, incisive, but reasonable and kindly tone, suggests an institute of psychology rather than a gymnasium; but it was given by Miss Maxwell in the Swedish gymnastic club at Reigate Priory, to a party of girls who were just about to take a forty-six inch jump. It sounds psychological, it is true, and with the soundest of reasons, for gymnastics, properly based and properly taught, must be a matter of mind. Especially is this true of the Swedish system taught by Miss Maxwell, who is a pupil of Baron Nils Posse, now of Boston, and one of the first class graduated by his school.

Miss Maxwell came to England in May, by invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, and was for several weeks her guest at Eastnor Castle, after which she superintended the fitting up of a gymnasium in the Priory where she had a number of classes during the summer, the most interesting of which is made up of the three well-known white-ribboners, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Frances E. Willard and Miss Anna A. Gordon. In addition to classes from the families of Reigate, Miss Maxwell teaches a number of pupils who receive their instruction through the courtesy of Lady Henry Somerset. One of these classes includes the stenographers, another the girls of St. Mary's Home, founded by Lady Henry, and a third, the leading lady clerks in the shops of Reigate.

It will be interesting to white-ribboners to know that Miss Maxwell's mother was one of the founders of the W. C. T. U. of Boston.

I asked Miss Maxwell for some information concerning the system, and this was her answer:

"Our system is based on the Ling principles of physical culture, as they are embodied in the national school system of Scandinavia, the results of which are seen in the splendid physique of the men and women of the North."

"And how does one prepare to teach this science?"

"This Swedish system of gymnastics has been wrought out and derived from mechanics, anatomy, physiology, and psychology. Hence all of these branches of science enter into the course of study, which occupies two years, and embraces both educational gymnastics and medical gymnastics. The first, of course, is used in schools and the regular gymnasium; the second is applied to pathological cases, also malformations, largely by massage. Here in the Priory gymnasium, I am using only the former with my classes."

"And how did you, yourself, come to take up gymnastics as a profession? Was it the philanthropic interest to secure better physical development for women in the hope of sounder minds, when sound bodies should be the rule and not the exception?"

"No, it was not philanthropy chiefly that induced me to take up the study, but with the thought that since I must do something to make life comfortable for others as well as myself, it would yield me the greatest returns both physically and financially, at the same time conferring inestimable blessing on others; for what is so essential to the right use of life, to say nothing of its enjoyment, as a thoroughly available physique?"

"And have you found in the Swedish system of gymnastics all you hoped for physically?" It seemed a little superfluous to ask this question of a woman who at first glance gives one the impression of having her entire body under the same control as most of us have our hands and fingers.

"It would be difficult for me to tell you all I have found in it, but suffice to say, I believe no other system takes cognizance of so many of the truths of being. In the first place it deals with the pupil as an individual; you, yourself, are the unit, without reference to your neighbor, and the aim of physical culture is to round your particular body to its harmonious and well-balanced whole, where the action and development of one part is proportionate to that of all the other parts, and all are under the perfect control of the will."

"Not every home has or can have its gymnastic apparatus. How would you deal with persons who do not have access to a well fitted gymnasium?"

"Some of our best work is done in private houses, in a dining room, for instance, where we have only chairs, a rope possibly and a stout pole. I have seen excellent progress made with a rope and a broomstick. This I consider one of the best features of the system, its adaptability to every situation and environment. Of course we may be able to do more if we have apparatus of one sort or another, yet there are free standing exercises that no apparatus in the world can ever substitute. We believe that these free exercises develop coördination and general physical culture, while the movements of applied apparatus cultivate force and localized effects."

"I noticed by your command to 'think upward' how closely you connect mind with body in your system."

"Yes, the fundamental principle, according to Ling, is the oneness of the human organism and the harmony that ought to exist between mind and body. All our movements being guided toward certain ends, one of these ends is the psychological, which with the physiological and physical receives its due share of attention. For instance, you will find it laid down in the text-books on general kinesiology, that respiratory exercises produce the psychological effects of exhilaration and moral repose; shoulder blade movements produce localization of thought, concentration of mind; heaving movements, consciousness of power; leaping and vaulting, courage and appreciation of effort with presence of mind. The virtuoso with his violin, the leader with his orchestra, are only symbols of what we believe every human being ought to be with respect to his own organism. And every nerve and fiber ought to respond as musically and sympathetically to his will as the chords and cadenzas of the instruments to the skill of the artist and director.

"And now that you have so clearly demonstrated and explained what the system has done for you and your pupils physically—you said, you remember, that in entering on your profession you had also financial aims—is it fair to ask, can any young woman, who has her own finances to look after, build her hopes on financial success?"

"The science and practice of educational gymnastics has no royal road to success. While a good constitution is necessary in this training, and is often developed where it does not at first exist, there are very few qualifications that one would lay down as especially needful here which are not equally demanded in any other vocation. To be successful—which means, of course, to be able to impart to others a knowledge of the system in such measure as to insure to them health and perfect development of body—one must have far more than the knowledge of it. Courage, ability to make people believe in you, to attach people to you, are absolutely necessary. With thorough training and these qualities of character, success in its best and broadest sense is as certain as it can be in any worldly scheme, and financial success is abundant. One may reap ample reward in money, besides a far more satisfactory recompense in the gratitude of those one is able to help. It is a delightful profession," she added, enthusiastically, as she stepped with a lithe, free movement across the room to where her Priory class was waiting further orders.

THE SALOON AND THE SABBATH.

BY MRS. F. E. BRITTEN.

II.

II. THE SALOON IS INDICTED ON THE FOLLOWING COUNTS.

(1) The saloon opposes Sunday prohibition, and strives to defeat the passage of such laws.

The mistake is sometimes made of looking upon Sunday closing laws as restrictive measures. The laws are rather prohibitory measures, and furnish an object lesson of the good effects of prohibition. But it is urged that the Sunday closing laws prove the opposite of the good effects of prohibition, that it does not prohibit, and that more liquor is sold than would be if the saloons were let alone. What does the enemy think about it? The Wine and Spirit Gazette says: "The stringent laws and prohibition are rapidly driving the saloon from Mississippi. A saloon will soon be a rarity if they decrease at the present rate." Therefore, the liquor dealers oppose all prohibitory enactments.

In the twenty-sixth annual convention of the United States Brewers' Association its board of trustees used in its report these significant words: "In the large cities the selling of liquors during stated hours of the Sabbath seems to be almost a necessity." A necessity to what? To the interests of their business, of course, hence their opposition to Sunday legislation.

(2) The saloon strives to defeat the passage of Sunday laws, and persistently violates such laws when passed.

The cry so often raised, "You cannot enforce it"—the law opposing the saloon—means, "We will not obey." In Cincinnati there had been twenty sales of liquor unmolested. Then came the somewhat rigid Scott law, and later, in 1885, the Dow law, by which Sunday selling was permitted. But the better class of people were much dissatisfied, and clamored, until, in 1888, the Owen bill was introduced. This bill represented the sentiment of the citizens. It passed through the house, then was met with a storm from the liquor men. Through strategy the unwelcome bill was dropped in the senate. The Republicans dare not be responsible for its passage. What shall be done? Bury it. Nothing easier. A deal was effected by which the Poorman bill, which was also pending, and which (on the plea of an impoverished treasury) provided for a raise of the tax, was passed without opposition, and the Owen bill buried. The saloon powers successful! Their ends attained! The traffic still free from Sunday closing laws. But best laid plans will fail oftentimes, and so it happened in this case, for the Democrats resurrected the bill and championed it through. Foiled in the attempt to defeat the bill, did they obey the law when passed? Thursday, July 24, 1889, five or six hundred saloon-keepers met at Turners' Hall, and among other resolutions the following was adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the saloon-keepers here assembled, openly oppose this law (the Owen law), which is unpopular and damaging to our business; and therefore, we have decided to keep our places of business quietly open on next Sabbath and on all succeeding Sundays, conducting our business as on any other day and avoiding all disturbance."

Three hundred saloon-keepers signed this resolution, and thus made a black record of organized law-breaking, determined anarchy and flagrant treason. Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage stated some years ago that in the sixteenth ward of Brooklyn there are five breweries and three hundred and twenty-three saloons, and only one out of that number observes the Sabbath law. What a state of things for the city of churches! Three hundred and twenty-two saloons in one ward, open and doing business on Sunday in defiance of the law!

(3) The saloon causes Sunday to be a day of dissipation rather than a day of rest.

In Europe the continental Sunday brings a Monday everywhere called the blue Monday, the result of a Sunday of dissipation. In this country Sunday picnics, excursions and similar dissipations fostered and promoted by the saloon, are rapidly bringing upon us a similar Monday.

(4) The saloon breeds disrespect for law.

Is it doubted by any that this statement is true? Surely, an institution that opposes Sunday closing, strives to defeat Sabbath laws, organizes to violate such laws and encourages Sunday dissipation, creates an atmosphere of disrespect for law!

(5) The saloon cannot be purified.

Many efforts have been made to purify the dance, the theater and the saloon, but such attempts remind me of the wise remark of the Ram's Horn, "Perseverance can accomplish wonders but it can never make a bad egg hatch."

III. THE OLD PARTIES PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

(1) The Republican and Democrat parties both stand avowedly for license and not for prohibition. Both bend the knee to the saloon power; neither dare declare hostility to the liquor traffic; neither has courage to rigidly enforce Sunday prohibition. Those who stick to the old parties are much like the Scotch lad educated for a preacher. When he came home his mother asked him to pray. Accordingly he knelt down and offered a fervent petition. "Mither, how do ye like that?" And the good mother sorrowfully said, "Ah, my boy, ye did na gie the de'il a whack." "That's so, mither, but we can na tell whose hands we'll fall into." Law should either make men quit their meanness or pay the penalty. The old parties are to blame for the desecration of Sunday laws.

(2) Sunday prohibition tolerated because the Prohibitionists keep the social lungs inflated. Republicans and Democrats know as well as we do that an irregularity cannot be regulated. It was not until the Prohibition party had become an aggressive factor in politics that there was any willingness on the part of politicians to listen to the demands of temperance people.

(3) Failure to enforce encourages violation and disrespect. A danger is abroad in the land of misconceiving the precise educative effect of law. A law may be loosely drawn and the attempt to enforce it so farcical as to impede the real moral working of the law itself.

Hear now my creed concerning the Sunday question:

(a) The government has an inherent right to establish a legal rest day or civil Sabbath and to fix as such civil Sabbath the day commonly observed by the people as a religious Sabbath.

(b) The government has a right to protect the civil Sabbath by legislation prohibiting unnecessary traffic on that day.

(c) No firm, corporation or institution has a right to violate such prohibitive legislation.

(d) When any institution persistently violates righteous legislation it is the duty of every loyal citizen to protest as effectually as possible.

(e) When an institution derives its right to do business from a license issued by the government and persistently violates the prohibitive condition of such license, the government has a right to remove the license and utterly annihilate the business.

(f) The legalized saloon derives its right to do business from a license issued by the government. It does persistently violate the prohibitive conditions of its license, and may properly be unceremoniously annihilated by the government. It tramples under foot righteous legislation, and therefore it becomes the duty of every loyal citizen to protest by voice and vote and insist on its abolition.

It is our business to keep the public lungs inflated with lofty motives, pure principles.

WHAT GOOD CAN BE DONE THROUGH POLITICS?

BY JOHN C. KENWORTHY.

The wreck that has just befallen the political "party of progress" in England adds a special interest and seriousness to this question. Those whose hearts and lives have been thrown into the struggle for temperance reform, are confronted with the fact that after decades of agitation and organization, a government which at last introduces a measure for local control of the liquor traffic is drowned in a deluge of votes at the bidding of that iniquitous interest. Well may we ask, "Is there wisdom in putting work and hope into politics?"

A growing number of people to-day say, "No," to that question; and I want, as briefly and plainly as may be, to state the foundation of principle on which their answer is based. It is this:

Government, as we know it, in every civilized country is carried on by force. Our laws are simply the wills and opinions of a part of the people (the propertied and privileged classes) which the rest of the nation is compelled to obey by direct violence, exercised through police, soldiery, judges, prisons and punishments. Now, the only way to really reform men is by education and kindness—by what the New Testament calls love. No good and wise person thinks that the rod, the lash, the rifle, the prison, can do anything but keep beasts under command. If this be a right view, it is obviously wrong to think that such means can make a nation sober, or just, or good. Yet that is precisely what we try to do when we pass or desire to pass a Factory Act or a Local Veto Bill!

A study of history shows that whenever legislative power is established, it is always seized upon by the unscrupulous and selfish. The good do not want to govern men, but to serve men; for they realize that freedom for all can only come in this way. Let us see how this principle works in our temperance cause.

First of all we have—in all civilization—a social system which deprives the mass of the people of their independence, plunges them into or threatens them with want, anxiety and unwholesome conditions of life, makes them, in short, ready victims of the drink mania. (Half a century ago there was no temperance party in the United States, for the people were prosperous and at least comparatively sober. "Capitalism" has changed all that.) Out of that very misery and disease the brewer, distiller and saloon-keeper come along and make their profit. And note this, the law is on their side; it is their protector. By force of law the public house stands open, and "the dealer in damnation" (the phrase is not too strong) is empowered to thrust his temptation into the faces of people who would close his doors—if the law allowed them to do it.

At this point the "practical reformer" steps in and says, "Just so: then we must alter the law." And upon this determination nearly all reform action proceeds. But let us look deeper and I think we shall find this truth—that as long as we try to bring about God's righteousness by legal force, so long we fail. For what always happens in the legal struggle for reform? This, the reform cause, is betrayed by enemies who act as traitors, and the enemies find means to nullify any apparent advantage which the reformers gain. Thus in the United States (just as in the old civilization) chattel slavery has been replaced by wage-slavery, and the slave-owner's cruelty to the slave is replaced by legal cruelty to the so-called "freeman." In England the possible small relief afforded by Factory Acts is compensated by the oppression of the "sweated" and the misery of the "unemployed." Let us see how this principle has worked over the Local Veto bill.

The rich and powerful lords and laymen of the drink interest see that their pockets are threatened. At once they organize. The walls of every town are posted with their appeals, the streets filled with their emissaries, and despite every law to the contrary, their "free drink" finds its way into the mouths of their dupes and victims. Observe that no consideration of honor, honesty or morals rules these men. The names of "justice," "freedom," even "religion," are invoked in their appeals; they stop at no economic lie, no perversion of fact, no bait of promises. And the result? Why, that the miserable people are enchanted, and vote in droves for their own destruction. Bitter experience leads one to believe that were universal suffrage conceded in England, a worse political corruption and social degradation would ensue than anything the United States has witnessed. Adventurers, insincere persons who can make promises which shadow the honest man's program into insignificance, now as always will trade upon the oppressed and degraded democracy; and such are the only kind of rulers which our present system of government can bring into power. A political party may be honest while it is in the wilderness; but give it a success of the smallest, and it becomes the hunting-ground of the self-seeker. No; political power must be destroyed before society is free.

"What then can be done?" many will ask in despair. I know of nothing but this—that each one shall for himself or herself, follow the teaching of Jesus. Enough for our guidance is given in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5: 6, 7). But that means giving up the use of law and force of all kinds; it means being perfectly and simply honest and loving in spirit and in deed; it means giving up all, even life itself, for the sake of living the Christ-life; and it means trusting to the power of the Spirit of God working through our hearts and lives to accomplish that reform work, failure in which has so often well-nigh, or quite broken the hearts of the good people who have relied upon any other power. A gospel of despair, this, to some minds; but to those who have felt and know even a little of its power, it is the true promise of social salvation. But how difficult to expound in these days of confusion!

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

The leader is off for a six weeks' trip to Oregon. A. H. Kaylor is in charge, and every one who reads the "Links" is earnestly requested to storm the throne with prayer for victory at the noontide hour.

About two months ago we received a letter from a dear mother in a Kansas town whose darling boy had wandered from home. She was longing for his return, and for some tidings of him.

She wrote: "Oh, pray that he may return, but if this is denied me, pray that I may have strength to bear this, the greatest sorrow of my life."

. . . . . .

Last week we received another letter from this dear mother, saying:

"Was not our faith strong enough? Only a few days ago my boy was near here, but did not come home. Oh, pray again that he may return to me. My heart aches for him. I love him so; he was so sweet and good. I don't understand it at all."

. . . . . .

Ah, me, it's weary, this waiting and waiting, while the shine goes out of one's eye and hope out of one's heart. "Some time we'll understand."

. . . . . .

At the close of the service one day a young man came down the aisle weeping. He was fair to look upon, and well dressed, and said: "I am in deep trouble. I want to find Jesus. I am employed by the wholesale house of ———, and my wife is about to leave me. I can't bear it; we have a beautiful baby boy, and I cannot give them up."

A few questions developed the answer that his young wife was all right, and good and true, but weary of staying forever alone while he was at the club filled with wine. Two gracious women said they would visit the young wife and see what could be done.

There is not space to write all this sweet story, but it is enough to know that both have been gloriously converted, the Bible is read in their home, and the heart of the leader grows wondrously tender as now and then she sees them at Willard Hall, faces radiant with the new light in which these two walk.

One of the saddest sights I ever saw, was a well-dressed man of fifty kneeling at the altar, and crying, "Oh, I cannot give him up. Oh, God, help me!"

This father had not named the name of God in prayer for years, and there he was weeping and crying as strong men sometimes do.

Little by little he told the story. His beautiful son was a delegate to the Boston convention of Christian Endeavorers, and was drowned while yachting with some friends.

Oh, it was pitiful to see and hear him, but we stayed by until a chastened look came in his face, and the passionate cry sank into a subdued, "Thy will be done."

THE NATIONAL PURITY CONGRESS.

Dear Union Signal:—The National Purity Congress, under the auspices of the American Purity Alliance, to be held in Baltimore, October 14, 15 and 16, immediately preceding the annual Convention of the National W. C. T. U., promises to be an occasion of unusual interest. The acceptances for papers and addresses have been unexpectedly numerous, and the program will include many gifted, well known writers and speakers. The sessions will be held in the spacious Park Avenue Friends' Meeting House, kindly offered for the occasion. At the first session, Monday evening, October 14, following an opening address by the president of the American Purity Alliance, Mrs. Alice C. Robinson, president of the Baltimore W. C. T. U., will give an address of welcome, with a response by Rev. W. T. Sabine, D. D., of New York, a vice-president of the Alliance. Hon. C. C. Bonney, of Chicago, president of the World's Congress Auxiliary, is expected to follow with an address, Helen H. Gardenier, of Boston, with a paper on "Heredity and Ethics," and Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer, of Providence, R. I., with an address on "Democracy in Morals."

Among others who will give papers or addresses in subsequent sessions are Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry, of New York, on "Child Saving and Prostitution;" Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of Boston, on "Moral Equality Between the Sexes;" Anthony Comstock, of New York, on "Demoralizing Literature;" Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, of New Jersey, on "The Immorality of the Regulation System;" Dr. O. Edward Janney, of Baltimore, on "The Medical Profession and Morals;" Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National purity superintendent W. C. T. U., on "Moral Training of the Young;" Mrs. Dora Webb, Ohio W. C. T. U. superintendent, on "Organized Prostitution and How to Deal with it;" Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., on "Chastity and Health;" Mrs. J. H. Kellogg on "Purity and Parental Responsibility;" Rev. Joseph May, of Philadelphia, on the "Need of a High Standard of Morality in Public Life:" Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, on "Temperance and Purity, with Illustrations from Many Countries;" Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, Illinois W. C. T. U. purity superintendent, on the "Need of the Graded Home in Rescue Work;" Samuel C. Blackwell, Esq., of New York, on "The Municipality and Vice;" Mrs. Charlton Edholm, of Chicago, on "The Traffic in Girls;" Rev. Dr. S. H. Virgin, of New York, on "The Religious Aspect of the Purity Movement;" Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, on the "Relation of the Press and Stage to Purity;" Ida C. Clothier, of the Y's on "Purity for Purity:" Mrs. Mariana W. Chapman, president Brooklyn, N. Y., Woman's Club, on "Equal Suffrage as Related to the Purity Movement;" Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., of Plainfield, N. J., on "The Sacredness of Fatherhood;" B. O. Flower, of Boston, editor of the Arena, on "Some Causes of Present Day Immorality and Suggestions as to Practical Remedies;" Mary A. Livermore on the general subject of purity and others. Frances E. Willard promises an address for the Congress if at the time her health will permit.

October 13, preceding the Congress, will be observed as "purity Sunday," with many sermons on the subject of purity by pastors of Baltimore and sundry Congress and W. C. T. U. speakers.

Arrangements have been made with the Trunk Line Association, and the railways of the Central Traffic Association, east and west of Chicago, for a reduced rate of one fare and a third for the round trip, and that the time of these reduced fare tickets shall cover both the National Purity Congress and the National W. C. T. U. Convention. Representatives and delegates to each may, therefore, and in many cases doubtless will, attend both.

All Social Purity, White Cross, Moral Education and W. C. T. U. organizations, all churches and other religious bodies and philanthropic associations in sympathy with the objects of the Congress, are invited to send five or more representatives.

With the present widely prevalent propagandism of impurity, with the threatened revival of efforts in New York, Chicago and other of our large cities to legalize vice by "licensing," "localizing," or "districting" it, and with the continuance of the odious system of state regulation of vice in European countries, a National Purity Congress of the character of this to be held in Baltimore is most timely, and can but be largely helpful in the education of a public opinion in favor of the repression of vice, and of an equal standard of morals for both men and women.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN AT ATLANTA.

Dear Union Signal:—The Congress of Women, acting under the auspices of the Board of Women Managers of the Cotton States and International Exposition, proposes to hold a series of meetings representing the organized work of women throughout the country. Their Congresses, beginning early in September and closing with the closing day of the Fair, December 31, promise, if one is to judge from the announcements, a continued series of most interesting sessions, including organized work along all lines. Most of the organizations, like the Daughters of the American Revolution, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, King's Daughters, etc., will hold meetings of from one to two days in length.

The members of the National Council are societies and not individuals. On account of the great number of organizations which it includes, and, therefore, the great number of interests and phases of work to be presented in its conferences, the National Council of Women is the only organization which will occupy an entire week. They will be in charge of the officers of the Council. Its meetings will begin the seventh and continue during the twelfth of October. A portion of each afternoon will be occupied with presentations of the work of the organizations forming the Council, which may be classified under the heads of education, religion, philanthropy, industry, moral reform, government reform, etc.

Among the subjects to be discussed are: "The Significance of the Red Cross Movement," by Clara Barton; "The Education of the Future," by Prof. Helen L. Webster, of Wellesley College; "Woman's Problems in Practical Philanthropy," by Margaret Ray Wickins, superintendent of the Illinois Industrial School for Girls; "Woman's Position in the Industrial World," by Helen T. Goessman; "The Influence of Home and Foreign Mission Work upon Woman's Development," by Emeline Burlingame Cheney: "Education in Citizenship," by Kate Brownlee Sherwood: "Woman's Place in Government," by J. Ellen Foster.

One day will be given to special Council topics, and will be occupied by addresses from the members of the Cabinet of the Council, among which may be named, "The Function of the Cabinet," by May Wright Sewall, former president of the Council; "The Relation of Art and Literature to Woman's Progress," by Frances E. Bagley, of Detroit; "The Relation of the Home to Woman's Work in Organization," by Rachel Foster Avery, former secretary of the Council, and "The Influence of Woman on Religious Progress," by Mary Newbury Adams, of Iowa.

The subject of local Councils will be discussed by Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, and other prominent leaders of local Council work, including the presidents of local Councils in Montreal and in various cities of the United States. It is expected that the work of the National Council of Women of Canada, of which Lady Aberdeen is president, will be presented.

Judging from the Congress of Representative Women during the World's Fair in Chicago, and from the great interest in the meetings of the last Triennial held in Washington, these sessions in Atlanta will be largely attended, most intelligently appreciated, and will prove one of the most attractive features of the coming exposition.

OUTLOOK OF SABBATH REFORM.

Dear Union Signal:—The Sabbath question is still forcing itself on the attention of the country. Public Opinion not long since predicted that the coming elections in New York city would turn on whether Sunday should continue to be protected as a holy day. The issue has since been narrowed to Sunday local option for rumsellers, but the larger question is only delayed, and there and elsewhere will yet push itself politically, backed by a strong force bent on breaking down or neutralizing Sabbath law.

Unmixed with politics, the Christian vote could be surely counted on, but many are loth to mix religion and politics, being, perhaps, conscious that before the idol of party they are sacrificing their truest convictions. We believe God has a controversy with His people, requiring that religion should permeate everything and will yet bring them to the political test. He is sifting out his people, our God is marching on.

Public attention is more thoroughly aroused to the uses of the Sabbath than heretofore and the outlook is hopeful. Roosevelt has given the grandest object lesson of the year, showing the world that law can always be enforced when it is desired; and it proves popular even among the foreign element. The New York Post found by canvass that over two-thirds of the small German tradesmen preferred strict enforcement of the Sunday law. Sunday closing being in New York city an unqualified success, why not try it everywhere?

Barber shops have been closed in Brooklyn, N. Y., in Chicago, and generally in Illinois; Massachusetts has closed its Sunday theaters and has now stricter Sabbath law and enforcement than for many years, and many cities and towns elsewhere are enforcing Sunday laws more stringently. The National Base Ball League which has prohibited Sunday games, now plays them wherever public sentiment allows, and should be discountenanced therefor.

The League of American Wheelmen allows no bicycle races on Sabbath, and the Cycle Board of Trade in alliance with them grants no favors to Sunday racers. All honor to them. The bicycle has become a national favorite, and as it enables many to attend church and do mission work without depriving others or even a beast of rest, we hail its advent, urging that public sentiment make itself felt as much against its improper use as against any other Sunday excursions or races.

The use of street cars on Sabbath is being agitated. Toronto will not allow them, and our great Christian Endeavor army, represented by fifty thousand at Boston, voted not to use them or any other public conveyance on Sabbath. Will not our convention do the same?

Eight states have decided in their highest courts that the Sunday newspaper is illegal, not being necessary. Religious bodies with great unanimity are opposing them; now for stamina enough to put them down. The United States Supreme Court has, to its shame, violated it own traditions and for the first time held a session on Sabbath, thus falling in line with Congress. No legislature, we believe, has this year weakened our Sabbath laws, not even in Pennsylvania, where danger was greatest and the fight most determined.

A peril to Sabbath laws comes just now from the state courts of Tennessee and elsewhere, where rival denominational jealousies have been allowed to make martyrs of Seventh Day Adventists under cover of law. Such laws are defective inasmuch as they do not protect right of conscience. Their tendency is to bring all Sabbath law in contempt and encourage the workers for their overthrow. Our organization has always stood for an exemption clause protecting Seventh Day Christians.

Women desecrators, too, are steadily increasing; we believe it is largely the result of the Sunday newspaper. The family is being demoralized. We are glad to note in New York city a new organization, a Woman's Sabbath Alliance, that pledges against Sunday entertainments, amusements and travel, the Sunday newspaper and all Sunday purchases. We wish it the popularity it deserves.

Our greatest need is that the nation should realize how entirely its future is bound up with the Sabbath question; that God will not be mocked; that if as individuals or a people we reject His day—the sign of His covenant of mercy, we shall perish, while if we keep it we shall be blessed.

The greatest of opportunities and the most urgent of duties belong to our organization to help educate and mold public sentiment in this crucial time. Nearly every state has used less literature than usual this year. May I not entreat that this matter be carefully considered by our unions and extra effort be made these last months to scatter leaflets? JOSEPHINE C. BATEHAM.

WHITE RIBBON WORK IN INDIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Away out here so many hundreds of miles from our native land, we realize that the world gets smaller all the time. We feel our hearts drawn by closest ties of sympathy to those of our sisters in America, England and other lands in the noble work of trying to lift humanity nearer to God and to heaven. The bands of ribbon white have encircled us, and we are glad to belong to so noble an army.

That our W. C. T. U. is a needed organization is evidenced by this one fact among others: A few weeks ago government licenses for the sale of country liquors, which were put up at auction in Bombay, brought nearly four times as much as at the last time of sale. The total amount of bids mounted up from an aggregate of ten thousand to thirty-seven thousand rupees. This is a strong proof of the increase of the traffic, and it makes us realize that we need to be putting forth our best efforts to stem the growing tide of evil, and to earnestly unite our prayers with those of our sisters all over the world that this iniquitous traffic may be abolished.

We feel that our Poona union is only a baby yet, or we might say that it is a child which has, we hope, outgrown the diseases of childhood, and is now ready for healthy development. We first organized in 1887, but owing to many causes, the organization gradually fell to pieces. Perhaps chief among these reasons was the fact that we felt ourselves isolated. There was no Indian union at that time with a president for India to keep us all awake. Last year Mrs. Phillips sent us letters and papers suggesting reorganization, which was effected. We have now a membership of thirty-one, and our union is doing work on several different lines. We have house to house and hospital visitation, literary and press work, etc.

The most encouraging meetings we have held thus far have been among the educated classes of Hindus, chiefly students, in the native city. The numbers have increased on each occasion, until at last meeting we had over two hundred present. The hall of the native general library is very kindly placed at our disposal. Last month Dr. Bhandarkar, Vice Chancellor of the University of Bombay, and late Professor of the Deccan College, presided. He is a recognized leader in Hindu reform movements. On former occasions some of the young men have said, "We are Hindus, and by the tenets of our religion drinking is forbidden. Why hold these meetings among us?" Dr. Bhandarkar effectually answered that question, asserting that the evil is spreading among the highest castes of Hindus in spite of their creed. That at least two college professors have lately died from the effects of drink is a well-known fact. At the close of the meeting thirty-five signed the pledge, twenty-three had done so at a former meeting, and one of the students asked for a pledge book to circulate among his friends. Our White Ribbon, the official organ of our work in India, finds its way to the table of that library, monthly, and is doubtless read by many of the young men. We have had a meeting for Hindu women, and an effort is now being made to arrange a meeting for the high-caste women. A good meeting for servants was held some time ago and well attended.

We are fortunate in having among our members Pundita Ramabai, whom many of your readers know; also Mrs. Sorabji, the mother of Jeanne Sorabji Cavalier, who is becoming known in America. These ladies, with others no less devoted and talented, render valuable aid in public meetings.

Our beloved president, but lately written widow, is pushing the battle bravely, looking into the beyond for comfort in her sorrow, "giving others the sunshine," and inspiring us all. The second annual convention is soon to be held in Bangalore. (MRS.) R. L. ROBINSON.

Poona, India.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—Mrs. Mary E. Metzgar, Moline, Ill., sends us thefollo wing welcome information:

"In June 27 of THE UNION SIGNAL the question is asked: 'Is there a law in every state to the effect that children must not be brought up in houses of ill-fame?' I do not know the law in every state but wish it could be stated in the Local Union column that Illinois has a splendid law, as may be seen by referring to Hurd's revised statutes, chapter 38, section 57,—'whoever being the keeper of a house of prostitution or assignation house, building or premises in this state, where prostitution, fornication or concubinage is allowed or practised, shall suffer or permit any unmarried female under the age of eighteen to live, board, stop or room in any such house, building or premises, shall on conviction be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years.'"

Many a sinning one is "made" rather than "born" reprobate. Here is the testimony of a bartender, clipped from the New York Herald:

"Girls and boys and women form half our trade. We call it family trade. It pays our expenses. Our profit comes from the drinkers at the bar. But I tell you what—half the children who come here drink. That's how drunkards are made. Their mothers and fathers send them for beer. They see the old folks tipple and begin to taste the beer themselves. Few of the children who come in here for beer or ale carry a full pint home. Sometimes two or three come in together, and if you watch them you'll hear one begging the one who carries the pail for a sip. We must sell it, however, when their parents send for it. We are bound to do so. Business is business. We don't keep a temperance shop."

Are there Local Unions that have no Loyal Temperance Legion? This work is becoming so thoroughly organized now that there is little excuse for its non-adoption. If your plea is that you cannot find a leader, there is a normal course to train L. T. L. workers, and the union as a whole could resolve itself into a normal training class for a while. If you cannot do this, have an industrial school, and while mothers teach the clumsy little fingers to hem and seam and gather, priceless seeds of temperance truth may be dropped into sensitive little hearts, and tongues that learn too early to whisper "naughty" stories set to ringing out in gospel hymn and temperance song.

Then there is the Sunday-school. What a field for work is there. Does it observe the quarterly temperance lessons? Are superintendent and teacher "square" on temperance sentiment and Bible commands thereon? Are there good temperance stories in the library? Is temperance literature ever distributed? Is a temperance periodical taken for distribution?

Right in this line comes a question from a UNION SIGNAL reader that is suggestive: "Can you suggest a course of study for the older members of the L. T. L. that would fit them to carry on the work without an active superintendent, at most with slight supervision?"

I do not know what age "older" may mean. If the young people are old enough to govern their own work and gatherings, my suggestion would be that they resolve themselves into Y's and honoraries. However, if they are still "boys and girls" an older person should choose their reading matter, direct their discussions somewhat and keep up a general supervision.

Why not have a newspaper reading circle? Have the society subscribe for the local newspaper and one good temperance paper. Appoint a "reporter" for various classes of news and information, this reporter to give verbatim what can be remembered from the week's reading. For instance: Charles will read the foreign dispatches and report the most important ones; Margaret will watch for the temperance items; Hal, the younger one, will gather facts or stories about animals; Jessie will watch for questions of interest touching the government of the town where they live.

Read, in connection, some good history or biography. Keep alive the thought of citizenship and patriotism and never let the young people lose sight of the fact that they are responsible parts of the whole and its betterment lies in their hands.

---

In small towns such a circle of boys and girls could be a "Law and Order League" and constitute themselves a manly and womanly corps of young people bound to see that the home streets were kept from needless litter by thoughtless young vandals, the dogs and cats allowed to live to a peaceable old age, the snow cleared away before vacant lots, and countless services for public comfort and peace performed by these hands always eager for "something to do."

"Come, let us live with our children."

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Jesus answered and said unto them. Verily, I say unto you, If ye have faith and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea, it shall be done.—Matt. 21:21.

A letter of wonderful pathos has been received from Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, president of the W. C. T. U. of Wisconsin. She writes: "I am making a tour in the northern part of Wisconsin, and while at ———, a little country place in the woods, forty miles from a railroad station, I was entertained in the home of Mrs. ——, who gave me $8.65 to send to you for the Temple, which I enclose. Mrs. —— lives in a hut of only one room, with absolutely no comforts. I stayed three nights with her, and slept on a bed filled with hay, with only a sheet over it; it was much harder than a board would have been. I do not think Mrs. —— ever wore a dress that was better than a print, and I do not believe any money has ever been sent to the Temple from such a place as this before. If suffering and privation would add to its value, the debt on the Temple would be cancelled by this offering, for Mrs. —— suffers physically from the effects of her husband's drunken debauches. As she handed me the money, she said: 'Five dollars of this money I laid away some time ago for the Temple; $3.65 comes from the mite-box that my two little boys and I fill every year for that purpose. My husband, like all of the men here, drinks, and when he buys a jug of whisky to treat his friends I put away an equal amount of money as the whisky costs for temperance.'"

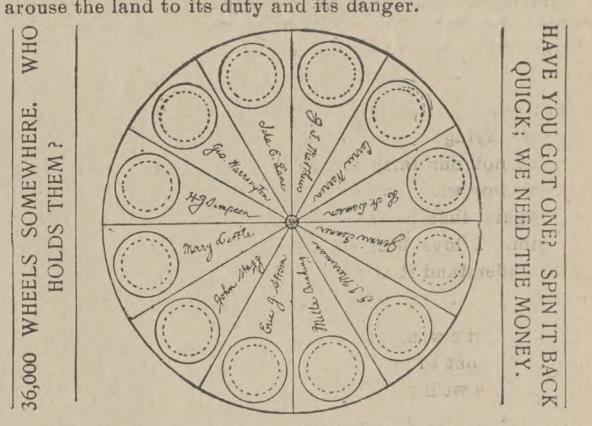
Mrs. Campbell goes on to tell about her long and terrible ride in a lumber wagon, over rough, corduroy roads, and other privations in her unselfish attempts to belt the dark places of our land with the white ribbon. She says, "I organized a little union at ——; Mrs. (the same who sent the money) has started and keeps running a Sunday-school, but they never have any Sunday preaching service. I never had any idea that people lived in such conditions. If the men would save the money they spend on whisky and beer they could make their families comfortable."

Oh, thou Juggernaut of strong drink! How many more millions of victims must thou claim before the Christian people of America will awake out of their sleep of indifference and hurl thee to destruction? The Temple clear of debt means money to send out an army of brave and eloquent women, such as Mrs. Campbell, to arouse the land to its duty and its danger.



At last the game of pixies and the educational game of checkers have been exhausted, and our young friends will have to choose from the following list the premiums they desire for filling Wheels: Medallion, Temple Souvenir Book, Household Repository, harmonica, singing top, paper doll, pocket knife, and for four wheels, the silver spoon.

One hundred dollars has been sent by Mrs. Julia Ayer Minier, to place the name of her honored mother, Mrs. Mary Dean Ayer, Harvard, Ill., on the state memorial tablet. Mrs. Ayer was an earnest white-ribboner and has earned a place in our Westminster. One hundred dollars comes from a dear white-ribboner who, for good reasons, does not desire her name published at present. She loves the Temple, and for years has been devising ways to secure the above sum for it. The path to success, as is usually the case, was through self-denial, and now her joy is unbounded. How God must love such sweet souls. If we all knew the secret of being dead unto self and alive unto Christ and His cause—what a happy world this would be.

One of our aged saints, Mrs. Nancy Hilliary, Burlington, Iowa, writes a letter full of good wishes and sympathy, in which she incloses a check for $50, which completes $100 she has sent. This will add another name to the Iowa tablet in Willard Hall. If all white-ribboners who have means, and could at least with a little self-denial afford to place their name in our beautiful hall, what a vast sum it would bring in; and where can they find a place where their name will be preserved and go down to posterity with more honor than in our Westminster, or their money do more good than in helping to pay for the House Beautiful?

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

TWO MONUMENTS.

BY NELLIE GOODE.

A great man died, and in the public square
They built for him a monument of stone,
Costly and grand, that strangers passing there
Might know what mighty deeds his hand had done.

Years passed; and summer's heat and winter's snow
Laid their destroying fingers on the spot,
Until at length alike by friend and foe
The hero and his deeds were all forgot.

A poor, wrecked soul was going to the grave,
Unloved, unmissed among a world of men;
Some humble brother reached a hand to save
And gave him back to hope and heaven again.

Years passed; his hand is foremost in the strife,
And heaven has gained a saint, the world a friend.
The fruits of that regenerated life
Spread through the earth, and none can tell the end.

God buildeth not his monuments of clay
To mark the glory of an earthly state,
But sometimes rears them in a human heart
To show how far the good outlasts the great.

A DREAM OF THE ANTI-BIG HAT BILL.

BY MRS. E. M. MC KIBBIN.

I dreamed a dream to-day. The sun shone warmly into my cozy den as I read my UNION SIGNAL; the air was balmy, and the light breeze brought thoughts of spring. Perhaps it was the weather made me feel drowsy and lulled me to sleep and dream.

I thought I saw an army, a vast multitude of mighty "male minds." They were marching through the country like legions of locusts in Hopperdom, and like them assimilated every green thing they came across. They carried immense and gorgeous banners, inscribed with what I supposed was their battle-cry, and their drum heads even were adorned with the same motto. It was: "The Big Hats Must Go! Prohibition Shall Prohibit!"

They were creating and arousing public sentiment by the most approved methods, and as they marched they scattered literature, and circulated petitions, and made speeches, and ever and anon a great shout went up, which must have struck terror to the hearts of their foes, and this is what they shouted in their wrath: "Down with the big hats! they interfere with our rights! They shall be banished! Down with them! We will have our rights! Prohibition SHALL prohibit!" And the fire of their indignation was like unto that of a locomotive, for it puff, puff, puffed, and chew, chew, chewed, and the smoke thereof rose in a whelming cloud that was black, and very rank, and exceedingly nauseous. And they left in their wake pools and puddles and streams like small rivers of black disgusting liquid, which smelt to heaven, and which no beast nor bird nor vermin of the earth would touch.

Once when they halted for a speech and a fresh supply of fuel I made bold to ask one of the leaders for what this vast and valiant army was fighting, and he told me it wasn't fighting, it hadn't fought and wasn't going to fight —it was just marching.

Then I asked the object of such a prodigious undertaking and he said: "It's the women's hats. They will wear big, broad brimmed hats and they trim them with long feathers and other fixings that stand straight up in the air, and we men can't see past them nor over them, and so we are going to prohibit by law such foolish extravagance. We have a bill here prepared that we are now carrying to the legislative halls, and this great army is to protect it and see it through in safety. We will have our rights."

Then I saw a man mounted upon a tobacco pail and the army hushed its howling and hearkened. He was the father of the bill—he who had bent the forces of his ponderous male intellect upon the female hat of like proportions and had evolved that great and only bill. This is what he said: "Comrades, we are bound upon a great, a mighty, a momentous mission. Soon, ah, soon, our theater parties shall be dreams of bliss. No more shall our anathemas be hurled broadside against the folly and weakness of female pride [illegible] antagonism. The feeble female mind is afraid of the majesty of the law, and when we can make our demands from behind its noble barricade we shall be safe and the theater shall be saved. It is a glorious thing to put down oppression and equally as stupendous to legislate against female extravagance. Not only is this action for our own good but for the welfare of all humanity—womanity in particular. When we seek relaxation from care and labor, when we would rest our hard worked intellects at some good entertainment, we are only permitted to contemplate a sea of broad-brimmed, high trimmed hats, and the platform and all thereon are hidden from view.

"Comrades, this is an immense subject. It is also high —but it will not be long. We will banish the big hat. Posterity shall contemplate this enterprise with pride and envy, and as they enjoy the benefits derived therefrom will raise a lofty monument to our memory. Down with the big hat! Prohibition shall prohibit! We will have our rights!" And then they threw up their hats, and wildly waved their arms and canes aloft, and rent the atmosphere with yells. Then they marched on again, and the air was thick with smoke—but not of battle.

When the malodorous fog had cleared away, and the fresh air had restored my faculties, I bethought me of the $360,000,000 that this vast army of mighty male minds had squandered for tobacco in a year. I seemed to see fair faces paled by its nauseous fumes, and dainty garments disgustingly defiled, and costly carpets reeking with polluting filth upon the floors of our nation's capitol. And I saw the multitude of tobacco blasted children of tobacco pickled parents and I—groaned.

Then I saw a procession of mighty males who are pouring down their throats $1,200,000,000 worth of liquid fire every year, and I saw that the wrath of the fiends (who are manufactured in the nation's fiend factory to swell its revenue) is visited upon defenseless womanhood and childhood. And when I looked for the women's defenses—lo, they were not. Their hands were tied—but not their tongues—and the mighty males held before their eyes their weapon of defense, the ballot-box, and laughed them to scorn.

Then I seemed to see the great army of noble women who have for years been fighting these twin arch-enemies of our nation's prosperity and peace. Powerless to defend or protect themselves, they have been agitating and educating and legislating(?) (save the mark), and still the smoke of their torment ascends in a black and sickening volume, and the flood of liquid fire, of the concentrated extract of hell, rages round their homes, and threatens to engulf their loved ones in its diabolical torrent.

Then I saw again the banners of the Anti-Big Hat army as it neared its destination, and heard its wild cheers and howls of patriotism, and again I groaned.

Later on in my dream I looked for it as it left the legislative halls. I expected to see it still more jubilant than before, but when next I saw the multitude it looked small, very small. And they talked about the tariff and protection (!) and free silver, for their gigantic intellects were solving problems infinitely above and beyond the Big Hat. And I said to myself, "How great is the mighty male mind! Its ways are vastly intricate, and its workings are past finding out."

Then I opened my eyes, and behold it was not all a dream.

THE BOYS OF 2000.

Mr. Wendel, in Scribner's some time ago, described very admirably the clubs formed in New York city for boys. These clubs are intended to draw the lads who have been lost in the gutters and saloons and pool rooms and rotten slums to places of a higher order, where they will find themselves fascinated by gymnasia, reading rooms and sport of an innocent sort. Now, if our churches have made a mistake in anything, it has been in neglecting the boy nature. They have taken too exclusively to teaching and preaching. This error they are correcting. "The first boys' club was started on the broad principle which should underlie them all, of hearty welcome to any boy, whatever his condition or belief, who prefers an evening of innocent enjoyment in a place where he must show respect and courtesy to all about him, to the thoughtlessness and hidden dangers of an evening in the street." It makes no difference what a boy's religion is, or if he has none. That is a question which should never come up in a club drawn from all classes, in a crowded district, where all beliefs and no belief are all the same. In these clubs classes have been formed in singing, writing, bookkeeping and modeling. This method of aiding boys to decent amusements and wholesome habits of spending time does not materially differ from what has been attempted in other cities under many different names. In many cities the very best work done by the Young Men's Christian Associations is that which helps boys to manly conceptions of life, and gives them clean ways of venting their energy. But we must never forget that the real mission of these institutions ought to be for the poorer classes. There is always a temptation to turn our social organizations into resorts for the well-to-do, who instead should learn how to live a better sort of home life. Mr. Flower, in the Arena, some time since wrote a powerful charge to the people concerning what he calls society's exiles—the uninvited poor. He finds the fundamental cause of the larger share of wretchedness in our larger cities to be the filthy dens, full of vermin and disease, which are allowed to stand as the only shelter for the children of the slums; and that so long as these remain, moral and physical contagion will follow, with crime and degeneration. No permanent reform can be brought about until the dwellings of the people are radically improved. He quotes, as illustrations of what can be done, the improved dwellings inaugurated in Liverpool and the Peabody dwellings in London. Mr. Flower urges that the wealthy turn their attention in this direction, and notes that Mr. Peabody's benefaction has already turned twenty thousand people from the slums.

No one can have studied the fresh air missions without a deep sympathy with the effort to relieve the prisoned children from at least one month of the city's misery. But can he have failed to be saddened by the returning trains? Why must all these boys and girls be sent back from fresh fields, wholesome food, the tingle of honest sport, to wallow in kennels and drop, one after another, into the maelstrom of vice? One is tempted to fall in with paternalism and wish that we had some power to clean every child out of the gutters and cellars and slums and haunts by force and bring them up as public charges. But not yet. Most of our public institutions for children are so far such terrible failures that we shall as well leave the rest of the boys to fate. An aged and well informed judge recently spoke of the reform school as "that road to hell." We are just beginning to see that our whole system of managing the depraved is false and socially disastrous; and that, furthermore, it is sure to send the boy down hill. Paternalism has not proved a success so far that we can trust the state to undertake any wider measure of caring for those who by heredity or circumstances are started falsely in life. You cannot read without terror the words of Judge Andrews, in the Forum, where he speaks of the houses of correction as "that portal to an inferno more awful than a poet's dream. One who once passes this gateway to a hell of crime may well read above it, 'All hope abandon!'" Of the truant school he speaks as "that new kindergarten of our school of crime." Of the reform school he says, "It is the primary school of crime, where he will freely associate with all the worst of boys between eight and fifteen." Clearly any great amount of nationalizing of our boys is unsafe and unwise. We may trust that the boy of 2000 who has the misfortune of prenatal damnation, and comes into this world labeled for farther plunges into inferno, will find a total revolution of our criminal system. Either that must come about or the criminals will become so numerous that they will send the rest of us to some island and sail the ship of state with a black flag.—The New Unity.

REMEDY FOR ANXIETY.

There is only one practical remedy for the deadly sin of anxiety, and that is to take short views. Faith is content to live "from hand to mouth," enjoying each blessing from God as it comes. This perverse spirit of worry runs off and gathers some anticipated troubles, and throws them into the cup of mercies and turns them to vinegar. A bereaved parent sits down by the new-made grave of a beloved child, and sorrowfully says to herself: "Well, I have only one more left, and one of these days he may go off to live in a home of his own, or he may be taken away, and if he dies my house will be desolate and my heart utterly broken." Now, who gave that weeping mother permission to use the word "if"? Is not her trial sore enough now without overloading it with an imaginary trial? And if her strength breaks down, it will be simply because she is not satisfied with letting God afflict her; she tortures herself with imagined afflictions of her own. If she could but take a short view, she would see a living child yet spared to her, to be loved and enjoyed and lived for. Then, instead of having two sorrows, she would have one great possession to set over against a great loss; her duty to the living would be not only a relief to her anguish, but the best tribute she could pay to the departed. —Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

"I WAS talking with Dr. Holmes one day," says a writer in The Interior, "when the conversation turned upon his classmates who were living. 'Now, there's Smith,' he said; 'his name will be honored by every school-child in the land when I have been forgotten a hundred years. He wrote 'My Country, 'tis of Thee.' If he had said 'Our Country,' the hymn would not have been immortal, but that 'My' was a master stroke. Every one who sings the hymn at once feels a personal ownership in his native land. The hymn will last as long as the country."

TWO LITTLE MAIDS.

BY MRS. C. D. H. THOMPSON.

Two little maids I met one day—
The one in carriage grand
On cushioned seat sat prim and sweet
With mamma close at hand.

In dainty lace and dainty fur
The little miss was clad.
Her eyes were blue, and smiled at you
In a way to make you glad.

The lashes dark, the rosy cheeks
Kissed soft, and golden brown
Was hair so fair that waved in air
As carriage rolled toward town.

The other maid in alley dark
Trudged cold, and lone and sad,
And her eyes, too, were heaven's blue
But no light made them glad.

Her little limbs and feet were bare
And winter's breeze so chill,
About her face of native grace
Made locks to play at will.

Her mamma's heart was broke one day—
Not even baby love
Could stay the hand from "other land"
That beckoned her above.

Dear little maids I met that day!
Canst tell why heart of one
Was light and gay and bright as day
And other sad and lone?

A shadow dark stood in my path
And shut away the sun—
It told me true as I tell you
A drunkard's child was one.

HER BROTHER'S KEEPER.

BY MRS. MATTIE MITCHELL.

(Concluded.)

The next morning found the family preparing for the hop fields at an early hour. Great was their astonishment when Mabel declared her intention of abandoning the project and remaining at home.

"What is it, little girl? You are so sober-faced I am afraid you are not having a pleasant visit."

"Oh, uncle, the visit is all right, and I did think it would be splendid to earn some money, only it is the wrong way to get it. I cannot tell you all, Uncle Ben," seeing his look of surprise, "but I am sure it wouldn't be right for me to pick hops."

She said it gravely with an earnestness no one could question, but in spite of himself Uncle Ben smiled while the girls laughed outright.

The little face flushed, the eyes were so full of tears she dared not look up. Kind Aunt Margaret came to the rescue when Eva would have scolded, saying, "Let the child alone if she is happier not to go. To-morrow she may think differently."

That night in the seclusion of their own room the sisters had a long talk. Eva insisted on knowing the full reason for her action. Her stern words frightened Mabel, but she bravely stood her ground.

"I cannot tell you because I gave my promise. Oh, Eva," imploringly, "would you have me break it?"

"Whom did you promise?" No reply.

"You are a stubborn little prig," returned her sister angrily. "When we reach home I shall inform mamma of your actions. I am fairly ashamed that you should pose as an example of propriety for Uncle Ben and Aunt Margaret."

"Eva, are you not a Y?"

"Well, what if I am?"

"Your pledge requires you not to drink or do anything that helps others to drink."

"My pledge requires only 'proper means' to discourage drunkenness. I should like to know what you are talking about, Mabel Lawrence; as if I were getting drunk myself, or getting some one else drunk."

"But, Eva"—and she paused, hardly knowing how best to speak to this older sister, who was plainly very much annoyed, and even angry.

"Well, go on."

"You know, Eva, all I meant about the pledge, only I am afraid you will be sorry some day."

"I am not sorry yet. I earned nearly two dollars to-day. You will be the sorry one when Christmas comes. It is no more harm to pick hops than—apples."

"It would be wrong to pick apples for cider making."

"Oh, well, I am not a saint or reformer; that makes a difference."

Nevertheless Mabel's allusion to the pledge troubled her. But she could not retract now, and, after all, it was no use to worry. She was not to blame if hops were manufactured into beer.

"Shall we tell Mabel of the girls who were intoxicated at the saloon Sunday night?" said May, as they were coming home from the field near the close of the season.

"Not for anything; she is almost a martyr now with her extreme ideas."

"It must be very uncomfortable to be so good. The child looks fairly ill."

The truth was Mabel was longing to get away from it all. It seemed hard to stay alone through the day; bear the petty criticisms which came from really kind but thoughtless young hearts; to feel she was so unjustly misunderstood by every one, and then lose the coveted Christmas treasure besides, but in her heart of hearts there remained the happy knowledge that she was "keeping Harry." Only a few days more and she would see him; perhaps, if brave enough, talk with him about it.

The opportunity soon came. On reaching the city home Eva could hardly wait to return her parents' greeting before disclosing the wonderful story of earning twenty dollars.

Mr. Lawrence, well pleased with his daughter's suddenly developed energy, readily acquiesced in her plan for drawing lessons, and appeared surprised that Mabel had not taken advantage of the same thing.

After Eva and her mother were too much engrossed to notice, she stole into her father's lap: "Are you real sorry, papa—I mean disappointed in me? If it had not been for the dreadful beer that is made of the hops I could have earned ten dollars, and I wanted it awfully. It was pretty hard, papa, but it will be worse than ever if you are disappointed."

Mr. Lawrence hugged her close in silence, then taking her face in his hands, he kissed it many times before answering, "Little woman, papa is proud of you."

Harry, apparently reading the latest Harper's, both saw and heard.

The brother and sister were walking home from church a few Sabbaths later, and their conversation became quite confidential.

"Say, Mabel, I've sent in my name to the new club on James street."

"Does papa know?"

"Oh, he will approve," said Harry, carelessly. "It is so exclusive."

"Harry," and the child's face was very pale, "do they have liquor there?"

"I thought you were not to say anything of that affair of mine," he began, sternly.

"I have not—but listen, Harry," laying one hand on his arm, "I am your keeper."

"What!" drawing himself away.

"Don't you know what I mean," and she explained her teacher's talk in her simple way so plainly Harry could not fail to understand. "And now that you know all about it," she continued, "I believe it will help you."

"It ought to," said the boy slowly. Then as if a sudden thought had entered his mind, for Harry's thoughts were coming very fast just now, he asked, "Is this why you threw away the chance to earn that ten dollars at Millersville?"

"Yes. I was afraid you might be tempted by my hops," and she glanced up into his face with a look of childish faith Harry never forgot and added softly, "How could God help me to keep you if I didn't let Him keep me?"

"Sure enough," answered Harry lightly, with an assumption of indifference that conveyed naught of the struggling forces at work in his soul.

The next day an interview with the secretary of the club resulted in the withdrawal of his name.

Afterwards he came home and found his sisters on the porch. Eva at her drawing, Mabel absorbed in watching her. He took something from his purse and tossed it into the little girl's lap, saying, "There is your hop money."

She picked it up exclaiming joyously, "Oh, Harry, Harry, is it yours, will you wear it?"

"With your permission, little keeper," and Eva looked up just in time to see the happy child fasten a knot of white ribbon to her brother's coat.

"I WOULD send you a kiss, papa," wrote little Lucy, who was away on a visit, "but I have been eating onions."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have just read with a great deal of pleasure about a New York gentleman's plan this summer for a number of poor children from the crowded districts of that great city. This good, kind man rented a large farm of nearly fifty acres on top of a high hill near Freeville, N. Y. Then he invited one hundred and twenty boys and thirty girls, between twelve and fifteen years of age, choosing the wildest and roughest that he could find, to go to this farm for the summer. Now this is something which is often done, you will say, and think there is nothing very remarkable about it, perhaps. The notable part is this. Having gotten his company all safely landed at the farm, Mr. George (for that is his name) divided them into six classes and proceeded to organize a "general government" in the camp by the children and for the children. Wasn't that a splendid idea? He himself was president, of course, and the members of the cabinet were his assistants. They had a secretary of the treasury, a secretary of police and correction, a commissary general and a postmaster general. The first thing the children did was to hold a "congressional election" and organize a senate and house of representatives. Each one of the six classes had a member in the senate and for every twelve members of a class there was a member in the house.

The children had their own money, of variously colored paper and were paid regular wages in this money, ninety cents a day for the best labor, seventy cents for medium, and fifty cents for unskilled work. It cost forty-three cents a day to live, so in this way they were given an idea of the use of money and how to earn it.

Don't you think that when these little "toughs" returned to the city that they realized more clearly just what the community was to them and they to it? Having been given police power themselves, they were more ready to serve the interests of law and order in the great city and to become good, law-abiding citizens. I think Mr. George's idea a capital one and am glad to learn that it will probably become a regular institution. There certainly would be fewer children in houses of correction if there were more interested people to teach them "self-government."

Next week we shall have interesting letters in our Corner from two distant cousins in China and Straits Settlements, which came in my absence. They are Americans living in these far-away lands who want to become Cozy Cornerers, and whom we warmly greet.

Now let me thank the thoughtful Cornerers who have written me welcome home letters. There isn't room in Cozy Corner to print all, but every loving word is impressed on the heart of

Your affectionate

Aunt Jane

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Did you notice in last week's issue, under date of September 12, Lady Henry Somerset's admirable review of Miss Willard's new book, "Do Everything"? If not, you will be well repaid by hunting up the paper and reading with care each line.

Please note these words: "This manual will be invaluable in all kinds of reform work, but especially to the thousands, the world over, who are banded together against all poisons that steal away the brain, and to every individual who wishes to understand the underlying principles that govern the greatest organized force of women in our day. After relating the early history of the Crusade movement in America, and its organized outcome, and detailing the gravité of the society, Miss Willard describes how the concept of the World's work came to her."

As I read the résumé of Lady Henry Somerset, memory carried me back to the vision of loveliness that ideal day at Reigate, when hundreds of foreign delegates walked upon the velvet-like lawn, and reverently looked upon the immense tree girdled with its ribbon of white, beneath which it was said this noblest of British women consecrated herself to God, and to the reform of downtrodden humanity. I was reminded, too, of the letter which before we crossed the sea came to my desk bearing this message from Miss Anna Gordon: "I wonder if you know that it was a copy of 'Nineteen Beautiful Years' that made Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard acquainted with each other. The original book which Lady Henry read in 1887, has written in it the following:

"'One afternoon on a gloomy Sunday in the winter of 1887, I went down, as was my Sunday custom, to have tea with my housekeeper, Mrs. Ellis, who was also associated with me in work in the village and neighboring town. I saw this book in which I am now writing as it lay on her table, and asked her where she had got it. She answered that she saw it advertised in the Christian, and sent for it, being attracted by the title. I took the book and fell to reading, nor did I lay it down until I had read every word. My tea grew cold, and Mrs. Ellis would fain have spoken to me, but did not like to break in upon my reading. When I had finished, I said, "I should like to know Frances Willard." From this time on I purposed to take the first opportunity of knowing one who was the leader of the white-ribbon hosts in the United States, and on October 28, 1891, I met her in her peaceful Rest Cottage home in Evanston, Ill., to which I was welcomed by Madam Willard and her gifted daughter. From that time on, we have been sisters, friends and comrades, and shall be not only here but in the beautiful Beyond.'"

LOVE AND LAW.

We give space to the article on page 3, "What Good can be Done Through Politics?" not because we agree with the writer in his conclusions, but because it suggests a line of thought which reformers would do well to consider, and because the opinion of a thinker like Mr. Kenworthy (who is one of the noblest and most upright workers for humanity that England contains) is worthy the attention of everyone who lives and would help his fellowman.

The doctrine he advocates is, we think, based upon an erroneous conception of the relation between law and love. His argument, as we understand it, is this: We should govern by love; law is opposed to love; therefore law should have no part in government. The first premise we accept unqualifiedly, as will every true Christian; the second we reject as palpably unsound, as must all who believe that the God who "so loved" the world is also its law-giver.

Our friend's theory points inferentially to a fundamental distinction between law and love; we believe they are inseparable. He declares that obedience to the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount, "means giving up the use of law and force of all kinds"; we maintain that law—restrictive law—is a necessary part of a government of love. We do not advocate force of arms, nor, indeed, brute force in any form; but, on the other hand, we do not believe that all kinds of force are necessarily antagonistic to gospel teachings. On the contrary, we believe that in exercising the proper kind of force men may be actuated by the same spirit of love which inspired the Sermon on the Mount.

"The good," says Mr. Kenworthy, "do not want to govern men, but to serve them." But may it not be that the best way to serve men is by governing them? We can think of no better way of serving the people of England or America, no quicker way of changing the "unwholesome conditions of life" which our friend says make people "ready victims to the drink mania," than by letting the good govern! The trouble is that the good allow legislative power to be seized by the "unscrupulous and selfish." Why is the law "on the side of the brewer, the distiller and saloon-keeper"? Largely because the good refuse to serve men by governing, because they are either apathetic or believe, like our friend, in a non-resistance policy.

"As long as we try to bring about God's righteousness by legal force we shall fail." Mr. Kenworthy, like a great many other people, either misunderstands or loses sight of the true functions of law. How often we hear it said, "You can't legislate morality into people." Laws are not made primarily for the purpose of making men moral or righteous, but for the protection of society. This point is clearly brought out by Mrs. Britten in her articles on "The Saloon and the Sabbath," the second of which is published in this issue.

The Sunday closing law is not enacted as a "rod or lash" for the saloon-keeper, nor yet to make his customers "sober or just or good." It is simply a protective measure. And so of a Factory Act or Local Veto bill. Their intention is to protect the oppressed from the oppressor, to secure to all their inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. In the making of civil laws the restrictive idea is secondary—merely incidental—to the main idea of protection.

We believe there is a better way to govern even the beast than by the rod and the lash, but no one will say that in the taming and the training of an animal restraint is not necessary. The employer who is so inhuman, so brutish in his instincts, as to sacrifice the happiness and even the lives of his employés to his own insatiable greed must be restrained. The man who preys upon his fellows by ensnaring them in the meshes of the drink demon and who for personal gain would drain the life-blood of a nation, must be denied the opportunity to thus wreck the happiness of homes and impede the prosperity of the people. The power to destroy must be taken away, not as a punishment to the destroyer, but as a protection to society.

"The only way to reform men is by education and kindness." Love and law is a medium for both. Love to our neighbor demands both the training and the restraining influences of law, and when we say "our neighbor" we mean the "selfish and unscrupulous" as well as the "good." To put it out of the power of one man to injure another is as much an act of kindness to the former as to the latter. The more love men have one toward another the more protective laws there will be, and the fact that there is a temperance party in the United States to-day does not indicate so much that one was not needed half a century ago (as Mr. Kenworthy infers) as that the Christ spirit, waxing stronger and stronger, impels men and women to will and to do whatever will bring nearer that time we know is coming when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, when no "thou shalt not" will be needed, for the law—man's duty towards God and his neighbor—will be written in every heart.

Until that time comes we think that much good may be done through politics—using the term in its best sense as meaning the science of government. If Mr. Kenworthy had said that political parties instead of "political power" must be destroyed before society can be free, we should feel inclined to agree with him, for we are quite willing to admit that political parties are not indispensable to a government of love. Indeed, in our ideal republic political parties have no place, but political power—governing power—belongs to all and is exercised by Christian manhood and womanhood as a sacred duty.

ROSTER OF WORLD'S SUPERINTENDENTS.

The World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London did several valuable things that do not appear on the surface, for instance: The department of the Y society was changed to a Branch, with Mrs. Barnes as secretary, to see that it becomes a right hand of the movement, with equal power and representation, and we hope it may expand and grow to be the recruiting office of the movement.

All of the former superintendents were retained, with one or two exceptions, Mrs. Charlton Edholm being changed from press superintendent to superintendent of the Florence Crittenton Homes—one of which, by the way, has been founded in London through the efforts of Mrs. Edholm, "Mother" Prindle and Mrs. Bailharhe, who leads this branch in the B. W. T. A. Mrs. Pearsall Smith was put at the head of the school of methods, with Miss Helen Hood as secretary, and will, we know, stir up that subject in all the countries where the society is founded.

Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing was placed at the head of the department of evangelistic institutes and training, Miss Greenwood, as a matter of course, being retained at the head of the evangelistic department. Mrs. Willing's abilities, experience and devotion will tell strongly for the work in the specific line to which she is now devoted.

Mrs. H. J. Osborn, whose White-Ribbon Lecture Bureau has been so great a success in England, was promoted to the head of the Woman's Lecture Bureau. One of the specialties that this bright woman has undertaken in this connection is to arrange lantern lectures, with slides for women who will go out to the local branches, and by means of these illustrated talks will convey a vast deal of information about our work and workers. Scores of excellent young women who would not, perhaps, be successful on the platform as orators, can nevertheless do admirable work by means of these lectures, and we hope they will communicate with Mrs. H. J. Osborn, Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London, E. C., secure her catalogue, and take her advice about entering on this branch of work.

Miss May Yates is one of the leading specialists in food reform. She made a strong impression at the World's Fair, and has been placed at the head of a department for the instruction of women concerning the relation of food to the appetite of stimulants. The department is founded on the basis of a resolution, which, at Miss Willard's request, was drafted by Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, the greatest expert in the world in the department of food reform. The resolution is as follows:

"As it is now recognized that inebriety is continually the result of diseased condition produced, in a large measure, by injudicious and insufficient diet, it is

"Resolved, that a World's food reform department be established to deal with all questions relating to food, and to diffuse a scientific knowledge of the nature of food."

Those wishing to confer with Miss Yates will please address her at 182 Regent s Park Road, London, N. W.

Mme. Demorest was most appropriately put at the head of the medal contest work founded by her lamented husband, and which, as we understand, is to be carried on by the Demorest family.

Miss De Broen, of Paris, was made superintendent of railroad work in France.

Mrs. Sumerfield Baldwin, of Baltimore, was made superintendent of the department of gifts, and will endeavor to induce those who are favored with "this world's goods" to contribute to the treasury of the World's W. C. T. U., especially to the fund for round-the-world missionaries. Mrs. Baldwin's quiet, persistent work is well known in America. She was for many years president of the W. C. T. U. of Maryland, and from the first one of the most trusted pioneers of the white-ribbon movement.

Miss Marshall Saunders, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, was placed at the head of the department of humane education. Miss Saunders has written two successful books already translated into several languages, which are devoted to the emancipation of animals from the cruelties of man. Her books are entitled, "The Rights of Animals" and "Black Joe." Miss Saunders is a true white-ribboner.

Mrs. Bamford Slack was put in charge of the department of politics and has the same branch of work in the B. W. T. A. Mrs. Slack is the wife of a leading young lawyer in London, and the whole family are gifted with remarkable alertness of mind and the saving grace and devotion to the cause of temperance and that of woman's franchise.

It will be seen that the department of superintendents has been greatly strengthened, although it already counted among its leading members Mrs. Josephine Butler, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Bowden, Miss Ackermann, Miss Agnes Weston, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. J. K. Barney and Mrs. Eva McLaren. With such skilled and devoted experts at the head of the working force in the systematized departments of the World's White Ribbon Association, there can be no doubt as to its steady onward march in the never ending campaign of which the unsealed orders are: Agitate, Educate, Organize. A complete list of the Worlds' officers was given on page 10 of last issue.

THE IDEAL WOMANHOOD.

Are we the "new woman" or are we the "old woman"? that is the question. It does not trouble us much, for in our opinion there is no "new woman." That object exciting such an epidemic of male hysteria, so much concern and consternation, counsel and comment is nothing in the world but the same old woman keeping up with the procession.

It sometimes almost seems that it would be better advised in some of our admonitory philosophers and critics to spare us their attentions and leave us to be ourselves. Some of them labor, apparently, under the painful apprehension that our Creator did not quite understand His business, or at least did not finish His work so that there is danger of our deteriorating into something particularly undesirable—losing our domestic instincts—leaving our children to perish—becoming an indescribable, unclassifiable something "awful," unless they take us in hand. A recent writer of this class says he knows that some of us women "will resent the matrimonial and maternal interpretation" he puts on feminine destiny.

There is no apparent ground for this apprehension; the matrimonial and maternal woman is not solitary in her destiny; she is necessarily accompanied by a matrimonial and paternal partner; it isn't clear how she can be called upon to be any more matrimonial than he, and it is evident to us that upon him also are imposed responsibilities and a "sphere," although this author appears to be formulating some kind of a scheme to eliminate him altogether.

It strikes one as being somewhat singular when religious teachers make latter day Scripture—worthy of a place in that chapter of Proverbs which states that "cleanliness is next to godliness," and says the wind is tempered to the shorn lamb—of an utterance of Napoleon Bonaparte. A nice moral character truly, to establish an axiom to be adopted by the clergy! One of the very least worthy and worst qualified to speak authoritatively concerning women. It may be there was lack in France of good mothers, but we can but believe there was equally imperious need of good fathers. It is the very exceptional case in which he "counts for nothing" in Scripture or out. There is a widespread and well founded idea that many unfortunate women would have better success with their families had they the support, instead of the gainsaying influence and example of an erring partner. It is a shame to encourage no-account fathers in their no-accountness instead of preaching a higher ideal of character and responsibility, calling upon them to do their part in training their offspring for good citizenship.

Woman is not more than human. She will not maintain that ideal pose demanded of her when associated with a low plane of manhood unless, indeed, the conditions are so bad that woman nature recoils, and she lives her spiritual life apart. If she tries to maintain a comradeship with her husband, she will approach, in a degree, his level. Good fathers are an astonishing help to good mothers, and the human race will never be much benefited by the elevation of one without the other.

It is a cherished theory of many minds that the highest ideal of woman's sphere was touched as long ago as in our grandmother's days, and has not since been approached. Their great families, their spinning and weaving, their baking and brewing are proverbial. That race is not yet extinct; there are yet women whose excess of unworthy ambition is preparing a legacy of weak backs and impaired constitutions for future generations to rail at because their unfortunate possessors cannot emulate the noble feats of their great-grandmothers.

We are sometimes a guest in a family of ample means and sufficient liberality on the husband's part to lighten the domestic labors, but the housewife is "ambitious." All the energies of a superb physique, as well as the mental energies, go into an appalling amount of housework. If her table doesn't groan, it ought to. It has delicious fare, but for each breakfast, dinner and supper is set forth sufficient variety for three separate repasts, and this is the regular thing. There is a houseful of little children, but she has no time to study anything but their physical needs; they are as fat as little pigs, but are intellectually starved; that woman's praise is in the mouths of most of her neighbors, but it is difficult to have patience with her; she is a foolish virgin, and there will be a physical breakdown some time.

The highest ideal of womanhood is not buried in the past; prophetic vision has long beheld her in the woman already arriving, "new" only in the fuller development—physical, mental, spiritual—consequent upon the better improvement of her opportunities.

We are catching the idea of better things, but it takes time to serve out the penalty for the sins of the foremothers, be they foolish dressing, overwork, or what not. Good sense and good hygiene will yet make the delightful elasticity of perfect health the rule, while the object lesson of past sad experience will teach the fair young goddess of the future not to peril the precious gift.

Besides this, we see in her a broadened capacity and desire for mental culture, a truer appreciation of real values, a quickened sense of the duty she owes to God and home and native land.

Where shall we look for the fitting mate for so noble a creation? Why, certainly, to the new ideal of the typical young American, strong of limb, pure of heart, high of purpose, of honesty, incorruptible, purged of all the evil old traditions—humanity's hope—coming, bringing a clear new atmosphere fit for the perfecting of the flower of all the centuries.

OF INTEREST TO OUR READERS.

Dear Friends:—

It is known to many about Headquarters that Miss Margaret A. Sudduth, managing editor of The Union Signal, who for so many years has faithfully performed the arduous duties of her position, has been granted a leave of absence of one year, beginning October 1. Every white ribbon reader of The Union Signal will be anxious to know who will take her place. It is not an easy matter to select a woman with all the requirements necessary for such a responsible work, but all will feel at rest when they learn that the business committee of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association have found just such a woman and fortunately have secured her.

Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, president of Minnesota W. C. T. U., has accepted the position for the coming year. Mrs. Fry is a woman long known as an educator in the central west. She filled the chair of Belles Lettres in the Illinois Wesleyan University for fifteen years and has been connected recently with the high schools of St. Paul and the state university of Minnesota, making for herself an enviable record as a teacher. She was chosen as one of the judges in the Columbian Exposition and did the work committed to her with such just and intelligent discrimination and showed herself so energetic and wise in her investigations and decisions that she won the universal commendation of her co-workers on the committees and of the exhibitors and managers as well.

But better than this, Mrs. Fry is a loyal, earnest W. C T. U. woman, in hearty accord with all our fundamental doctrines. Hers is a judicial rather than an impulsive mentality, and hence she does not rush to conclusions, but calmly weighs the matter and when she reaches a well-considered decision she is as firm as a rock, and always able to give a reason for the belief that she entertains. The committee have positive assurance that Mrs. Fry holds strong opinions in favor of political prohibition and equal suffrage.

Mrs. Fry brings to her work as editor a thoroughly trained intellect, a wide knowledge of literature, a lovely Christian spirit and heart in love with our W. C. T. U., in all its lines of work. The W. T. P. A. are to be congratulated upon the acquisition of this gifted woman.

Every white-ribboner will be glad to know that Miss Sudduth will not even for twelve months be lost to us, but becomes corresponding editor during her vacation. While we shall welcome Mrs. Fry to Headquarters, and pledge her our support and sympathy, we shall follow Miss Sudduth to her California home with loving prayers, that her much needed rest may prepare her for more and better work in the long years to come.

Helen M. Barker,

The Wine and Spirit Gazette declares "that prohibition and liquor selling are natural enemies." This is an admirable point of agreement, and the only one that occurs to us between the temperance party and the liquor party. It is an opinion that temperance people have long held that prohibition and liquor selling are natural enemies, but our opponents have been quick to declare that in the states that had prohibition "liquor flowed as free as water." If this were true, it seems more than mysterious they should be meanwhile compassing sea and land to make one proselyte in the municipal council and the state legislature. One day they tell us the Germans are all leaving Kansas because of prohibition, and the next they point to the vastly increased facilities for getting drink wherever prohibition is the law.

He who climbs, sees. Poets tell us of "The one far-off, divine event, Toward which the whole creation moves."

And in this mighty movement towards the power that organization only can bestow, what end have we in view? Is it fame, fortune, leadership? Not as I read women's hearts, who have known them long and well. It is for love's sake—for the bringing in of "Peace on earth, good will to men." The two supreme attractions in nature are gravitation and cohesion. That of cohesion attracts atom to atom, that of gravitation attracts all atoms to a common center. We find in this most conclusive figure of the supremacy of love to God over any human love, the true relation of human to the love divine, and the conclusive proof that in organizing for the greatest number's greatest good, we do but "think God's thoughts after Him."

A French author on being asked whether he would rather be buried or cremated, gave the following answer:

"To become a puff of smoke in the sky—or a blade of grass over a grave—that is the choice given us. I prefer the ground from which flowers spring for lovers."

Mr. Puddeford, a famous collector of money for Christian purposes, has given a good suggestion in the following incident: "The way to serve God is to get to work. Two of the great barriers of progress are sectionalism and sectarianism. A woman in a Western church had paid forty dollars for her third sideboard, and had given a dollar after she had been appealed to for missions. He supposed she was a good Christian for she had sung, 'I love Thy kingdom, Lord' at the services. 'Now if I were to buy a forty dollar overcoat for myself and a dollar dress for my wife, I should think no amount of singing around the house, 'I love my Mary Jane,' would convince my wife that I really loved her."

Labor Reformer: "Now, don't you think, as a man, that the hours of labor on the street cars are too long?"

President of the Railway Company: "I don't think so. They are treated well. We take excellent care of them, and only work them eight hours a day."

Reformer: "Why, I know a conductor who is on from 6 a. m. to 11 p. m.

President: "Conductor! I was speaking about the horses."

An electric current passing through water decomposes it and renders it invisible. All matter can be reduced to a gas, but it is all there, even as is the spiritual body, when the earthly body is laid aside. Take a bar of iron, that represents a solid; set the bar swinging, that is motion; listen, you hear a buzzing—motion has passed into sound. Later, under the action of fire the swift motion passes into heat, then on into light as the heat becomes intensified. Under still greater heat the solid becomes liquid, and last of all changes to an invisible gas. This is an illustration of the correlation of forces, and to my mind it illustrates also the possible rationale of the spiritual body; at least, it proves that there is nothing unreasonable in the contention of those who believe there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body.

It was a Boston child who, after long pondering, asked, "When after every one is dead, who will bury the undertaker?"

It is authentically related that the Duke of Westminster a generation back, who, by the way, was the richest Duke in England, had so much parsimony in his make-up that he could not restrain himself from going into the rooms of his guests as soon as they had left them and blowing out the candles. His curate whenever he called left a visiting card and at the end of a year or two the Duke gathered together these pasteboard tokens, put them in an envelope and sent them back with a note mentioning to the parson that he thought they would be valuable to him as he could use them over again. It was his custom when going to the nearest town and on arriving at the toll gate at some distance from the town itself, to have the horses taken from the carriage and fasten them to the wheels, compelling his wife and daughters to walk into the town and out again that he might not be obliged to pay toll.

MANITOBA CONVENTION.

The following account of the recent Manitoba convention is from the pen of Mrs. K. E. Parker, who has been appointed Manitoba Provincial reporter for The Union Signal, as well as Provincial treasurer, and who gives a graphic account of what must have been a most interesting convention:

The ninth annual convention of the Manitoba Provincial W. C. T. U., was held at Neepewa, July 3–5. The weather was charming, and the arrangements and hospitality of the members of the Neepewa union and their friends were perfect. From the moment of the delegates' arrival to the time of their departure their comfort was studied in every way; everything seemed placed at their disposal, even to horses and conveyances of various kinds, which were in readiness to take both ladies and their luggage to and from the railway station, which lies at the outskirts of this pretty little new town; we beg its pardon, city, we should have said, for Neepewa is a city, and has a mayor, Mr. J. A. Davidson, who is in sympathy with the W. C. T. U., and also in favor of equal suffrage. This gentleman and Dr. Harrison, also the Rev. Mr. Leech and Rev. Mr. Paterson, were introduced to the convention at different stages of its meeting, and all spoke warm words of appreciation of the work of the W. C. T. U. and of woman's work generally, and gave the ladies a hearty welcome to the city. A very cheering report was read by the treasurer, Miss C. Hind, who drew attention to the fact that, though the past year had been the hardest financially yet known to Manitoba, yet the two years affiliation fees owing to Dominion union had been paid, the present year's fees were ready to be paid, and there was more than sufficient funds in the treasury for convention expenses. At the close of this encouraging report, the doxology, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," was sung.

The corresponding secretary's report (Mrs. Dolson's) contained a great amount of information, showing good work done by the unions throughout the past year, from which we quote the following facts: Total membership reported, 538; honorary, 132; children enrolled as members of Loyal Temperance Legions, 681; copies of Ottawa Woman's Journal taken, 157; copies of The Union Signal, 70; twelve unions report mothers' meetings, and seven have health lectures; two unions have given prizes for essays on the use of tobacco; twenty-three newspapers are supplied with temperance items; sixty churches are using unfermented wine; nine unions have held Demorest medal contests; eight report railroad work; four carry on fair work; eleven unions have a literature department, and one union—Souris—reports a loan library established by them; eight unions have flower missions; seventeen unions report scientific temperance instruction being taught in the public schools; the Central W. C. T. U. of Winnipeg supplies ten copies of the Physiology Journal to school teachers in the city, and Treherne also supplies five copies for the same purpose.

Among the department reports we may mention specially that of social purity and hygiene, of which Dr. Yeomans is superintendent, showing a great amount of work done, chiefly along the line of mothers' meetings. The Winnipeg Central union makes a special feature of these meetings, which are presided over by Dr. Yeomans, and the able papers prepared and read by her are generously placed at the disposal of other unions throughout the province and are very much appreciated. Social purity literature is always distributed at mothers' meetings. Parlor socials have been held by many of the unions, the Winnipeg Y making special reference to their work along this line during the year.

A very interesting report was read by the press superintendent. In only one instance (that of Manitou) is any money paid for space in the local papers. The press superintendent of Winnipeg made special reference to the kindness and courtesy of the editors of the three daily papers in that city, all of whom allowed space for notices and reports of meetings and also for an article or items of interest on the work periodically.

During the convention a memorial service was held for our late lamented Dominion president, conducted by the vice-president, Mrs. McLung, who testified to the bright, cheery disposition and sterling Christian character of Mrs. Ella Williams, whom most of those present had known and loved, and the following resolution embodying these sentiments was passed unanimously:

Resolved, that the Manitoba Provincial W. C. T. U. in convention assembled at Neepewa, desire to place on record their heartfelt sorrow at the great loss sustained by them in common with all the unions throughout Canada in the removal by death in March of this year of our beloved Dominion president, Mrs. Ella Williams. We desire to place on record our high appreciation of her worth, of the great ability displayed by her in her official capacity, and of her bright, genial, Christian character which made her beloved wherever known; we would echo Miss Willard's words in reference to her when she said that she associated Mrs. Williams' name with that of Mrs. Letitia Youmans and Mrs. Judge Foster, calling them the pioneer women of Canada. No truer leader ever lived than Mrs. Williams whom we have lost and than whom we have no more precious life to lose.

A letter of greeting was read by the secretary from Mr. Hale Ramsey, of Montreal, who has become the first life member of the Provincial union, the constitution having been amended to provide for life members on the payment of twenty-five dollars in one sum. Mr. Ramsey has been a good friend both to the Provincial and to the Winnipeg Central and Y unions, and his kindness and sympathy are much appreciated by the members.

A very able address was read by Mrs. Ruttan, the president. It was a review of the work, not only of the W. C. T. U., but that of temperance generally, and it rang out the note of hope, and the prophecy of ultimate victory for the temperance cause in this Province.

Three papers were read during the convention, which helped to deepen interest in the work. The subjects were: "The Duties of Officers," by Mrs. Ruttan; "Work in Small Unions," Mrs. Dolson; "Literature as a Departmental Help," Mrs. Parker.

Another new departure, which was also one of interest, was several five minute papers, or addresses, by several members of the union. "Y Work" and "How to Make W. C. T. U. Meetings Interesting," were among the subjects spoken on and afterwards discussed.

A special feature of this convention was the visit of Miss Alice Palmer, "round-the-world missionary," who lectured twice at Neepewa, besides attending nearly all the meetings, and giving advice and help in many ways. Her lectures, which were on her work in Africa, were well attended and much appreciated, and her companionship was very much enjoyed by all who made her acquaintance.

The following is a list of officers elected for 1895–6. All but the treasurer were reëlected, and the convention regretted that Miss Cora Hind felt unable to continue in that office:

President, Mrs. Ruttan, Manitou; vice-president, Rev. Mrs. McLung, Treherne; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. E. Dolson, Winnipeg; recording secretary, Mrs. Playfair, Baldur; treasurer, Mrs. Parker, Winnipeg.

It is almost impossible in so short a space to give an adequate account of all that was done and said in that all too brief time of three days. Much less is it possible to convey to others the helpful, inspiring atmosphere that pervaded the meetings of earnest women assembled in convention at Neepewa, much of the success of which was due to the energetic band of women in that city.

MINNESOTA.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The nineteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota was held at Waseca, August 27 to 30. The M. E. church in that beautiful little city was made to voice the welcome accorded the delegates, in the tastefully arranged decorations. Flowers were everywhere in profusion. Golden-rod, emblem of constancy, formed a solid bank about the altar railing, and banners with their varied mottoes hung upon the walls. Tuesday's trains brought nearly two hundred delegates, and by afternoon it seemed as if the streets were alive with fluttering white ribbons.

The auditorium of the church was full to its utmost seating capacity when at three o'clock Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry called the convention to order. We missed the long-familiar faces of Mrs. Hobart and Mrs. E. S. Wright, who had become endeared to Minnesota white-ribboners through many years of service. But at the first sound of her voice, Mrs. Fry impressed her strong, true personality on her hearers and won her own place in our affections.

The opening consecration service, led by our sunny-faced evangelist, Rev. Hannah Mullenix, breathed forth the consecrated purpose of earnest lives, and hearts were baptized anew in the Holy Spirit for the week's work.

The usual business of the convention followed the roll-call, which was responded to by Scripture texts; and by evening, under Mrs. Fry's efficient management, everything was in systematic working order. The Y's came to the front in the evening in a reception to the W's. Ice-cream and cake were served, the cakes having been brought by the girls from their homes—some two hundred miles distant.

Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovel, secretary of the Y Branch, voiced the welcome of the Y's. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine responded in one of her characteristic, bright speeches.

After the reception, Hon. P. McGovern, in behalf of the city, Rev. S. G. Updike, Congregational pastor, in behalf of the churches, J. E. Childs, in behalf of the press of the city, and Mrs. Van Curan, for the local union, welcomed the delegates most cordially.

Mr. McGovern turned the keys of the city over to the ladies, metaphorically, adding, "and if there is anything more you want, which I have omitted to mention, just ask for it, and it shall be yours." Mrs. Fry responded in a happy manner. Assuming the attitude of a humble suppliant, she pleaded for two things the lawyer had not mentioned: "Turn over to us your saloons and breweries. We know exactly what to do with them. Turn over to us your cigars and tobacco, and allow us to dispose of these things which are destroying the physical and mental manhood of our nation."

The reports of the state president, the corresponding secretary, Mrs. McCurdy, who so ably fills Mrs. Wright's place, and of treasurers, were cause of rejoicing and encouragement. Nearly all the state officers, many district presidents and state superintendents of departments are new in the field. The year has been one of general financial depression. While business prospects are brightening in the cities, many smaller towns and country places are at their lowest financial ebb, and consequent depression along all lines follows, yet notwithstanding all this, new unions have been organized, old unions increased in membership and strength, and our treasurer says the state organization is on a firmer financial basis than for ten years past.

Mrs. Emily Merritt, the busy, alert president of fifteenth and sixteenth districts, gave an excellent and comprehensive outlook over the field of state work in all its departments. Earnest workers are cheered onward, and discouraged ones have taken heart to try again, because of her trustful words.

Mrs. Jane C. Calhoun, of Mansfield, O., one of the original Crusaders, was present, and gave a brief history of the Crusade movement. It was a pleasure to listen to her words, and to note the unabated zeal and fervor as she talked of "our cause." A delightful surprise to all was the presentation by Mrs. Calhoun to our president of a beautiful silver mounted gavel, tied with white ribbon, and inscribed with the names of several of the Crusaders, and made from wood from the church in Hillsboro, O., around whose altar was kindled the sacred Crusade fires, and from whose doors went forth that first band of consecrated women.

The old gavel wielded by Mrs. Hobart through many years was sent to our ex-president with warmest greetings of remembrance. Mrs. Hobart, who was too ill to attend the convention, sent back a telegram of thanks and appreciation.

We wish we could tell of all the good words spoken and the many excellent papers read, which have given a mighty spiritual uplift to purposeful lives.

Sunday-school temperance work under our wide-awake state and National superintendent, Stella B. Irvine, has received a wonderful impetus during the past year. Sunday-school rallies have proven a powerful factor in educating public sentiment.

The Y afternoon was filled with good and helpful things. Hygienic dress and health and heredity are receiving the thoughtful attention of Minnesota's girls. Mrs. Scovel is doing much in her Y work toward educating the motherhood of the future in lives of purity and strength.

Miss Louise Hollister, that charming Y of Duluth, who knows so well how to win and hold the closest attention of her audience, together with Mrs. Ida Thompson, both delegates to the World's Convention, gave some bright glimpses into those great meetings and word pictures of our three white-ribbon graces, Miss Willard (charity) Lady Somerset (hope) and Mother Thompson (faith).

We were truly blessed throughout the convention by the presence of Mrs. Charlton Edholm and Miss Alice Palmer, too well known to need other introduction. The church was not large enough to contain the crowd which gathered to listen to Mrs. Edholm on Thursday evening, so the Opera Hall was secured, and was packed to the galleries and entries and steps. Mrs. Edholm's address on "Traffic in Girls," was impressive and heart searching. The large collection for the benefit of the Rescue Homes, as well as the close attention of the audience, attested to its appreciation of her words.

Miss Palmer spoke on Friday evening of her work in South Africa, and of the great hindrance to the evangelization of the world in the accursed liquor traffic which steals money and nerve and brain and soul that belong to God and good.

Our own sweet singer, Mrs. Effie Burgan, added her quota to the songs and recitations which contributed so much to the excellent program.

Mrs. Fry's annual address was matchless in its rich and comprehensive thought and concise and pleasing diction. Mrs. Fry has accepted the post of managing editor of The Union Signal in the absence of Miss Margaret A. Sudduth for a year. But at the urgent request and unanimous vote of the convention she consented to remain our commander-in-chief, carrying on her work through correspondence and attending the executive meetings.

Other officers elected were Mrs. A. C. McCurdy, Minneapolis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. S. C. Soule, St. Paul, treasurer; Mrs. Hendrix, of Minneapolis, recording secretary, and Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, St. Paul, vice-president-at-large. Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovel, of Duluth, continues the editorship of the state paper, The White-Ribboner.

"Purity in the Home and God in Government," was chosen as the state motto.

After much discussion over two poems presented, "Minnesota," by Miss Harriet F. Garvin, of Hamline, was chosen as the state song to be sung to the familiar tune of "Zion." It is as follows:

Thou art decked in regal splendor
As a bride in fair array;
For thy gems, lo! lakes are gleaming,
For thy robes, lo! cornfields sway.
Minnesota!
State where thousand waters play!

From thy breast the Mississippi,
Rolls its jeweled tide along;
At thine ear sweet Minnehaha
Sings her never changing song.
Land of waters!
Shall we let thee suffer wrong?

Shall thy sons defile thy fairness?
Soil thy crystal purity?
To a curse turn gifts God given,
Pearls to tears of misery?
Bane or blessing
Shall thy beauty be to thee?

God of love withhold thy judgments,
Thine we are, our work is Thine;
Thine our country; its salvation
Resteth on Thy heart divine.
Bless Thy handmaids
Fighting want and woe and wine.

Our women have not failed to besiege the legislature in the interest of better laws. The Cold Storage bill was passed by large majority and has become a law.

The County Option bill was passed over, the question has been agitated until the public attention has been awakened and the matter will be pushed with renewed vigor this year.

The bill prohibiting gambling and sale of intoxicating liquors within a mile of state fair grounds became a law and was extended to county fair grounds over the state.

The discussion of "County versus District Work" was full and free and fair. No change was made in the constitution.

More petitions were sent in to the legislature in favor of the "age of consent" bill than for any other. It failed to pass, but there is a constantly increasing sentiment in its favor.

The convention sent a petition to the governor of New York asking for the pardon of Marie Barberrei, the fifteen-year-old Italian girl who murdered her seducer and who is sentenced to be hung.

The action of Allan Canfield, of Waseca, a sixteen-year-old boy, in informing against a saloon for illegal selling of liquor, whereby he lost his position, was commended by the convention and a resolution passed to assist him in securing another position.

DELAWARE.

TEMPERANCE DAYS AT CAMPS.

Since the days of our forefathers, it has been the wont of Delawareans to camp in the tented grove for a few days during the heated summer months. Interest in camps is manifested sometimes from a religious, sometimes from a social, and sometimes from a temperance view. Though in some sections religious fervor remains, losing little of its old time zeal in other places, there are added to this social and educational features. One of the chief educational helps is found in temperance days. That part of the gospel is heard by many who would not otherwise come under its influence.

Probably the first camp of the season to recognize the day was Sand Hills, near Georgetown, on July 30. The early morning looked as though it would prove to be a typical cold water day, but Providence smiled on us through only a few drops of rain, while the surrounding country was almost flooded. Georgetown, Milton, Nassau and Millsboro unions participated in the day's celebration. At the noon hour our Sussex county president, Mrs. Annie Fisher, held the prayer and consecration service. She then called a conference of the representatives from the unions present. All had something to tell of things accomplished or of plans for future work. At two o'clock in the afternoon the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Fisher, who, after the opening hymns and prayer, introduced Rev. Alfred Smith, of Smyrna, as chief speaker. He spoke forcefully and eloquently for an hour on "The Saloon versus Man." While we listened, still the wonder grew, how honest, thinking men could sit under such an influence and not be fully persuaded that they would henceforth consecrate all their powers to helping to abolish the liquor traffic. Dr. Smith was followed by a short but pungent address from Rev. Neese, of Nassau. In the evening Mrs. Ida Cole, of Good Templar fame, spoke in the interest of the Templars and of the W. C. T. U., but principally to the young people.

Thursday, August 1, was in every way propitious to the success of our Kent county W. C. T. U. meeting at Camden Camp. The meeting was appropriately opened with a praise service, conducted by W. T. Smithers, the county president, Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, presiding. She first introduced Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., of Staten Island, N. Y., who gave a helpful Bible exposition. Quite an interesting part of the program was the answering of questions. Mrs. Annie Wharton, of Dover, read an excellent paper in reply to the first one, "Why is the drink evil the greatest curse of modern times?"

Mrs. N. B. Smithers followed in a well written paper in answer to the question, "What shall we remember when called fanatical and narrow?" Two other questions were given during the day, one to Mrs. Jennie E. S. Price, "Why is there no safety in so-called moderation?" and the other to Miss May Thompson, "Name some of the rocks on which some of our young people go to pieces." Both replies were given effectively without notes and proved that there is no better plan for securing wise thoughts than to propound questions. Here also, Rev. Alfred Smith delivered his address on "The Saloon versus Man," and with telling emphasis.

The afternoon meeting began, as in the morning, with a song service, which was followed by a talk on "The need of temperance work," by Mrs. Cole. A recitation entitled "The Children's Petition," was rendered in a strikingly attractive manner by Miss Viola Prouse, of Kenton, who, some months ago, was awarded a prize by THE UNION SIGNAL, for the best written essay on "The World's Petition." "Deborah in Battle," was the subject of the afternoon address, delivered by Mrs. Boole, which from the beginning to the close was full of logic and the force of strong convictions. Good music interspersed the program. W. T. Smithers, Mrs. Mary Walcott, Miss Mary Cannon, Miss Edith Brown, John Kellum, Irving Wicks and Andrew Wood having rendered solos and duets to the pleasure and profit of their hearers.

With an attentive audience of more than three thousand people we hope many received an arrest of thought upon the temperance question.

At Brandywine Summit Camp, Thursday, August 8, was temperance day. The members of the W. C. T. U. of New Castle county were highly gratified that they were asked by the camp-meeting association to take part in the day's exercises. The meeting was opened at 8:30 a. m. by a prayer and praise service conducted by our state superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Matlack. She earnestly urged upon all entire reliance upon God while battling in this work.

The county president, Mrs. M. S. Cranston, made a short opening address and introduced to the audience Miss Margaret Eastburn, state superintendent of L. T. L. work. She made a strong appeal to bring the children into this work by having them banded together in L. T. L's. Mrs. W. S. Quigley followed with a plea for new members for the W. C. T. U., asking every woman present who was not already a member to unite with the union nearest her home. The gentlemen were also asked to become honorary members. Mrs. Cranston asked the white-ribboners present to tell of the help they had found in being members of the union. After hearing several the exercises closed by prayer and song. The Rev. Adam Stengle preached a strong and eloquent temperance sermon at the 10:30 a. m. meeting and the Rev. Sam Small gave one of his telling temperance addresses in the afternoon. There were large crowds at the several meetings and we feel that many were brought to think again and again of this monstrous evil. We believe they will put their burning thoughts into action.

Co-existent with the day's celebration at Brandywine Summit Camp, at the extreme north of our Diamond state, was Lamb's Camp, near Frankford, and quite as near the extreme southern boundary. The sessions were presided over by the Sussex county president, Mrs. Fisher, who prefaced the addresses with a ten minutes' talk in her well known zealous manner. Rev. C. P. Swain, of Tangier Island, Md., formerly pastor in charge of the camp, gave in the morning an earnest exposition of gospel temperance. He never leaves any doubt in the minds of his auditors as to his stand on this theme. Rev. Aloysius Green, of Whitesville, also gave a helpful talk. In the afternoon Dr. W. L. S. Murray, of Dover, held his audience's attention for an hour and a half with the strength of his logic. Not content with one day's work the ladies had the morning service hour on Friday for a mothers' meeting, conducted by Mrs. Fisher. But the camp for the future for Delaware is Rehoboth, which under its new auspices, held its initial sessions from August 16 to 27. It is to be our Ocean Grove, being by the sea. The first Tuesday was set apart as Temperance Day. As in the other Sussex county temperance meetings, Mrs. Fisher presided. Dr. W. L. S. Murray gave the address of the day, and Mrs. L. C. Marks spoke on social purity. Soulful singing and a good attendance helped to make the day a success.

PENNSYLVANIA PEN POINTS.

Y'S AND OTHERWISE.

The earnest, practical work of the Y's of our grand old Keystone state is certainly commendable and were all of it reported, would prove an inspiration to those who have long "borne the burden and heat of the day." Since the last state convention the state organizer has been kept almost constantly busy in the field, and can bring to our "majority convention" many sheaves (new unions) as trophies of her faithfulness. In Montgomery county seven new unions have been organized which are all in a prosperous condition.

The Norristown Y held a very pleasant flower mission meeting, thereby interesting a number of young ladies outside the Y who agreed to furnish flowers weekly and send to the city hospitals. A gold medal contest was recently held under the auspices of this Y. Mifflin county Y's are hard at work and have reënforced their ranks by the addition of three strong new unions. Reading-rooms are in operation and good temperance literature in circulation. Wyoming county is represented by a very promising Y of twenty members, organized by Miss Dornblazer. This Y is preparing for a musicale to be given in the near future.

Allegheny county rejoices in the possession of zealous and active Y's, who conduct temperance and mission schools, visit the sick, cheer the faint, comfort the desolate, and seek in every right way to uplift fallen humanity. Armstrong county, the most thoroughly organized county in the state, is truly a strong arm to the temperance cause. Much work among the children is done and gospel meetings are held; visits to the jail, almshouse and poor are made.

Clearfield county Y's are the fortunate possessors of "grace, grit and gumption," without which no Y will be a success. Much good work has been done in press, literature, narcotics, flower mission and social work. The Houtzdale Y's have reorganized, with an accession to their ranks of five new members. They held a parlor social, which was a great success.

Columbia county deserves special mention for the large increase in membership this year, nearly one hundred members having been added. A temperance picnic was held at Forks in August. Fayette county is doing good work. The Uniontown Y's are working hard to erect a drinking fountain on one of the principal streets. Dunbar Y's held a successful contest recently and a gold medal contest has been arranged for at the September convention. Adams, Clinton, Center, York, Dauphin, Lehigh, Lebanon, Union and Cambria counties each have but one union, yet they stand near the head of the list for faithfulness and usefulness.

Venango county is active in good work. The Oil City Y's tendered the state organizer a reception in Trinity M. E. church, at which one hundred young people were present. Three new Y's are reported from this county. Smethport Y's are prospering. They assisted in giving a dinner July 4, thereby clearing nearly twelve dollars, and will have Miss Henrietta Moore to lecture for them this month. This Y gives the response to the address of welcome at the coming convention.

Philadelphia and Schuylkill counties show good work done by their quarterly reports.

Jefferson county rejoices in the accession of another new Y. Centerville Y's have done some very acceptable and timely work for the Y fund of the National Temperance Hospital.

Wedding bells have been ringing merrily all over the state, and our ranks have been strengthened by a number of honoraries by this means.

Mercer county has lost a beloved Y member by death, Mrs. Jennie Foster Mills. Hers was a life rich in promise.

The Y's are hard at work on the honor roll. The Thirteenth Y of Philadelphia are doing grand work among the children. They organized a temperance school, numbering four hundred. Through the kindness of the Holy Trinity (Episcopal) church, the vestry of which voted them two hundred dollars a year; they are granted the use of its chapel in which to hold the school.

Mrs. Hauck has kept the press column filled with histories of Philadelphia, West Philadelphia, North Philadelphia, Franklin, Haddington and George Institute unions.

Philadelphia county is doing excellent press work.

COUNTY W. C. T. U. NOTES.

Beaver county held a delightful "book social," at which Mrs. Mair was present and spoke. College Hill Y gave the county president a reception.

Lebanon county held its semi-annual convention at Myerstown; much interest was manifested. Rev. J. B. Esenwein, of Hamberg, lectured on "Sackcloth vs. Broadcloth" to a crowded house.

Delaware county—The Darby union held a parlor meeting, at which the county president, Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler, addressed them. Four new members were added. The Darby union also entertained a picnic of one hundred and twenty-one mothers and babies sent out by the Country Week Association.

Armstrong county held two public meetings, the first at Watsonville, at which eight unions were represented. Rev. Manasses Miller addressed a crowded house in the evening. The second meeting was held at Elderton, at which Mrs. Holvey was the speaker. Mrs. Holvey has given twelve lectures throughout the county.

Luzerne county holds its annual convention at Avoca, September 13. Mrs. Lucy Washington will be the speaker. West Pittston and Forty Fort unions are planning for socials for benefit of state work. Luzerne union has distributed one thousand pages of literature, and organized a Loyal Temperance Legion of forty-three members.

STATE L. T. L. NOTES.

This second state convention was one full of interest. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent, was present, and made a fine address, as she always does. Mrs. Ida Chapman, of Bradford, was also present and gave an able address. A number of excellent papers were read. Mrs. Emma B. Herr, of Butler, was elected delegate to state convention. The next state convention will be held at Huntingdon. Miss Belle Braham, the efficient state superintendent of L. T. L. work, is now at home, restored to health.

STATE CONVENTION.

The rallying call for the twenty-first annual state convention is now heard in the state. The time is October 11–15. An interesting program has been prepared. Miss Belle Kearney is the speaker for Y night. The state corresponding secretary has arrived safely from foreign shores, and her constituency throughout the state tender her a hearty and sincere "welcome home."

ITEMS.

Our state president has recently met with an irreparable loss, in the sudden death of her husband, who died August 10. Mr. Hammer was buried at Newark, N. J., August 14. The heartfelt sympathy of all the white-ribboners of Pennsylvania will be Mrs. Hammer's in this her hour of bereavement.

Mercer county has held five schools of methods since our last report.

Sharpsville W. C. T. U. held an enjoyable parlor social at the residence of Mrs. May R. Gennill. Mrs. E. D. C. Mair lectured for them recently.

The annual county convention will be held at Fredonia in October—time not yet fixed.

Sharon union is the banner union for names to honor roll.

Mercer union sent two dollars for state work.

Coudersport union, Potter county, keeps a well filled column weekly in Coudersport paper. The Loyal Temperance Legion connected with this union is active and interested.

Cambria county has made arrangements for a series of eleven meetings to be addressed by Mrs. Holvey.

MKecan county holds its annual convention at Kane, September 12 and 13. Miss Henrietta G. Moore, speaker.

Mrs. Martha G. Harvey, Norristown W. C. T. U., and Mrs. D. W. Hagar, of New Milford, Susquehanna county, are among those who have exchanged the cross for the crown.

Mrs. Alice Erdmann, state musical director, is the author of a stirring song entitled "Harrisburg Rally Song."

Address all matter intended for this column and not later than the 10th of each month to the address given here.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

A MOSAIC.

The evangelistic department of the W. C. T. U. of the District, with Mrs. M. E. Hartsock at its head, held a public meeting August 23, at Washington Grove camp-meeting connected with the M. E. church. The grove was beautiful and the seats well filled. White ribbons fluttered, and friendly faces greeted the sisters on the platform. About a dozen short speeches were made, besides prayers, songs and Bible lessons, so that the occasion was fitly styled "a mosaic." Among the speakers was Mrs. S. D. LaFetra, who told about the department of Christian citizenship of the World's W. C. T. U. of which she is the superintendent. It was pronounced a good meeting, and none too long, although it covered two hours of time and a great variety of work.

When Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp were here, a very pretty reception was tendered them by the Y's of the District at 910 F street, our headquarters. Mrs. Beauchamp gave us an eloquent address followed by impromptu talks by Mr. Beauchamp and others. Miss Drown, a Y president, presented a bouquet of roses to Mrs. Beauchamp, accompanied by a happy little speech.

It is suggested by the National that each state furnish a song and motto for the annual convention. We shall endeavor to comply. Some think "sic semper saloons" would be a good motto. Washington women expect to "numerously" attend the convention in Baltimore as it is but one hour's ride between the cities. The distance is forty miles, the fare one dollar.

Directly after the National Convention we expect Mrs. Benjamin, of Michigan. We shall arrange for parliamentary lectures and drills during her week's stay with us. About the same time we expect Mrs. Blair of the National union to organize L. T. L's and work among the children.

Our annual meeting occurs September 26 and 27. It will be held in Foundry M. E. church, a beautiful edifice centrally located and easily reached from all lines of street cars. There will be no entertaining union. The ladies of the church will spread tables in the vestry and give us coffee and tea, and the noon repast will be like a basket picnic. So you see the entertainment falls but lightly upon any one. To hold an annual meeting in this church will be something of a triumph. We have reason to be grateful to the pastor, Rev. Oliver Brown, for the cordial letter of compliance which was read before our executive. This is the church to which Mrs. J. Ellen Foster belongs and at one time appeared to be preempted by the non-partisan W. C. T. U. There does not now seem to be any non-partisan W. C. T. U. in this vicinity.

News in a Nutshell.

AMONG the many endeavors to furnish the protections of home to friendless and erring women and girls is that at St. Cloud, Minn., known as the "Woman's Home," which furnishes a shelter to residents from any locality, who may be sent at the expense of parents, guardians, friends, unions or officials. All inquiries will be answered by Mrs. G. C. Hull, 232 Eighth Ave., N., St. Cloud, Minn.

WORKING against difficulties, an almost discouraging apathy, and opposition from both press and pulpit, Alabama white-ribboners have to overcome more than the usual obstacles which bar reform. If nothing else had been done, the fact that the age of consent in Alabama has been raised from ten to fourteen is an encouragement to them to press foward to hard-earned but certain victory.

A COLORED woman actively interested in work among her own race in the South presents a plan in which W. C. T. U. workers can greatly aid. It is for industrial halls in which there shall be a public library, a night school, trades taught, cooking, sewing, Bible classes, etc. Colored women, she claims, are not allowed to go into a public library in any state south of Washington, D. C., to attend a lecture, enter a gymnasium hall, attend a cooking school, to learn stenography, book-keeping or any of the trades except as they are taught in the mission schools supported by the friends of the North. Hampton and Muskegee, with combined accommodations for one thousand one hundred only, touch but a minute proportion of eight millions. Trades institutions for negroes would greatly help in Christianizing influence.

AN incident illustrating how sadly motherly care and common sense is needed in local government is given by Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, National organizer, in a recent letter: "A little girl ten years old had been confined in the county jail for one month, her mother having preferred a charge that she was incorrigible. She was committed to this hot, filthy jail, awaiting a transfer to the reform school. Finally the officials decided she had committed no crime and she should be sent to the state institute for feeble minded children. Through the pleading of the women that accompanied me this child was given into our care. Trembling and pallid from long confinement and terror, we took her to the Christian home. She was disrobed of her heavy, dark clothing, bathed and dressed in white—a beautiful child—and the happiest child I ever saw. She has now been placed in a cultured home. God wonderfully blessed that jail service to the opening the eyes of the women of the need in all the dark places of their county."

"THERE are cares as well as joys in taking homeless children, but there is a comforting thought that in this field best work for the Master can be accomplished. Will those who have taken these children into their homes write me their hopes and successes? It will brighten long hours to hear from you all," writes Mrs. E. M. Griffin, West Suffield, Conn., who has been a shut-in since 1891 and is deeply interested in the homeless children work.

GENESEE county, N. Y., unions held their eleventh semi-annual meeting September 5 and 6. A correspondent writes: "All of the fourteen local unions were represented by delegates except three, and the attendance and interest was good. Mrs. Mary E. Lane, of Batavia, read a paper on the 'Necessary Requirements for Successful Local Union Work,' bringing out many helpful points in a direct and concise manner. A symposium, 'What is License?' was led by several ladies and at least two gentlemen. The election of officers resulted in the re-election of those who had been serving. A parliamentary drill was conducted by Miss Carrie Bucklin, of Pavilion, who thoroughly understood the rules and rigidly held those who participated, to them. Thursday evening's session was more largely attended than any other, and those present were well rewarded by the president's (Mrs. Anna E. Rice) fine report of her trip to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London. A discussion on the 'Oughts of County and Local Officers' called out many spicy and profitable thoughts by different members. On the whole the unions of the county are prospering, and not at all discouraged in the work. The next semi-annual meeting of the county will be held at Corfu, March 1, 1896."

Cor. Secy's Notes.

CONVENTION MATTERS.

Convention presses so closely upon us in these days that this special column will have room for very little else, and yet I want to notice briefly in passing the new union organized in Perry, Oklahoma, which is doing work of which an old union might well be proud, and also the first Indian union of Oregon, organized by Mrs. Unruh, pictures of whose banner are at this moment adorning my desk. Such tidings bring good cheer even in the busiest, most sorely tried and trying days. Copies of several new evangelistic leaflets by Rev. Frances E. Townsley have also caused my heart to rejoice, since each day is only emphasizing my conviction as to the absolute necessity of the wider dissemination of leaflets in our work.

The fifteenth Illinois district convention, held at Mattoon, has been a pleasant incident in my work during the past week. I spoke three times, conducted a question box and had an excellent opportunity for judging of the good work done by the old fifteenth, before it should disintegrate and become absorbed into other districts. Since I have been obliged to refuse all invitations to state conventions, except to an adjacent state, I am glad to come into contact with the dear sisterhood through the smaller gatherings in the districts. I know no state better equipped for work than is Illinois; she seems to have countless women well-nigh as dauntless as their brave leader, and that is saying much.

Among other features of especial note at Baltimore, we hope to have the organization and as much of the work of a model local union as can be condensed into one hour; also the presence of Madame Antoinette Sterling, the English singer, and Miss Helen Potter, the great impersonator. It is hoped that Mrs. Jenness Miller may be there, while the new faces will by no means crowd out those for so long known and loved. I asked last week that all members of Convention, superintendents, state officers, and the like, who were not expecting to be present, would notify the entertainment committee of that fact at the earliest date possible. I ask now that all superintendents and organizers will please notify me also if they cannot be in Baltimore, and will any of our women who are planning to attend the Purity Conference, which precedes our Convention, please send to me their names? We are entitled to send five delegates to this council, and I should like to have our quota fully filled.

I have to-day (September 10) placed in the hands of the printer the first department report for the Annual Minutes of 95–96, viz: that of work among foreigners. Surely, if any one could hope to accomplish the impossible it is the indefatigable superintendent of this department. I trust other reports may come in very rapidly, as the time is short. The W. T. P. A. will furnish copies of their reports to the superintendents this year on the same terms as last.

Please write directly to Mrs. Grow in giving orders. Please watch this column very intently in the coming weeks, as owing to press of work I shall be obliged to intrust to it many items which would ordinarily be sent by letter to the one most interested.

Mrs. Alice C. Robinson, of Baltimore, president of the city union, wishes me to make special requests that states will take their banners to the Convention, as on Monday evening there is being planned a demonstration like the one just held in Albert Hall, at the World's Convention.

In addition to this request, and in the same line, Mrs. Mary A. McLendon, chairman of W. C. T. U. exhibit at Atlanta Exposition, asks me to request that all banners and flags not going to Baltimore may be sent to Mrs. H. M. Tripp, Atlanta, Ga., and marked "For the Exhibit," and that all which go to Baltimore may be sent to Atlanta directly from there. Our sisters are making a brave effort to have a showing worthy of our cause, and we ought to help them by all means in our power. We shall also have special days upon the program there. October 7, in the Woman's Congresses, and November 5, our own special W. C. T. U. Day. We are not yet able to announce definitely the speakers for these occasions, but are making every effort to insure a worthy representation. While this exhibit is not under the National Union, we still hope all who can will help to make it a success.

Treasurer's Corner.

The corner is welcoming delayed dues, Alabama, Maine, Rhode Island, Nevada, Louisiana, Missouri, New Mexico, North Dakota, East Washington, Ohio, Massachusetts, Vermont and Tennessee having remitted since last report.

A donation of one dollar came from the W. C. T. U. of Pawcatuck, Conn. Fannie Talbot sends membership fee and birthday gifts come from Mesdames Young, Patterson and Gregory, Misses Cowls and Metzler, all of Pueblo, Col. We greatly hoped that the birthday fund would have brought into the treasury a specially large amount, but up to this time very few of our large constituency have responded.

We trust, sisters, you will give especial attention to self-denial on September 22, Mrs. Leavitt's birthday, and the Crusade fund on the birthday of our beloved leader, September 28. Arrange meetings upon these dates and take collections, solicit subscriptions for our great work.

I desire to call the attention of the state treasurers to the fact that Y dues are not reported to National treasurer separately and hence cannot appear in treasurer's report. Mrs. Barnes, early in the year, expressed her wish that this year the Y's should have credit for dues received from their unions and if each state treasurer will send me a statement to that effect I shall be very glad to incorporate it in my report.

A NEW DEPARTMENT.

At the last session of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union the department of evangelistic institutes and training was made and I was elected its superintendent. Temperance workers have long felt the need of a training school for their evangelists. They will rejoice that it is already under way. New York is the providential site of the school. A most needy mission field in the vicinity of the home and a large chapel give ample space for practice. New York affords the best facilities for study. It will be convenient for our workers from other countries till branch schools are established in their own lands. The present plan is to take ladies who are qualified in the main, for work, giving them only such instruction as careful examination shows them to need. Tuition is free, cost of living is within reach of all.

In reply to many inquiries we are glad to be able to say that a non-resident course of study has been arranged for those who cannot come to the school in New York city.

The main expense will be for the purchase of a few text-books which will always be needed for reference and which will form the basis of the small, compact library that every Christian worker must have, no matter how good the memory may be. Examiners, drilled in the school, will give the practical lessons that can be learned only from personal, oral instruction.

It may not be long till such lectures and examinations will be on the program of all our W. C. T. U. conferences.

The deepening of the spiritual life and making the most of one's powers for the Lord's glory in the world's bettering are the key thoughts of our course of study.

J. FOWLER WILLING,

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

The National Temperance Hospital has issued a small leaflet entitled "Alcohol in Medicine; What Physicians Say," which contains the following interesting information.

During the summer of 1894, a claim was made that alcohol was necessary as a solvent for medicines and to "prepare the field of operations in capital surgical cases." A letter was authorized by the board of trustees of the National Temperance Hospital, and addressed to a number of surgeons and physicians of high repute in the city of Chicago, asking whether they so considered it necessary, and what they used as antiseptics. The following are culled from replies received:

Dr. S.—Prepares medicine without alcohol; does not use it as a preserving agent, having found it unnecessary.

Dr. E.—Is unalterably opposed to the use of alcohol; can cover the field pretty well without it.

Dr. B.—Sees no great need of alcohol in surgery.

Dr. M.—"I never use any of the preparations of alcohol as an antiseptic; rarely ever prescribe a tincture; the tablet form is much more valuable and certain."

Dr. S.—Does not consider it indispensable. Has found it possible to have medicines properly compounded without it.

Dr. W.—(Pharmacist) "Should a physician choose to practice medicine without alcoholic preparations, I do not think the task so very great if the question is given a little study."

Dr. T.—Does not use alcohol. "The patient cannot possibly get any toxic or medicinal effect from alcohol."

Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, president of the hospital staff, says: "I do not think it necessary to use alcohol. Tablet triturates are better than tinctures."

The leaflet from which these extracts are made can be purchased by applying to any member of the board of trustees, fifteen cents per hundred.

THE MATCHLESS STEVENS CLOAKS.

"Without a doubt the most beautiful line of high-class garments ever made," said a leading cloak designer the other day in speaking of the well-known cloak line of Chas. A. Stevens & Bros., this city. "From the painstaking care given these garments," he continued, "has come their matchless 'set' and 'style,' which so well warrants their popularity the country over." Last week, in discussing the phenomenal growth of their mail order cloak business, Mr. J. H. Stevens, of the firm, tersely gave some facts interesting to all who buy cloaks. Said he: "The wonderful growth of our cloak business comes directly from keeping faith with our patrons — a confidence we have been years in building. Year by year our business has increased with this confidence, enabling us to serve so well the vast army of ladies who now look to us for all their cloaks. This season, more than in any former year, our garments combine to a nicety that perfection of style, fit, workmanship and finish which has made them so keenly sought for from coast to coast. No other garment, as everyone knows, by being properly or improperly made, can so thoroughly please or annoy a lady as a cloak, and the genuine pride and pleasure —that consciousness of being well-dressed —that our garments give the wearer, invariably cause her to recommend them to all her friends. In a word, they give the wearer that happy combination of comfort, 'style' and grace so seriously lacking in the mass of garments that flood the country through ordinary trade channels.

"Our unique plan of selling genuine, well-tailored garments direct to the wearer, has led our customers everywhere to look to us for most superior values, and these high expectations will be more than satisfactorily met this season—even more so than a year ago."

The fall announcement of Chas. A. Stevens & Bros. appears elsewhere in this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

A Remarkable Record.

The large number of our readers who have noticed for many years the familiar advertisement in this and in nearly every other first-class medium, emanating from the firm of Cornish & Co., of Washington, New Jersey, will be interested to note that this old established and reliable firm are making their thirty-first series of Annual special bargains in Pianos and Organs.

Their new catalogue is a work of art and fully describes every instrument manufactured by them, and gives much valuable information. A good organ can be bought for only twenty-five dollars, and a first-class $400 upright piano for $100.

A large number of the subscribers of this paper own Cornish Pianos and Organs, and are well satisfied. Messrs. Cornish have the good will of thousands who have been enabled by their easy method of purchase to put a really fine musical instrument in their homes at factory cost. Don't fail to write immediately for the new catalogue, to Cornish & Co., Washington, New Jersey.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Home Hints.

When washing ivory or pearl handled knives it is a good plan to stand them blades down in a mug or pitcher. Then the hot water, which will crack and discolor the handles, can be turned on the blades only.

For burns, and also to prevent scars, apply immediately baking soda on a damp cloth until the fire is out, then apply cosmoline, which is very healing.

The Boston Budget says some women bicyclists have a way of dividing their skirts at the moment of mounting their wheels, thus securing all the advantage while riding without the ugliness when obliged to walk. They pin the back and front of the skirt together at the hem between the feet with a common safety pin.

To clean bamboo furniture use a brush dipped in salt water.

Where are all the pretty books, dainty bits of fancy work and the pieces of delicate china received last Christmas or birthday? It is to be hoped they are beautifying the home, and that their silent influence is having its refining effect on those who enter there. In some women the inborn tendency seems to be to hoard everything of the kind, either from a real miserly spirit or because they hope sometime to have everything more in harmony with these prettiest things. So they are put away and are not permitted to exert the power inherent in every beautiful thing, however simple it may be.

Celery salad: Cut crisp celery into small bits. Make dressing of yolk of one hard-boiled egg, rubbed smooth, with one teaspoon of freshly made mustard, one tablespoon of salad oil, one-half teaspoon of pepper, two-thirds teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of sugar. Beat one egg to a froth and stir all together with half a cup of vinegar or lemon juice. Pour over the celery, and serve at once.

A few words about dishcloths, so humble a subject that perhaps some one is tempted to say, "I don't know as I need any suggestions on that line." Probably you don't, but have you not seen some in use about which you could have expressed an unflattering opinion? My mother always used old linen towels for dishcloths. She doubled them and ran them through the sewing machine, stitching them around the edges and several times across to make them firm. Cheese cloth fixed in the same way makes good ones and as it can be bought for five cents a yard surely there is no excuse for dirty looking dishcloths. It is a good plan to make up a lot of them at once and send the soiled ones to the wash regularly.

Again we quote from The Household; this time a recipe for salted walnuts. Blanch a pound of best English walnuts, soak them in sweet cream for fifteen minutes and place them on a granite iron baking tin; set them in the oven and watch carefully, turning frequently. When nearly done, sprinkle plentifully with salt and return to the oven for a short time. Shake off all the loose salt when they are taken from the oven.

To clean hair brushes sprinkle them with pulverized borax, then with water enough to moisten the powder. After they have lain a little while dip the brush, bristles downward, several times, into moderately hot water until the bristles look clean, being as careful as possible not to wet the backs and handles. Rinse the brushes in cold water and dry near the stove or other warm place, being particularly careful not to overheat those having rubber mountings. Some one says that wiping the bristles to dry makes them soft, so also does the use of soap.

In spite of their unfortunate odor onions are a favorite vegetable with many people, and as they are certainly a very healthful article of diet, and a little attention to the mode of preparation will largely overcome the cause of objection, try these directions for creamed onions. Peel in a bowl of cold water, and save your eyes. Boil in plenty of salted water, and unless the onions are very mild change the water when parboiled. When perfectly tender drain thoroughly. Have ready in another sauce pan a cream sauce made as follows: Boil half a pint or more of rich milk. Rub together until smooth a tablespoonful of butter with one of flour, stir into the milk letting it again come to a boil. Let the onions simmer for ten minutes in this sauce, season with butter, salt and pepper to taste.

Publisher's Notes

We are often asked for a fitting souvenir for the generous hostess at convention, who has so courteously entertained the visiting delegates. "Do Everything," which you will need for yourself, we shall have on hand, and the "White Ribbon Hymnal," which you will be glad to own if you have not a copy; but for your hostess, who may not be a W. C. T. U. woman, what more precious gift could you leave than a copy of "A Great Mother"? We shall have fresh copies of this treasured book, and we believe you will thank us for the suggestion. This at $1.50 and a subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1, will be a gracious remembrance for kindness received.

For a gift to the dear ones at home, who already have our own publications, we shall present for your inspection an extensive and choice assortment of Christmas booklets, cards, and inexpensive books, both for the children and the older members of the family. We shall have "A Wheel Within a Wheel" in attractive bindings, and shall make a special convention rate on this book of thirty cents, at which nominal price each son and daughter who rides a bicycle can own one of the best books Miss Willard has written!

Advertisers like to know what paper pays them best. Always mention The Union Signal when writing them.

We have not asked for your subscription to the daily UNION SIGNAL this year, for it has seemed wise for various reasons to discontinue its publication during the convention of 1895. We shall be disappointed if you do not miss this echo of the convention, but you will find partial compensation by subscribing early for extra copies of our Convention Number of THE UNION SIGNAL, which will be issued early in November. Mrs. Chapin, assisted by Miss Melville and a competent stenographer, will so ably report the proceedings that you will be able to catch the spirit of the convention, and will miss none of its good points. The price will be five cents a copy as heretofore, and we shall issue an extra edition if your orders justify it.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

AN UNPARALLELED OFFER.

From August 15 to October 1, we will send to all unions eight dollars' worth of leaflets for five dollars, cash to accompany the order. This is your opportunity to do many times eight dollars' worth of good for five dollars. Can you afford to miss it?

RAILROAD RATES

TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION,

Baltimore, Md., October 18-23, 1895.

The committee on transportation had hoped, yea, had dared to believe, that this year they might secure the much to be desired concession of one fare for the round trip, not upon the ground of numbers, but of the increasing importance and influence of these yearly conventions. Correspondence, personal interviews have availed naught; the maximum of attendance is the only point of consideration; the fiat of the secretary of the Trunk Line Association, in whose jurisdiction the Convention is to be held, has gone forth, and the lowest possible rate is one and one-third fare upon the certificate plan.

Railroad Associations.

The railroad associations which have already granted the one and one-third rate, are the Trunk Line, Central Traffic and Southern Passenger Association. The Western Lines Passenger Associations and New England Passenger Committees have the matter under consideration, and it is believed will grant the concession, so that a uniform rate upon the certificate plan will doubtless be secured in all territory covered by the various associations.

The Certificate Plan.

The certificate plan makes necessary the obtaining a certificate from the agent of whom the ticket to Baltimore is purchased, which certificate must be duly signed and stamped by him, indorsed at the meeting in Baltimore by Caroline F. Grow, and viséd by special agent of the association at that point.

Owing to the meeting of the National Purity Association to be held the same week in Baltimore, the tickets will cover the dates from October 14-23, and may be purchased THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) prior to October 14. Certificates will not be honored unless presented within THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) after the adjournment of the meeting.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. In such a case the ticket agent can inform a delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained, a local ticket should be purchased to such station, and through ticket and certificate there obtained.

Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

Tickets are available for continuous fare only, and no refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

It would be well for delegates to give ticket agents such timely notice of their intentions that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required.

Those wishing to avail themselves of the concessions should be present at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before the departure of train. As members arrive their certificates should be deposited with me, so as to be ready for special agent upon his arrival.

THE STORY OF PATRIOTS' DAY, LEXINGTON AND CONCORD. By George J. Varney.

Showing how the day may be observed by schools, societies and others, giving a complete story of the events of that memorable 19th of April. Mr. Varney has compressed into this little handbook historical information concerning the early days of American independence. He describes the condition of things in Massachusetts just previous to the breaking out of the war of the Revolution, and then, starting with April 18, 1775, he relates the events of that night and the succeeding day in Boston, and at Lexington and Concord, the ride of Revere and Dawes, the massacre at Lexington and the fight at Concord bridge. Paul Revere's story of his famous ride, the original of which is owned by the Massachusetts Historical Society, is quoted in full.

THE SALOON-KEEPER'S LEDGER. A series of Temperance Revival Discourses. By Louis Albert Banks, D. D., Pastor Hanson Place M. E. Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York and Toronto. Price 75 cents.

The discourses in this book aim to help educate the public mind and conscience afresh in regard to the drink question. In the ledger of those participating in the drink traffic heavy balances are proven on the side of disease, private and social immorality, ruined homes, pauperized labor, lawlessness and crime, and political corruption. The author illustrates the license system as folly by the shortsightedness of Bridget, who, after having been instructed to scrub the kitchen floor, was found mopping for dear life the water two or three inches deep; "Why don't you turn off the faucet, Bridget?" "Sure, ma'am, its mesilf that hasn't toime, the water kapes me a mopping so fast." Theodore Cuyler, D. D., of Brooklyn, writes the introduction and pays a high tribute to the merits of these temperance revival discourses, which at time of delivery in the author's spacious church edifice were listened to by large assemblages.

10 Dollars for 3.50

..IF YOU BUY NOW..

A Ten-Dollar set of Shakspeare for $3.50. We mean exactly what we say. This set is worth $10.00 to any reader, no matter how many other editions he may have. We shall sell it direct for a short time only at $3.50, and any one who is dissatisfied may have his money back. These books can never be bought any cheaper. Never as cheap again. In our next announcement the price will be advanced. (The regular price of the set is $10.00.)

This is a Shakspeare for readers. It is the only edition printed in large type. It is strongly bound in good serviceable cloth binding, in eight handsome volumes of easily handleable size. Paper specially made with a dead surface, restful to the eyes. There are copious notes on the text by J. Payne Collier, F. S. A., the celebrated Shakspearian critic, with variorum readings. We honestly believe it to be the best edition ever printed for actual use. We published it to retail at $10. That allowed for the retailer's and the jobber's profit. The reader buying direct from us can have both of these profits. We can't afford to sell very long at $3.50, which is less than the wholesale price. The object of this special $3.50 offer is to make a quick test of whether the discriminating readers of this paper, who will appreciate a large, clear type, scholarly edition of Shakspeare, complete, are ready to buy direct from the manufacturers at a saving of more than half the cost. If you are, the middle-men's profit is yours. Order to-day and be sure of getting the lowest price that will ever be quoted.

Gentlemen:—The eight-volume edition of Shakspeare is to hand in good condition, though coming to far-away Utah. The books are a marvel of cheapness and the best book bargain I have made in a long time. The type, binding and, in fact, everything about it is first-class, except the price. To say that we are delighted does not fully express our feeling. You ought to sell tens of thousands of sets at that price.

When you have any more bargains of that kind, do not fail to let me know. Yours truly,

JOSEPH WILKS,
Pastor First Methodist Church.

Gentlemen:—I have received and examined the eight-volume set of Shakspeare which you shipped me. I am agreeably surprised at the attractiveness of the binding and the clearness of the type. The size of the volumes is very convenient and particularly adapted for use in Shakspeare Clubs. I have shown my set to two members of the Newington Club. I will ask you as a favor to ship me by express two more sets of your $10.00 edition of Shakspeare, for which you will find money order enclosed. I consider them wonderfully cheap at the price you are advertising them, and heartily recommend them to any one who may desire to own a beautiful set of Shakspeare's works.

Yours truly, FLORENCE HOYT.

Remember—the regular $10 set in eight handsome volumes (only large-type edition) for $3.50; with the distinct understanding that the money will be returned immediately if you are not satisfied.

BEER is reported by a writer in the Westminster Gazette to have flowed during the British elections at a penny a quart. While not openly violating the Corrupt Practices Act, the brewing trade and public house interest found many ways of evading the law by expending money for "the defense of their trade."

THE idea recently successfully carried into effect in Philadelphia is drawing the merited attention of other city corporations who find borrowing a necessity. Feeling the need of a large sum the city advertised bonds at three per cent, which the banks and brokers repudiated on account of the low rate of interest. The city prepared new bonds of small denominations and invited citizens of small means to buy them. The entire issue was soon disposed of and the ranks of "bondholders" largely increased. Without the expense of brokers' commission, a safe and popular investment was supplied to hundreds of people.

THERE were four hundred and seventy-six delegates at the International Temperance Congress in Basle. Miss Willard contributed an article on "The White Ribbon Movement," and the students of Basle and Zurich gave an entertainment at the summer Casino, appearing in national costume, to illustrate the fact that social enjoyment can be had without the use of alcohol. A London correspondent comments on a noticeable change since the last Congress at The Hague in 1893. Almost all the speakers at Basle warmly supported total abstinence, while the few advocating the moderate use of alcohol were received with coldness and disapproval.

WEARING apparel leads in the list of women's inventions published by the United States patent office. Cooking utensils are second. The first patent was issued to Mary Kies, in 1809, for a method of weaving straw with silk or thread. Women's patented inventions now number two hundred and eighty a year, and are steadily increasing in variety. Among the leading manufactures in which women have tried their inventive faculties are, furniture, washing or cleaning, building, educational and medical apparatus, sewing and spinning devices, toys, trunks, baby carriages, barrel and bicycle attachments, printing and bottling apparatus, boxes and baskets, clocks, flowers, horseshoes, motors, musical instruments, plumbing and preserving devices, screens, stationery, theatrical apparatus, toilet articles and typewriter attachments.

THE Proportional Representation League, in its recent general conference at Saratoga, N. Y., recommended the adoption by the United States municipalities of the Swiss system where the people are divided into large communities, each one of them electing a number of representatives by means of proportional representation. The entire vote in each constituency is divided by the number of members to be elected from each. This gives the number of voters entitled to one representative, and each party receives as many representatives as it has votes in proportion to the whole. The candidates in the list of each party who receive the highest number of votes are the ones elected. It is claimed that this plan procures men of higher character, lessens corruption and gives the minority, representation. In opposition to the plan a New York daily urges that it would produce a multiplicity of political groups with no one in power to accomplish necessary legislation in state and nation; but acknowledges that it might be different with municipal councils if we get partisan consideration out of our city elections.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The National Prison Association, to aid the convict to reform, concluded its labors at Denver last week.

East Ohio M. E. conference, at Canton, voted by an overwhelming majority in favor of women delegates, Saturday.

Chattanooga was crowded last week with the reunion of the army of the Cumberland and dedications of Chickamauga monuments.

New York Republicans in state convention have demanded the enforcement of the Sunday liquor law and the preservation of the Sabbath.

The Atlanta Exposition was closed last Sunday, and will doubtless maintain Sabbath observance, despite the usual efforts of anti-Sabbatarians.

Carroll D. Wright opened the convention of Labor Statisticians in Minneapolis, whose reports embodied the work of the various state bureaus.

The Emperor of China has issued a tardy edict that all foreigners be protected, but the British men-of-war which have ascended the Yang-tse-Kiang are an assurance that they will be.

Suspensions of a number of letter-carriers in Grand Rapids and Saginaw, Mich., have been made by the post-office department, in most cases for entering saloons and drinking while on duty.

We hear of a new champion for the "nationalization of the liquor traffic" in the person of a woman labor leader, who, if correctly reported, wants the government to have sole control of the manufacture and sale of liquor. There is not a student of the drink question who does not know from experience and observation that, held up to the light, this scheme reads obversely, giving the rum power complete control of the government.

We are elated. The United States tobacco journal declares that the bicycle has caused a total reduction in the consumption of cigars for the year of seven hundred million. The journal insists that the decrease in the production of cigars has kept pace with the increase in the production of the wheel and hence declares that the bicycle is an enemy to the tobacco trade and will hereafter be treated as such. While this little war between the tobacconists and the bicyclers is going on, we may congratulate ourselves that the air we breathe is laden with a million or more less vapors of cigar smoke.

Our managing editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, was suddenly called to her home in Southern California, last Friday by a telegram announcing the sudden relapse of her father, who has been sick for some months, but was improving. She prepared to go on the first train, but before she had left Chicago the sad word came that the beloved parent had passed away. In a few weeks she would have been on her way home to enjoy the year's rest for which she had long been planning. Accompanied by her brother, Dr. William Xavier Sudduth, she started Friday night on the long journey across the country to Colton, where the sorrowing mother and sister await them, the funeral having been postponed until their arrival, Tuesday. Only those who have passed through similar crises can know the anguish of such a trip, and only those who in like sorrow have tested the tender strength of the Everlasting Arms know how this white-ribbon comrade is sustained. The hearts of her co-workers, grown to be staunchest friends during her eight years' connection with this office and paper, follow her with love and prayers.

Dr. James McCreary Sudduth, whose death occurred at Colton, Cal., last Friday at the age of sixty-eight, was a strong Abolitionist, as well as a warm upholder of the temperance reform as a Prohibitionist. It is told of him that when a young lad, his father, who was of Kentucky stock, sent him to an uncle's in Lexington to be educated. But the sight of a negress and her child on the block undergoing examination so strongly aroused his hatred of slavery, that he ran away to the North and commenced life as a farmer in Illinois. His intellectual ambition and qualifications forced him from the plow, and he entered Rush Medical College, Chicago. Later he was offered a partnership with the noted physician, Dr. Nathan S. Davis, but preferring a country practice, he settled in Mason county, Ill., where he resided for fifteen years. He was held in loving and high regard by his clients for his conscientious, unselfish and considerate qualities, and for his abundant charity. His was a judicial, deliberate and thoughtful temperament, ever kindly and mindful of others—a fine type of Christian manliness. He heartily seconded every effort of his wife, who has long been an active white-ribboner, and whose delicate health made necessary the removal of the family to sunny California. She is president of the Colton W. C. T. U., his older daughter, Alice, is our National superintendent of flower mission work, and his younger daughter, Margaret, is well known to The Union Signal constituency as managing editor of our National organ. The staunch principles of both parents inhere in the children, all three of whom are active Christian temperance workers. Their loss is ours, and that of the humanity which is bettered by such a life as this.

White-ribboners will rejoice to know that Gen. Neal Dow, beloved by temperance people the world over, will attend the National Convention. The venerable prohibition hero writes to Miss Willard that he and his daughter having talked over her urgent invitation to be present at Baltimore, the decision to do so was "carried unanimously." In his letter (the writing of which shows not a token of tremulousness, although from a man in his ninety-second year) he says: "I am overwhelmed with work, attending many distant meetings and writing many letters, most of them of little account, but some of them requiring long replies. I went to a camp-meeting yesterday, forty miles away, and shall attend another twelve miles off, and three days after another still, then a great convention in Boston—one that our people intend to make the largest of the year—and so many more that I will not enumerate. I am well and not tired but I cannot foresee how long this can continue."

The present week, September 21–28 (beginning with the birthday of Mrs. Leavitt and ending with that of Miss Willard), white-ribbon women in all parts of the world are supposed to observe as self-denial week. During this time they are earnestly asked to forego some superfluity, and to send the money thus saved to the treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago, or if they live in Canada, to the treasurer of their own society, or if in England, to the treasurer there; if they have the cosmopolitan spirit, they cannot do better than to send their gift to the World's W. C. T. U. treasurer, Mrs. Sanderson, Danville, Quebec, Canada. It was suggested by the President in her last annual address that the dates mentioned should not only include self-denial week, but "reconciliation week," that is, every white-ribbon woman who has a grievance against anybody whatever, should do her best during that time to bring about a reconciliation. As a matter of course, this should be the spirit of our women at all times, but we are only "children of a larger growth," and have by no means gone beyond the helpful influence of those educational "times and seasons" by which the human spirit is attuned to higher harmonies.

"No North, no South, but a vast world sublime!" No sentiment was more enthusiastically received or more vociferously applauded at the opening of the Atlanta Exposition than this from the dedicatory ode. This is the spirit which inspires the international exposition of the cotton states, and it was prominently expressed in the opening ceremonies, both in the speeches delivered and in the ubiquity of the national colors. "Old Glory" floated everywhere, proclaiming in eloquent silence "union forever." The official recognition accorded the negro is significant, in that it is a declaration of public opinion in the South regarding the status of the colored man. "It is a recognition," said the negro orator, "that will do more to cement the friendship of the races than any occurrence since the dawn of our freedom." The dedication of a national park on the old battle ground of Chickamauga was another event of great importance in the history, not only of the South, but of the nation. These two events conjunctively occurring, may be said to be the formal introduction of the "new South" to the world. And more —the occasion marks, as a southern orator declared, "the second birth of the nation." On the spot where thirty years ago men met in fearful combat, bent on taking each other's lives, the survivors of the opposing armies joined hands in honoring their dead comrades—with no discrimination of North or South. A noteworthy commemoration, truly, of the victory of peace! "In union only there is safety," said General Bate, and this common-sense sentiment will be echoed by all American patriots, north and south. May the time soon come when the nations of the world shall work out this sentiment in international law.

EXCELSIOR.

BY E. H. CHASE.

Like folds of royal drapery let down,
The purple darkness shrouded all the night,
And hid a world of beauty from my sight;
Cool fingers of the breeze lay on my brow,
And eased the wearying pain I knew but now;
O'erhead I heard the night winds in their flight
Singing a song of morning and the light;
Singing of spring, though leaves were sere and brown.

I wondered as I listened to the strain,
And then, abeat, my heart caught the refrain;
Gave thanks for life, for days of gold or gray;
Gave praise for hope, though youth had fled away;
Strode past the littles that the years had won,
Rejoiced in higher living just begun.

A MAN ON THE ROCKS!

BY REV. EDWARD A. RAND.

The river was rising. That was not strange; the mountains in the far rear of the river were just reservoirs of water, and it only needed the heavy rain to send a quickened and enlarged current down into the lowlands.

Amy Barker, one of the young teachers of the town, was thoughtfully watching the river, its frothing eddies by the shore and then a white, ragged, shivering play of water about the ledges protruding from the middle of the current and known as the Rocks.

"What are you thinking of?" asked a matronly voice. It was Mrs. Carl Nansen asking the question, a stout, well-dressed woman whose look and gait expressed decision and persistency.

"I was thinking," replied Amy with a voice showing peculiar susceptibility of feeling, "I was thinking what an image of our town is that unrest, and a growing unrest too!"

"How so, Miss Barker?"

"It seems to me we are a good deal stirred up by the fact that we are close to election day, and what the town will do in temperance matters is a matter of grave importance."

"Then you must be one of the voters. I am sure it doesn't trouble me—ha! ha! The men are the ones to manage those things."

Those knowing Mrs. Carl Nansen intimately would have laughed at this last sentence, could they have heard it. If anybody in town was a manager, and especially of Mr. Carl, it was Mrs. Carl. She and her husband were on the same side in political matters, and that side was her side. She now repeated her declaration, "The men are the ones to manage those things. I hate female conspicuousness. Let the men manage."

"And here is a specimen of their management, Mrs. Nansen." As the teacher spoke she pointed at a saloon on River street. "I don't mean to say that all men approve of that, for they don't. Some bravely oppose it. But such men are not in the majority. Now, I say let us women reinforce that minority."

"I am sure I don't believe in the saloons." This was true, and Carl Nansen voted accordingly. "Mr. Nansen does not believe in them, either. My feeling is that if the women vote, and vote some of them will for the first time at the coming election, it will be the poor element, the bad element, going to the polls."

"But where the women have the chance, it is not that element which is improving the opportunity. It is the intelligent element leading off—women who feel this responsibility and want to meet it, women who have been stirring up public opinion in this matter throughout the land."

"Oh, I don't believe in those reformers, and you must allow there are women both bright and good who don't want the ballot, and they are making something of a stir."

"Yes, and they are the ones rather than the men who are blocking this suffrage movement. But the point I wanted to make is that the poor element, the bad element, as you call it, hasn't shown interest thus far in this question, and they are not the ones who make the column of women voters where women have a chance. Conceding, though, that if woman suffrage should be established everywhere, some unworthy ones would vote, have you so little faith in your own sex as to think the vote of the unworthy women would swamp that of the women who are worthy? If women throughout the land should bring to bear upon public questions the weight of their better influence, would not the public gain? In this town, if the women do their duty at the coming election, will that blot stay on River street and blacken it?"

"Oh—I—I don't believe in women being so conspicuous," murmured Mrs. Nansen.

"See here; if you had a friend struggling out in that current, you would not hesitate to do everything in your power to effect his rescue. No matter how conspicuous such activity might make you, you would do it for another's sake. There is a worse current than any out in that river to which people are exposed. There is the drink habit sweeping thousands away, and what harm is there in the activity whose publicity means to keep posted in current politics, to be ready to act intelligently, and on election day to vote? The publicity is nothing compared with that of an effort before a crowd to pull a man out of the stream. You would not hesitate to act conspicuously for the sake of a friend in the river, would you?"

"My friends don't make such fools of themselves as to get into the river—ha! ha!" said Mrs. Nansen, turning from an argument she could not comfortably sustain.

"If they should make that mistake I believe you would do anything to get them out, and I can but believe you will help us election day, Mrs. Nansen."

"There," thought Amy, "I wanted to say something pleasant and not have her go away mad."

Amy went back to her home; Mrs. Nansen lingered by the river thinking. She did not care to confess to any one how seriously she was thinking.

The sun had set, the shadows were thickening and eve going out of sight the river looked uglier than ever.

There was something fascinating about it and when she turned away she soon came back to it.

"I shouldn't want any of my family to get into it, that's true, but as for that other matter, the drinking and the voting it down, I am going to keep quiet. Yes, quiet is the word. This being so conspicuous before the whole town, stirring up everybody, is not womanly. And as for getting into the river—why, hark! I do believe somebody is calling! Yes—hark!"

She ran to the river's edge.

"Hel-l-lp!" came the cry.

"Oh, I can just make out a form on—the Rocks. Why, where are all the men? Why don't somebody come? What shall I do? Well, I'll let him know there's a woman here!"

Mrs. Nansen raised her voice and she had a big quantity of it when all in motion. "Com-ing-g-g! Now for help. Oh, there is that saloon. I'll get help from them. Miss Barker talked about them—and I don't like them—but people are generous if they do drink. They say the generous ones are the drinking ones."

Just then the saloon was closed, for the keeper lacked help and going home to his supper was obliged to turn the key in the lock. He had got several customers boozy enough to stay on the benches before the door until he returned, and Mrs. Nansen ran up to these.

"Oh—oh—help, gentlemen!"

"What fur?"

"There's a man on the Rocks."

"Well—we—we—"

They had risen in their willingness but they staggered.

"Oh—oh, you can't help! What shall I—shall I do?"

As she looked about she saw a light in the windows of Rescue Hall near by. She now remembered that some kind of a temperance rally for men had been called at an early hour.

"I'll go there," she resolved.

In a few minutes she was walking up the aisle of Rescue Hall past rows of men.

"Everybody is seeing me," was her thought, "but I don't care. I'll save that poor fellow."

"What would Amy Barker say?"—was a thought beginning to develop within her, but Mrs. Nansen was resolute, and she walked straight to the chairman's desk. He bowed down to her, "Sir, there's a man out on the Rocks, can't your men help get him?"

The chairman, Stacy Lunt, rose promptly; "Gentlemen, there's a man out on the Rocks, our friend, Mrs. Nansen, says. This is a rescue meeting. Let's go to his rescue and finish our meeting afterwards."

What a rush there was out of the hall!

A boat was found on the bank of the river.

"It's not tied. It's that man's boat, I believe, the one on the Rocks. It's come ashore. We will take it," said the chairman.

A big crowd soon gathered, and watched the boat and its load of rescuers going off. The distance to be traversed was short, the man was rescued and brought ashore. "Why, why, Will!" screamed Mrs. Nansen.

It was Will Nansen, a young man of twenty. He had started from the other shore to cross the river in his boat. He had carelessly struck the Rocks, had been upset, had managed to seize a corner of the ledge and crawled upon the summit.

"Your mother did it," they told him. "She got us here."

"Well, mother," he said, "you must have stirred the town to save me, and I am thankful enough, I tell you."

"Yes," said Chairman Lunt, "the town is stirred; we have a crowd and we will finish our meeting here. Some of you have brought lanterns and we can go right on. What we men whom Mrs. Nansen stirred up want, is to have the women stir the town election day. Talk about Will Nansen out on the Rocks! How many are on the rock of intemperance? Will the women help us election day? Before we go farther in our meeting, let me ask the women for a show of hands!"

Mrs. Nansen had started off with Will, but hearing the appeal turned to hold up her hand.

The town was carried for temperance election day.

WHY SHOULD A CHURCH MEMBER BELONG TO THE W. C. T. U.?

BY MRS. SARAH D. LA FETRA.

"Do not the regular lines of church work sufficiently include work for temperance? Why should a busy church-member belong to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?" We answer, we belong

1. Because we believe that the saloon and its allies are the greatest obstacles which lie in the way of the triumph of Christ and His church in the world. The open saloon is blockading the highways along which must come the King in his beauty, and His triumphal reign cannot be ushered in until the dramshop is cleared away and institutions for man's elevation are substituted. The altars of our church are pitiably devoid of young men, and the pitfalls of vice in our large cities are crowded with them. Thus they are drawn farther and farther away from purity, the influence of a mother's prayers and the restraining and helpful ordinances of the church.

2. We belong because there is a stultifying lethargy on the part of the average church member regarding the evils of the saloon, and a disposition to evade responsibility. Consequently, the aroused and consecrated worker for souls must organize, agitate and cry aloud in behalf of "the slain of the daughters of my people." It is not enough that we offer a prayer occasionally for the downfall of the drink traffic; not enough that we have quarterly temperance Sunday-school lessons, and once or twice a year a good temperance sermon; not enough that the church periodically pass strong resolutions against the sale of intoxicating liquors. All these are good, but radical evils must have radical remedies, and the rank and file of our churches are conservative and slow to adopt any such measures.

3. We belong, because, while the evil of the saloon is almost universally acknowledged by the churches, yet there are weapons which must be wielded against the saloon before it is abolished which now cannot be freely advocated under the auspices of the church without dissension, which would be deplorable to many, even of our own white-ribboners. The church has not washed its hands from complicity with the saloon, and while declaring "that the liquor traffic cannot be legalized without sin," a majority of the voting membership sanction its perpetuation by their ballots, thereby insuring to the traffic the protection of government. In John's second epistle we read: "He that biddeth him godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." Does not government license bid godspeed to the saloon? It is clear to us that the liquor traffic must be outlawed by the vote of the church, but these subjects cannot be freely discussed under her auspices without a pitiful outcry of political preaching, restriction of man's personal liberty, etc.

4. We belong because the W. C. T. U. wipes out denominational lines in Christian work against this common foe to all, and realizes the Saviour's prayer that "they all may be one." This blending of women at the mercy seat has brought to them such a revelation of the Holy Spirit's power, such depths of love and peace and joy, that they are conscious that His favor crowns their work and that "He will finally subdue all enemies under His feet."

5. We belong because the missionary work of all our churches is handicapped in foreign countries by the rum sent out from this and other so-called Christian lands, to the natives whom our missionaries are making every sacrifice to reach and save. Contracts are made with citizens of this country to send thousands of gallons of rum per day to the Free States of the Congo, that gain may come into the unsanctified coffers of the rum trade. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, our first round-the-world missionary, found whole villages drunk with rum sent from Christian England and the United States, when she arrived with her message of gospel purity and love. God have pity, for the blood of these natives is yet upon our garments!

6. We belong because the Woman's Christian Temperance Union stands for the ecclesiastical emancipation of woman. "Go quickly and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead," said the angel to the women. They are preaching the risen Christ as acceptably and as effectively as any on whom holy hands have been laid in ordination by the church. Who that ever heard our sainted Mary T. Lathrap can doubt that she was called of God to preach the gospel? And yet, the church she loved and honored refused to recognize officially that call because she was a woman! I fully believe that thousands of souls who are now untouched, would be reached and saved annually if our churches would but acknowledge and officially recognize God's call to women to preach the gospel. Such convictions of duty have never come to me personally, so I may speak more freely in behalf of others. Our women, by their loyalty and devotion to the church (and women form two-thirds of its membership), their faithfulness under this system of injustice, are surely bringing nearer the glad day when there shall be no sex distinction in service for the King of Kings.

In the limited space at my command I have only been able to hint at a few of the good reasons why Christian women should belong to the W. C. T. U. Oh, woman, heed God's call to you! Join our ranks and in addition to your church work, work for Him along the lines of Prohibition and woman's emancipation. "This ought ye to do, and not to leave the other undone."

MISS AGNES SLACK.

The New Secretary of the World's W. C. T. U.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Miss Agnes E. Slack, the new corresponding secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., is a young woman of ability and independent means, who has had excellent advantages of education, and who comes of a family well known for its alert strength intellectually and its devotion to Christianity in action. Miss Slack is a member of the Woman's Liberal Federation executive committee which is the right arm of the Liberal party in England. She is also a member of the executive committee of the central suffrage society and of the same committee in the British Woman's Temperance Association, and she was chosen at the last convention honorable secretary of that society. Her home is in Derbyshire, where she was for some little time the only woman "Poor Law Guardian," though now there are several others. All matters associated with the poor law interest her greatly, and she devoted nearly the whole of her time last November in speaking at various strategic points in England on behalf of women candidates for poor law boards. It is well known that women are now fully acknowledged in this important branch of public work, and are moving forward in harness to the great advantage of those societies for which they work.

Miss Slack is best known as a speaker on temperance and political platforms. She has for years taken a vivid interest in all social movements, and her visits to prisons and workhouses in all parts of England have helped to make her an out and out temperance reformer. For this reason she now devotes her time chiefly to forwarding the interests of the World's W. C. T. U. and in speaking for that society and for the B. W. T. A.

The religious aspect of the white ribbon movement doubly endears the work to Miss Slack, for she has all her life been closely connected with the Wesleyan Branch of the Christian church, and for some years has been a class leader. Recently she was made delegate to a district synod and spoke before its members to excellent acceptance. As a speaker she is eloquent, clear-voiced and the mistress of pure grammatical English.

On the evening of June 16, when more than two hundred women were preaching in various parts of London, Miss Slack preached in John Wesley's pulpit at City Road Chapel. Her text was, "Ye are the salt of the earth," and her sermon was full of terse sentences forcefully delivered. The press commented upon her address in terms of eulogy, characterizing it as "closely reasoned and powerful." Her words were an earnest plea for temperance and for womanhood and were backed by the strong evidence of her own experience, for Miss Slack has visited many of the great prisons of this country and her facts are consequently first hand, not made up from "Blue books."

When the Convention was over Miss Slack went by Dr. Lunn's invitation to Grindelwald where she had a place on the program. Her brother, J. Bamford Slack, Esq., and his wife, are among the leaders of Christian work in London. Miss Slack lives with her earnest-hearted mother, now advanced in years, and her devotion as a daughter equals her devotion as a worker in the cause of "God and Home and Every Land."

With a secretary thus well equipped and an assistant secretary like Miss Anna A. Gordon, who is in her nineteenth year of active association with me in all branches of white ribbon work and stands at the head of our juvenile department, we may certainly feel that we have much to expect of work to be accomplished in the next two years. These ladies are now preparing the minutes of the recent great Convention which will soon be out and may be had by addressing either of them at Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London, E. C.

THE WHITE CROSS BRANCH.

BY REV. J. B. WELTY.

[Secretary of the White Cross Branch of the Purity Department.]

The White Cross means purity reform. Specifically, it means a society of men, the object of which is the promotion of purity, the suppression of impurity and the protection of womankind from wrong and degradation.

The establishing of the White Cross Branch of the purity department of the National W. C. T. U. means that the good, irrepressible women of this great society are going to push purity reform among men. They hold among themselves mothers' meetings in the interests of purity, and encourage the organization of White Shield societies, which, wherever established, have proved a power for noble womanhood.

But mothers and daughters constitute only one-half of society. If society is to be uplifted, fathers and sons must also be awakened and enlisted in this much needed reform. There must be agitation, education and organization for purity among men. Indeed, it is here that such work is most needed.

Let it be frankly admitted, for it is true, that the precepts of purity are most violated on the male side of the human family. There it is that we find coarseness, vulgarity, foolish talking, vile practices and unbridled passion. It will not be denied that men are the aggressors in lust and seduction. With purse and passion they hunt for the precious life. The libertine is the precursor of the courtesan. The very boys are the victims of uncleanness before we are aware of it. Those who are not blind to the state of affairs existing everywhere in our broad land know that there is need for White Cross or purity work among men, the youth and the boys.

Let it be clearly understood that any effort at purity reform which fails to push the movement vigorously among men and youth must be a dismal failure. Education must be given where ignorance is the greatest and where conscience is the dullest; the cry of alarm and warning must be lifted up where danger is most imminent; the angel of protection must fly to those who are most beset with the snares of temptation. We need to push purity reform among men for the great reason that we must get this movement into legislation, into law, into our courts. No subject is well handled, or secures proper consideration in this democratic country until it gets into politics. The cry that we must keep moral questions out of politics is nothing but prejudice, cowardice or sophistry. In the government of men political questions are moral questions, and moral questions are political questions. Men cannot rid themselves of the moral quality that is part of every issue.

As yet, men alone have the handling of politics, the making and executing of laws. They sit in courts, compose juries and constitute the police force of the state. They run public and civil affairs. Hence, the importance of getting our purity movement thoroughly going among men. For example, take the abuses and evils of marriage and divorce—evils that strike at the very root of society. They can be corrected only by legislation. Bad laws must be repealed and good laws must be enacted. But such measures can come only when we have wise, good, clean legislators; and such legislators can be had only as we get them through political parties.

White Cross work is the presentation and discussion of the many questions that concern purity reform. It is the arrest of thought, the awakening of conscience, the enlightenment of judgment and the stirring of the noble emotions of manly chivalry.

The women of the W. C. T. U. have done well to start this White Cross branch of purity work. But they can do more. They must do more if any good is to come of the movement. They must push the work. The local society is the strategic point for every line of work undertaken by the National W. C. T. U. Through it communities are reached. It opens the doors for popular education on this subject, or by being idle or indifferent keeps the doors closed. It is through the local union that the White Cross, in its initiative, must be introduced in the various communities. Will it take hold of the movement and help it?

The secretary of the White Cross Branch does not care to push this matter ungraciously upon the unions. But he is ready to coöperate with them. "We are laborers together with God." Write to him for any information concerning the work of the Branch, and send five cents in stamps for a copy of the new "White Cross Manual" just published by the Purity Department.

INDIANS AND TEMPERANCE.

BY JEANNETTE C. ALTER.

The past decade, fraught with rapidly changing events to the white man, has wrought an entire revolution in many of our Indian tribes. Since the passage in Congress of the Indian Severalty Bill, many Indians have found themselves beyond reservation barriers, and are being introduced to the rights of citizenship, with all its attendant forces for good or evil. Some have gone down, because this right, which should have uplifted and led them on to self-support and greater progress, has also placed the open saloon before them, and handicapped, as all Indians are, by the inborn appetite for strong drink, they fall an easy prey to these death-traps, the rights of which are studiously protected by the courts.

An observer has said, "whisky will finish the Indian faster than did the reservation system." God pity them! These two evils are the Scylla and Charybdis rocks in their pathway, and to avoid the one, means, in the judgment of many, to be hopelessly shipwrecked on the other. There are those who protest that the Indians are still in a state of transition, and are not yet ready for franchise. A glance backward over a century of mental stagnation within reservation walls, will convince any one that before reservation life will fit them for this change, the soul of the last red man will have made its final transition to the life beyond, and the verdict appears to have gone forth that it will be better to hold back over two hundred thousand souls in reservation bondage than to interfere with the drink traffic, the greatest foe that has ever menaced the Indian race.

If the struggles of our Indians against temptation were generally known, there would be less skepticism expressed, looking toward their future possibilities as a race. In many cases, as has been suggested, the bad Indian is only the result of bad white man and bad whisky. The Indian gets the blame and the whisky, and the bad white man gets the chattels—and the guilt. Many of our Indians are fully awake to the danger and misery that follows the drink habit.

At a recent meeting an old Indian mother spoke out of the fullness of her heart: "When my sons are at town I listen all the time for the footsteps of one who will tell me that some great evil has come upon them because of whisky." An old man said: "It does not take a wise man to tell us what whisky has done for the race, but it will take a man of brains to tell us how it may be put away"—a delicate but doubtful compliment to the white man, who claims there is no remedy for the evil.

Another spoke with all the fervor native to his race: "It is our strong young men who are most tempted," and then three times he repeated the cry, "Oh, I wish the whisky could be put away." This is only the echo of the cry of other nations, and these cries redoubled many times, are borne back to the helpless, hopeless hearts of those who sit in the shadow of this mountain of evil.

But since it cannot now be put away, let us use some of the means God is placing in our hands to raise the Indians above the saloon. Some one has wisely said: "Let us realize that what we have taken away from the Indians is, not only lands, not only wealth, but something infinitely higher, that power and habit of self-support which is the root of self-respect and growth, not in riches only, but in mind and soul. Nothing done for the Indian stays done or carries out its full purpose unless it leads him into industrious, Christian life." And this life for the Indian can be gained only by the sympathy and coöperation of Christian people. Then the reservation shackles that are gradually being loosed from hand and heart need not again be welded on to mind and soul by the drink habit.

Our Indian W. C. T U., the first of its kind in Oregon, organized six months ago with twenty-five members, now numbers ninety-five, including honorary members, and more are being added at each meeting. All routine business is disposed of by our executive committee, and every Thursday afternoon is devoted to one or more of the departments that can be made practicable to them. Social purity, hygiene, talks to mothers, are all interwoven with gospel temperance and are taught through an interpreter, with the open Bible in our hands.

Are they in earnest? The Indian is not a creature of impulse, and every step in advance is taken by them with that degree of caution and hesitancy formed by years of unsuccessful dealing with treacherous whites. Many of them realize that they are a dying race, and that strong drink is only hastening the end, and they have been roused on this question as never before.

There are grand opportunities for temperance work among the Indians all over our land, and may it be ours to roll away the stone that bars the pathway of many to spiritual life, and to unloose the bands of heathenism and superstition that have bound them these many years.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

Yesterday I sat in the silence of Willard Hall, and listened to its speech. Each column said to its fellow, "It's coming." Sunlight and shadow kissed each other, saying, "It's almost here."

Marble said to marble, "We are ready," and the leader opened wide the door, saying, "Come in, King Jesus, and take the place." And He came.

. . . . . .

In spite of the white heat that lay on the city fully three hundred people, mostly men, were at the noon service, and three penitent souls knelt at the altar and found peace.

. . . . . .

Three men stood for a long time at the entrance of Willard Hall. They discussed the building, its surroundings, its magnificence, and took notice that it stood in the center of the greatest city in the country.

"It's a great monument," said one.

"Here for centuries to wonder at," said the other, and children's children will say, "Behold how those women loved."

Yes, and who knows but ages hence they will be immortalized by the side of the Deborahs and Esthers and Marys of the olden time.

"Faith is the victory,
Faith is the victory,
Faith is the victory,
That overcomes the world."

The whole audience, led by our trio of male singers, were softly singing the above, which is a great favorite with us.

The two strangers from the coast were visibly moved. They were under the spell of the faith that saves.

. . . . . .

One day the mail brought me a letter from Rev. Walters, of Kansas City, who was to be the guest of Bishop Fallows for several days. This letter contained not only words of cheer but offers of help. We extended to him our welcome to the platform, and wished that more of our good hearted brothers would remember us in the same way.

. . . . . .

A. H. Kaylor is accompanied by his own singer, Mr. Jones, a student of the Moody Institute, gifted with a marvelous voice, admirably suited to evangelistic work. He was a favorite member of the late Emma Abbott troupe, when the Lord called him for His own work. Blessed is the man gifted in song and able to sing souls into heaven.

. . . . . .

Let us all lift up our hearts to God at the noontide hour and be satisfied with nothing short of a demonstration of His power in Willard Hall.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Jane Cakebread.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There is a woman in London named Jane Cakebread, who is brought constantly to public notice on account of the recurrent charges of drunk and disorderly. In fact, she has been arrested two hundred and seventy-seven times, and every one who knows about her naturally asks, What can be done for such a woman as that? Much interest is being shown in the question and I have taken the opportunity to call attention once more to the scheme that is just being set on foot by the British Woman's Temperance Association which will enable magistrates to consign such a woman, if they deem it wise, to what is practically a reformatory, instead of to short terms of imprisonment.

A large farm has been secured in Surrey on which cottages are in process of erection, and a little village is rising, clustered round a main building. Here habitual inebriates will be received for not less than one year. Each cottage accommodates a group of women with a matron, and thus a small family circle is formed, which will enable the sister in charge to deal individually with her patients and remove from the undertaking all the features of an "institution."

In the main building the women will dine together, but their other meals will be taken in the cottages, and a more domestic life will be secured in this way. The patients will be employed on the farm in poultry rearing, fruit picking, bee keeping, flower growing and dairy work. The maximum charge will be five shillings, but where patients can afford no payment cases will be taken free. One cottage will be set aside as a nursery for infants in order to enable mothers to become inmates of the home without being parted from their babies. As those who have studied this question know only too well that inebriety is often most common when a woman has a young child, one of the most frequent difficulties will thus be overcome—one which often prevents women from seeking any place of safety in order to conquer the drink crave.

We shall, when the home is ready, be prepared to take Jane Cakebread, and will gladly do our utmost to save this most unfortunate victim from the misery of her surroundings.

A GREETING FROM OVER THE SEA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am hoping from time to time that you will be the friend who will give me the opportunity of greeting our many brave workers and comrades in the United States.

On August 27 a meeting of the general officers of the World's W. C. T. U. was held at the Priory, Reigate. The position of our long-suffering sisters in Armenia seemed to us to demand the attention of the W. W. C. T. U., and we resolved that each of our countries should be urged at once to sign a petition entreating the Turkish government to desist from persecuting the Armenians.

A most encouraging report came to us from Belgium. Our newly appointed president, Madame Chantraine, is working most vigorously for the W. C. T. U. there. She has published articles in the leading papers of Belgium, Switzerland and France, and has sent circulars to the Queen of Belgium, the Countess of Flanders and to the bishops and ministers of provincial governments.

The temperance party in England have had a rude awakening, but they are awake, and feel they must be up and doing to an extent unprecedented in recent years. We are being urged to give up the idea of such "extreme" legislation as that embodied in Sir William Harcourt's bill, and to go in for a "moderate" and "reasonable" measure, such as some of the measures which give you in the United States the "blessings" of high license! The temperance party, properly so-called, will do nothing of the sort. Instead of restricting their demand they are likely to make it more comprehensive. Sir William Harcourt's bill did not give full local option; hotels, railway department-rooms and eating houses were exempted from its operation, and public houses, the analogies of your saloons, could not be closed except by a majority of two-thirds of those voting, and that only after the lapse of three years from the date of the passing of the act.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson has already caused notice to be given that in the present session of Parliament he will again introduce his own Local Veto Bill, which subjects all liquor licenses to the will of the people. But he will also help all efforts made in good faith to restrict the traffic. He lately issued a manifesto, of which the following is the concluding paragraph:

"Speaking for myself, I cannot remember any measure which has been introduced into the House for the last quarter of a century or so, which was calculated to curb the common enemy, for which I have not voted and generally spoken. I believe that the Prohibitionists in the House will continue on the same lines now. They will heartily support either the government, the opposition, or private members in any steps which they may take for really attacking the great drink power; but at the same time they will never relinquish their just claim that no licensing authority shall be permitted to override the clearly expressed opinion of communities by establishing or continuing drink shops therein in the face of such an expression of public opinion. This is the real Home Rule for England at which we aim, and which is quite consonant with most of the licensing schemes which are now being suggested both by Liberals and by Conservatives. Only one thing appears to be quite certain, and that is that the question cannot rest. For my part I shall not be surprised if, even from this Parliament, the composition of which is supposed to be so favorable to Liquordom, a measure of deliverance may in due time be obtained."

Those who know Sir Wilfrid best think most of him as a wise and prescient leader.

There is one aspect of the judgment under which Lady Henry Somerset has been inhibited from continuing to refuse the renewal of a lease to an inn on her estate at Reigate, which has not been sufficiently noticed in this country. The decision of the Divisional Court of Chancery against Lady Henry turns on the fact that a license to sell intoxicating drink greatly increases the value of the premises to which it is attached. Lady Henry was willing, in the public interest, to forego the pecuniary advantage which she derived from the sale of intoxicants in the hotel in question, but the court held that, as life tenant merely, she was not entitled "to injure the pecuniary interests of her successor or successors" by putting a stop to such sale. The point is that the landholders of this country derive a large revenue from the privilege to sell drink on their estates, although that privilege is not held by themselves, and that when they denounce the iniquity (so-called) of taking away a poor man's license without compensation, they are very often thinking merely of the unearned wealth which the sale of drink on their estates brings to themselves.

A National Temperance Conference convened by the National Temperance League, will be held in the ancient city of Chester in the beginning of October. Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson will preside. The mayor of Chester will hold a reception in the municipal buildings on Saturday, September 28. On Sunday, 29th, the Lord Bishop of London will preach in Chester cathedral. On Monday, September 30, the Duke of Westminster, who is probably the richest man in England, will give a reception at his magnificent residence, Eaton Hall, which is in the neighborhood of Chester. The sittings of the conference will be held daily from October 1 to October 4, when papers contributed by experts on various aspects of the temperance question will be read and discussed.

I shall eagerly watch for the reports of the Baltimore Convention. Our president will soon be leaving us for her native land. All loyal white-ribboners will wish a loving Godspeed to Miss Willard and Miss Anna Gordon, when they leave England on September 21. Our loved English leader, Lady Henry Somerset, will deeply miss the friend who is always loyal and true; but nowadays the distance between England and America seems a mere trivial detail.

God bless you all, my dear American sisters. I hope often to be cheered and helped by letters from you.

Your sincere sister worker,
AGNES E. SLACK,

INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is a "far cry" from London to the Swiss borderland to share in a temperance conference. But there be charms many, in these days of rapid and luxurious transit, to be found in a "run on the continent." These reflections put in concrete form a host of pleasant memories of recent travel; across Belgium (with a brief but pleasant stay in gay Brussels); into Germany—bright, noisy, charming Cologne and its transcendental Cathedral taking two days to "do"; the picturesque rapid Rhine, with vine clad hills, towering heights, sylvan valleys, quiet villages, prosperous towns, ruined castles, and ancient legends galore, two days more; Strasburg and its great Cathedral, wonderful astronomical clock, fine new "Schloss," and memories of the great war; through the valley of the Vosges—the "blue Alsatian mountains;" into and about Switzerland—Lucerne, the Rigi, Pilatus, the Gothard railway—upward seven thousand feet toward the clouds, with views of the snowy Alps, frequent steamer runs to many picturesque points on the lake of the Four Cantons; then three days in Basle, for the series of temperance meetings.

Basle is a busy, thriving, clean and interesting town. The Rhine turns northward here, and divides the town in two. There is in Basle a vigorous temperance movement based on both social and religious principles. It was, therefore, a fit place for holding the Congress—the fifth of a series held in Europe, the first at Zurich (Switzerland) and others at Antwerp (Belgium), Christiania, (Norway) and The Hague (Holland). The leading temperance spirits are teachers and students of the University. One of the former, Professor Burckhardt, a young and brilliant scholar, was president of the organizing committee, and chairman throughout the three days' meetings.

Seven o'clock in the morning is early for a temperance meeting to begin. Yet, allowing for one hour's difference between mid-Europe and Greenwich time, that was the hour at which on three days towards the end of August at Basle, some four hundred enthusiasts, drawn from a dozen countries, including over thirty well-known English temperance reformers, and representing every phase of temperance effort, began the sittings of the "Fifth International Congress against the abuse of Alcoholic Liquors." They did but follow the Swiss custom, of starting work and business early, and taking a break of two to three hours after midday. Besides the Congress proper, there was a banquet, and two evening exhibitions by electric light of lantern views, illustrative of temperance teaching in English Bands of Hope, and of the evil effects of drink on the African native races. On one of the evenings the open air concert, given in honor of the Congress by the students of the universities of Basle and Zurich, was kept up till the small hours. The program included the national anthems of the countries represented, by singers dressed in the appropriate national costumes.

Temperance principles, as understood in England and America, are not far advanced on the continent of Europe, but great progress has been made of late years, largely due to the holding of these series of congresses. Each biennial meeting has marked a further advance, and at Basle, though advocates of moderate drinking were neither absent nor silent, they were in a decided minority, and their arguments were generally derided while thoroughgoing sentiments were vigorously applauded.

This progress is the result of the interest in the congresses shown by English temperance reformers and societies, and the encouragement thus given to small but earnest bands of teetotal workers in various continental places. The Basle congress was also the largest yet held, there being registered no fewer than four hundred and eighty delegates and members. Of these, over one hundred were from Basle, and one hundred and forty-two from other places in Switzerland; thirty-three from England, twenty-one from France, forty-one from Holland, forty-one from Germany, one from Italy, one from Sweden, six from Belgium, seven from Austria, eight from Russia, five from Norway and one from the United States. The latter, however, was a minus quantity. Mr. Gallus Thomann, representative of the United States Brewers' Association, though registered as a member, was not present. He sent a protest against some strictures passed upon him at the last meeting, which was answered by Mr. Malins, of the Good Templars, showing Mr. Thomann to be still a brewer's agent.

Among the delegates and members two figures stood out with great picturesqueness—those of His Excellency, J. Heemskerk, the "grand old man" of Holland, twice Prime Minister of the Netherlands, who as chairman of the Congress Permanent Committee, gave a lengthy résumé of temperance progress during the past two years: and the Bishop of St. Gall, specially deputed to represent His Holiness, the Pope, who delivered an eloquent address in favor of total abstinence. The French Minister of Education was represented, as was the Swiss Government Alcohol Monopoly, which, with many another experimental method of dealing with the drink question was expounded. English, German and Swiss doctors combined to prove in their papers the baneful effects of alcohol. Dr. C. R. Drysdale, Dr. J. J. Ridge and Rev. Dawson Burns treated respectively, "Therapeutics without Alcohol," "Scientific Reasons for Total Abstinence from Alcohol," and "The Treatment of Diseases Without Alcohol at the London Temperance Hospital." All three were strongly averse to the use of alcohol, and presented many striking facts and figures in support of the contentions advanced.

A Norwegian essayist gave details of the new law in that country by which voters, both men and women, are now enabled to vote for or against the establishment or continuance of spirit-selling companies, and which allots a third of the profits from spirit-selling to the support of temperance societies and other beneficial objects. But another writer on the Gothenburg system claimed that it had not lessened spirit drinking or drunkenness, but had greatly increased beer drinking, though in country districts the power of direct veto had caused vast improvement.

Other papers read treated of Swiss temperance societies, English preventive and rescue work, drink statistics, liquor and African natives (in regard to which a strong resolution was passed urging increased duties, and where possible prohibition), the "tyranny of the liquor traffic" (by the Dean of Hereford), the position and aims of various temperance movements in Germany, Holland, Sweden and Russia, or among particular classes, as students, peasantry, doctors, and with the influences in favor of temperance to be exercised by such counteractive agencies as coffee houses and reading rooms. Miss Willard sent a paper on the "White Ribbon movement," and it will be printed in full in the official Report volume.

In all the program contained the titles of fifty papers, most of which were read and some discussed at length. Both the World's W. C. T. U. and the National British Woman's Temperance Association were represented, the former by Mrs. Selmer (Denmark), Mrs. Osborn (England), and Miss Trygg (Finland).

London, Eng. HENRY J. OSBORN.

I COULD bring you evidence after evidence of the wonderful power that has been manifested simply by the quiet witness of signing the pledge and carrying it home to the family in which you live; not pharisaically finding fault with everybody but calmly and quietly bearing what little obloquy it may bring you, until by degrees your example spreads and the power reaches to other hearts, and God shall give you the glorious happiness of having been the means of leading others out of darkness into light. In every department of the national life the gospel temperance movement is making itself felt. When they want to ride a bicycle race from the postoffice in London to the postoffice in Edinburg, they do it on cold water and not on alcohol, because they want to win. When they send over a team of football Maoris from New Zealand they make them sign a promise that they won't take alcohol in England, because they want to win the football cups and they know they can win them better on water than on alcohol.—Canon Wilberforce.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—It is some weeks since we had a question-box, so the order of this column will be

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES.

A Canadian sister working for a time under American skies has met a perplexity that comes up semi-occasionally, now in one form, now in another. She says:

QUESTION.—Is it important when seeking pecuniary aid to know from what particular source the money comes? In my own country we take silver collections at public meetings, and without doubt much of this small coin has passed through the till of the liquor dealer. Ought the W. C. T. U. ask alms indiscriminately from a public audience in towns where liquor is sold? May we not hope that as the silver and the gold are the Lord's, it can be freed from contamination when used in His work, and the money of the liquor seller might be used to redeem some of the evil that his business has wrought?

ANSWER.—If we tried to make any such distinction as our friend hints at, where would we draw the line? Every coin in the collector's basket might have at one time been the price of blood or shame. If a sum of money was offered to a union from one affiliated with liquor interests, and offered as bribe money, hush money or from any purpose known to be otherwise than a helpful one, it should be promptly rejected. But if under the appeal of a stirring temperance address a liquor dealer be temporarily touched with remorse and drops some of his ill-gotten gains into the basket, who dare refuse? I think we might well be glad to redeem a little of the coin so sadly—shall I say—earned?

Q.—"Imagine my surprise," writes a Michigan sister, "to see in your column of Home Hints, alcohol recommended for use in cleaning nickel. Can we not find a substitute? I have a friend whose brother was for many years a reformed man, but the smell of the poison caused his fall and the last I heard of him he was in an asylum."

A.—We cannot exercise too great care while there is a possibility of some tempted one being hurt. A great many total abstainers do not yet believe in the striking out of alcohol from the list of drugs to be used in the arts or for such purposes as the above. Individually we must settle the question by taking care that our personal liberty give none occasion of stumbling. Perhaps some one can give us a safe cleanser for nickel. We always want to know of substitutes for any use of alcohol.

Q.—It seems to me that I have read somewhere resolutions to the effect that it is believed that alcoholic stimulants are not necessary in typhoid fever. How is this?

A.—I know nothing of the special resolutions to which you refer, but physicians who treat typhoid fever without the use of alcoholics are no longer "few and far between." I was talking with a physician of long experience this morning, who told me that the only two typhoid fever patients who have died under his care were people who drank. He never resorts to alcoholic stimulation. In our own National Temperance Hospital we have a practical illustration of the fact that alcoholics may be—nay, must be,—discarded in the treatment of all classes of diseases.

Q.—Some time ago through the influence of our local W. C. T. U. license was refused to saloons in our county. The saloon element in turn saw to it that the drug stores did not secure license. Doctors in sympathy with the license party have been prescribing whisky to typhoid fever patients, and claim they cannot get their orders filled in the county. This is creating sentiment against the W. C. T. U. and paving the way for saloons next year. What would you advise us to do?

A.—Certainly the enemy is ingenious. This matter has paved the way for a great deal of agitation and you can do no better than create public sentiment the other way! What papers have you in your county? Can you not get some physician of prohibition principle to write some stirring articles on the subject of no alcoholics in medical treatment and secure their insertion in these papers? Try to arrange for a series of attractive, popular lectures on the deleterious effect of alcohol on the tissues of the body. Push your scientific temperance instruction department most vigorously. Try to reach the physicians personally. Buy all the good leaflets on the subject and sow the county "knee-deep" with them. The W. T. P. A. can furnish you with "Doctor and Druggist," by Frances E. Willard, "Is Alcohol a Stimulant?" a symposium from eminent physicians, "Spirituous Liquors not Needed in Medicine or the Arts," by Dr. J. R. Nichols, "The Use of Alcohol in Medicine," by N. S. Davis, M. D. Every member of your county W. C. T. U. ought to know for herself why alcohol not only may not but must not be administered, and then put all her strength into disseminating this knowledge. May you have the victory!

MOTHER EXPERIENCE.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

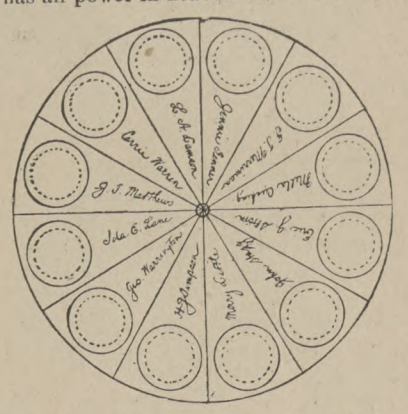
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.—Mark 11:24.

The Temple prayer band continues to increase. It now numbers eighty-two (two of whom are men) women and men of unfaltering faith. Something must give way when prayers from such a company are going up to the One who has all power in heaven and earth.

DO YOU WANT TO DO YOUR PART IN PAYING FOR THE TEMPLE?



SEND A 2c. STAMP FOR A WHEEL TO MRS. CARSE AT THE TEMPLE.

Wheels are the fad of the day. Everybody who can raise money enough to own one is spinning along the boulevards of all our great cities, proud of the ownership of that which gives them so much pleasure. Let us make the Temple Wheel the fad of the W. C. T. U.—a medium through which we shall speed heavenward. For we know that every unselfish act we perform fits us the better for our heavenly inheritance. Those that take a Temple Wheel and go forth among their friends to get it filled, with the loving thought in their heart that they are doing it unto the Master for the advancement of His kingdom in the world, are laying up for themselves pleasures for evermore.

A white-ribboner, Mrs. Emma B. Nash, writes that as she was reading the Temple Items of July 25 a new light broke upon her. She says: "I visited our Temple during the World's Fair, and felt deeply interested in it, but something kept the burden of it from me, but now I feel as though that 'thick cable' encircled my neck also, and I am determined to help in every way possible. It is a splendid thing for us to have a house, but really it is not ours until we have helped pay for it."

One of God's hidden ones, who does not give her name, sends a dollar which she earned picking berries. She says with great truth and directness: "I wanted to help even a little, for if we fail to secure the amount needed I should always have a feeling that I was to blame for not doing what I could." May God speedily quicken the conscience of all our good women and show them that each have a part that none other can do in this great enterprise.

All honor to little, ten-year old Vernah Edwards, Coxsackie, N. Y., who has filled ten Wheels during vacation, and now sends for five more, which she expects to fill during school days, in spite of her studies, which include music. And now Vernah gets ten beautiful gifts, besides having helped the cause so much. There is not a boy or girl in our ranks but could get at least one Wheel filled if they desired to put their neck in the cable and give a pull.

How many hands have been folded in their last sleep that have helped to fill Wheels. Mrs. M. Moore, Crary, N. D., writes: "My little ones think they can each fill another Wheel. Bruce has filled one; my own dear mother put in the first dime only a few days before she was called up higher. She will not help him fill this one, but her ever true principles for right and temperance are handed down to children's children."

Iowa has done nobly this year. If all states had a president as loyal to the interests of the Temple as Mrs. Dunham there would be a wonderful impetus given to the work. The fourth W. C. T. U. district of Iowa has sent a pledge of $100 by its secretary, Mrs. Bertha J. Bowers. Mrs. Thera B. True, secretary of the twenty-third district, Iowa W. C. T. U., has also sent a pledge for $100 to place the name of its honored president, Mrs. Clara P. White, on the Iowa tablet. Mrs. W. K. Mandigs writes that the tenth Minnesota W. C. T. U. district, at their late meeting, pledged $100 to place the name of their honored president, Mrs. S. B. Irwin, on the state tablet in Willard Hall. A hundred ladies at the meeting promised to raise one dollar each. They are to write out how they earned it. This will be published in book form as a souvenir of the work. Why would this not be a good plan for other unions and districts to follow, raising money for the Temple

The Wrightstown union, Penn's Park, Pa., sends through its president, Mrs. L. K. Smith, $45, which completes their pledge. Thirty-six dollars and forty-seven cents has been received from Mrs. H. R. McIlvain on the pledge of the Lisbon, North Dakota, W. C. T. U. The Lima, N. Y., union sends $30 on its pledge through Mrs. J. M. Bishop.

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

THE NEARNESS.

BY REV. LEVI GILBERT, D. D.

I know, since that dear speech, the sands
  Of centuries have run,
And earth for near two thousand times
  Has circled 'round the sun;
But yester morning, when I feared,
  Distinct to me He said:
"Let not your heart be troubled more,
  Nor let it be afraid."

I know how different the folk
  Who listened then might seem—
How singular their ways and dress
  Our modern world would deem;
But though of other mien and garb,
  And not of Jewish race,
Last night to me He came and spoke:
  "I leave you peace—My peace."

I know the land is far away,
  And many a sea-league parts,
Where first the gracious accents fell
  On sorrowing, anxious hearts;
But, as I wept to-day in grief,
  Right here I caught so plain:
"I will not leave you comfortless,
  I'll surely come again."

I know how old the language is
  In which the Master taught—
How strange to me its syllables,
  Conveying meaning naught;
But just now, in my weariness,
  In mother tongue expressed,
I heard: "Come, all ye laden ones,
  And I will give you rest."

I know how glad the people were Beside Lake Galilee;
But the sweet words that solaced them
  Have calm and cheer for me:
And this, too, is a holy land,
  And Jesus walks our streets;
He enters every humble home
  And blesses all He meets!

PRACTICAL PEOPLE.

BY EMMA HARRIMAN.

Mrs. Wright laid down her pen, got up and walked out to the veranda, her usually cheerful face a trifle saddened.

"I don't know as it amounts to much after all," she said to herself. "A few of us drudge and toil and try to get up enthusiasm and the majority remain just as indifferent as ever. There is no one of any influence to help us."

Just then she happened to raise her eyes. There stretched the mountains in a protecting semi-circle; the Sierras with Old Baldy calm and majestic, peak after peak, range behind range, swinging around toward the ocean, ending in the rounded tops of the Santa Monica foothills.

"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem so the Lord is round about them that fear him." The words said themselves over to her, half in comfort, half reproof.

"No one of any influence," she cried to herself. "Oh, Lord, forgive me. Help me never to forget that one with thee can chase a thousand and two can put ten thousand to flight."

She drew a chair out where she could have a good view of the mountains, brought out her writing and prepared to go on with her work.

A nervous little woman came hurrying around the corner of the house.

"Mercy, Sarah," she cried, "if you aren't writing at this time in the morning. Some of your temperance work, of course. I don't see how you find the time. I haven't a minute and I'm at something all the time. I never take a book into my hands except to dust it. I had to stop right in the midst of my baking and come over here after sugar. I hadn't enough to finish my pies."

"Come in, Carrie, and rest awhile; you look tired; or sit here on the veranda, it's cooler."

"Oh, I haven't a minute to stop, I'm so hurried."

"And you always are."

"I know it."

"Why did you make pies? Fresh fruit is better and more wholesome."

"You couldn't make George and the children think so."

"Did you ever try?"

"Well, not much. I like to have things nice, you know. What are you doing now?"

"We are going to have a special meeting, and I am arranging for speakers, and—"

"You always are at something of the sort, and what does it amount to? Now, you know, I'm very practical and you never were. Mother always told us that. I like to see practical results. What does all your temperance work amount to, anyway?"

"A great deal. We stopped the saloon coming in here. We got twenty young men to sign the pledge. We've been trying to teach the young mothers, and—"

"Yes, I know, but you're mixed up with a lot of cranks. There's Mrs. Rand, now, she's smart but eccentric, and—"

"She looks on this world and its affairs as Christians profess to, though many of them act as if the temporal affairs of life were all there is worth striving for. Mrs. Rand believes her soul is of more account than her body, her mind, also. She prefers a good lecture to a rich cake, and would rather go without a new pair of gloves than a course of scientific lectures."

"I wouldn't go as shabby as she does for anything. If I couldn't have better clothes I'd stay at home."

"She is fond of pretty things but as she can't have both she takes the most important."

"Well, I think you're a queer, impractical set, and George does, too."

"We can afford to be called impractical; we are in pretty good company. Morse was impractical when he talked of his telegraph. Audubon, too, when he lay under the trees and watched birds. The old farmers who hoed their corn fields near him thought him utterly worthless, but his studies of birds have been worth more to the world than all their corn fields put together. So of Goodyear, striving after his process to harden rubber, but what would we do without all our hot-water bags and combs and buttons and air pillows and beds in the hospitals? Doubtless Mrs. Stowe was thought 'rather peculiar' when she rocked her baby and wrote Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"Of course you can talk it all out straight. You always could, but it doesn't convince me. I like to see women do their housework properly and—"

"So do I but 'properly' does not mean slavishly. Some women make a fetish of it, they fall down and worship it. Others dislike it, but it doesn't do for anybody smaller than Mrs. Livermore and Frances Willard to say so. And if one doesn't like sewing circles and gossip one must keep rather quiet about it or be thought peculiar."

"Nonsense, Sarah! Well, you and I never did think alike."

"No, not since the days when I felt rich with my new books and you reminded me how many ribbons their price would have bought."

"You never did care to look like other folks."

"You are greatly mistaken. I cared most to cultivate the part of my nature that is imperishable. I consider that reformers who look ahead and work for the future, making any necessary sacrifice to help bring about improved conditions, are the practical people. And we shall be all ready to go to work in heaven, for the spiritual and intellectual forces rule there. What will the excessively practical people do when they get there? Will they sweep the golden streets, dust the harps and rake the leaves from under the tree of life?"

"What a woman you are, Sarah," said her sister with a laugh, "you always have such strange ideas. Now, who but you would ever have thought of that? I told you you were all a little off. I think I must be, standing this way and talking with my pies not finished. I'll run out and help myself to the sugar; go right on with your writing."

"You had better join us, Carrie, it would be such a help to you in bringing up the children."

"Can't afford the dollar; that would buy Hattie a pretty handkerchief."

WITHIN ALMSHOUSE WALLS.

BY SARAH A. MORRISON.

All over this land Christian influence has provided places of refuge and shelter for the unfortunate and outcast. While the public provides food and clothing, only occasionally is provision made for labor whereby the inmates may retain their self-respect, or for spiritual help to those who have followed a sinful life almost to the bitter end.

Ten years of work and visitation in one of our larger city poorhouses have revealed to me many facts that are known or heeded only by the few. This is a subject of interest in all lands, for every country and nation is represented in our American almshouse. Thousands come to our shores with high hopes which end in disappointment, poverty and sickness. Often are they entangled in the meshes of the rum traffic and haunts of vice until they are obliged to seek temporary shelter in the almshouse, and many are lost sight of by friends and kindred who look in vain for tidings of their loved ones.

I will sketch briefly one of the many incidents that have come under my notice in this work.

It was a hot Sabbath day in June. While making the usual rounds in the wards I noticed a young man sitting by a cot, and at a glance I saw appearances of better days. His pale, wan face flushed as I gave him a word of greeting, but receiving very little response I passed on, debating in my mind what would be the best way of gaining his confidence.

It was our custom to carry flowers with carefully selected Scripture texts attached. I gave him one of God's precious promises, and passing into the hall beyond his notice turned to see what impression might have been made. He read the words and I saw him brush away tears as he held the sweet flowers in his bony hands.

After that it seemed easier to converse with him and gradually he gave me a few facts, always speaking of his mother in the tenderest terms, but refusing to write to her or allow me to have her address, saying he would die before he would have his friends know of the disgrace he had brought upon them. The house physician had said it was only a question of time before the dreary ending of his life. Rapidly as the days passed the hectic flush deepened and the large brilliant eyes grew more glassy until we felt that the young life would soon be yielded up. He conversed much on the subject of religion, often speaking of his early Christian training and spending a good deal of time with a prayer book which had been provided at his request. Having occasion to visit a distant city and fearing he would not be alive on my return, I called to say good-by. All the while my heart yearned toward that mother whom I feared would never know the fate of her wayward boy. I spoke of my journey and he seemed much disturbed at the leavetaking. I walked away with a heavy sadness but he called my name clear and sharp, and said, "Will you write to my mother and give her a message from me?" Quick as possible I had a paper and pencil, trying to take down the burning words as fast as he repeated them. Over and over again he asked her forgiveness and assured her he was trusting in God as she had taught him to do in his childhood.

He was exhausted with the exertion and after I repeated the twenty-third Psalm we parted. Before I left the city arrangements were made for a funeral and burial place, for I felt too much interested in him to have him share the fate of the unclaimed dead of the institution. Three days later another name was added to the long list of victims who have sowed to the wind and reaped the whirlwind. The young people attended the funeral and he was laid in the village cemetery before my return.

Ten weeks after I had written to his mother the answer came, so full of loving forgiveness to him and thankfulness to me. His parents had searched England, Ireland and Scotland and had given him up as dead. We sent the prayer book and other little articles he had cherished during his last hours with a few withered flowers taken from beside the calm face of Ernest as he lay in his pine coffin, across the sea to that saddened home.

Near the spot where sleeps my nearest and dearest is a little mound where I often strew flowers for the sake of the broken-hearted mother away in the East Indies, believing that some day there will be a glad reunion when she will be repaid for her diligence in teaching her boy the way of life in his youth.

This is no fancy sketch I have written but a brief description of facts, only one of the many incidents that are occurring constantly. This department of our W. C. T. U. work commends itself to every right minded person. It is not great intellectual ability or money that is required, but consecration of time and natural talents. Thus prepared there will be no social chasm too wide or deep to bridge with prayers and sympathy. It is an honor to be sent on these errands and a reward is always insured, if not here, hereafter.

"Is your father at home?" I asked a small child on our village doctor's doorstep.

"No," he said, "he's away."

"Where do you think I could find him?"

"Well," he said, with a considering air, "you've got to look for some place where people are sick or hurt, or something like that. I don't know where he is, but he's helping somewhere."

And I turned away with this little sermon in my heart. If you want to find the Lord Jesus, you've got to set out on a path of helping somewhere, of lifting somebody's burden, and lo! straightway one like unto the Son of man will be found at your side.

Are you "helping somewhere"? If so, you will often find that "The great Physician now is near,

  The sympathizing Jesus"

IF I KNEW.

If I knew the box where the smiles were kept,
No matter how large the key,
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard,
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then over the land and the sea, broadcast,
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day.

If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would like to gather them, every one,
From nursery, school and street,
Then folding and holding I'd pack them in,
And turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea.

GOLDEN ROD.

Tell me, sunny golden rod,
Growing everywhere,
Did fairies come from fairyland
And make the dress you wear?

Did you get from mines of gold
Your bright and shining hue?
Or did the baby stars some night
Fall down and cover you?

Or did the angels flap their wings,
And drop their glitter down
Upon you, laughing golden rod,
Your nodding head to crown?

Or are you clad in sunshine, caught
From summer's brightest day,
To give again in happy smiles
To all who pass your way?

I love you, laughing golden rod,
And I will try, like you,
To fill each day with deeds of cheer,
Be loving, kind and true.

HOW THEY EARNED THEIR MONEY

BY ELIZABETH P. BRYDEN.

Jack Patterson and Norman Scott were chums. They lived on the same street, were of the same age, attended the same school, and were in the same grade. Both boys, being of an enterprising turn of mind, had a year ago entered into a sort of partnership, with a view to making money during the holiday season.

On the other side of the street—directly in front of Jack's house—the new public library was being built. One forenoon these two small boys sat on the stone steps leading to Mr. Patterson's front door and gazed over at the new building.

"My, but it's roastin' hot!" exclaimed Norman.

"Awful hot!" said Jack. "It's all the better for our business, though," he added, with an air of importance. "We had a good trade last summer 'cause it was so hot; and I guess it's goin' to be hotter this summer."

"Yes, we did first-rate last July and August," said Norman reflectively. "If it hadn't been for that beer, I'd never have got a new bicycle. I'd have had to make the old one do."

"Say, Norman, ain't it time we were gettin' to work to make more beer? Mr. Campbell, the head man over there at the libr'y, asked me yesterday when we were comin' round—said he liked the beer we brought him last summer when he was workin' at the Town Hall. His men get thirsty this hot weather. He said they'd patronize us, if we'd come round."

"Jack," said Norman, "don't you think we'd better give up the beer business since we've joined the white ribbon army? It don't look right for us temperance fellows to be sellin' beer."

"Leave the beer business! I sh'd think not! If I'd thought you were goin' to act this way, I wouldn't have joined the army last week—or ever—I guess. It's only hop beer—it's not intoxicatin', and can't do a mite of harm."

"I guess it can do harm," was the reply.

"Well, Norman, the president of the Army didn't say a single word against home-made beer—it's ale and cider and that kind of stuff that's meant."

"Maybe she said somethin' before we joined. I guess if you'd paid attention to Miss Stuart last quarter in school you'd know that home-made beer can intoxicate," said Norman. "If we'd take enough we'd get drunk on it. It has a ferment in it, and Miss Stuart explained how that made alcohol. Haven't we taken a pledge against alcohol, I should like to know?"

"Ye-s, I s'pose we have," was the reluctant reply. "I don't want to break my pledge, either. I guess we'll just have to give up makin' money—it's hard, so it is."

"Perhaps we'll find some other way to make money."

"What other way? I don't know of any way."

"There's lemonade," replied Norman, in a sort of musing tone. "We might try that."

"Ice-cold lemonade!" exclaimed Jack, catching the suggestion at once. "The very thing! Why didn't we think of it before? We can make it this very minute, and we won't have to wait for it to work like we have to for the beer."

Accordingly, the two boys skipped across the street—over to the library.

Mr. Campbell, a pleasant-looking young man, was standing in one of the doorways.

Jack was the spokesman. Without waiting to exchange greetings, he dashed at once into his subject.

"Mr. Campbell, I guess we can't make any beer to sell this summer. You were awful good to us fellows; but we've joined the White Ribbon Army lately, and we've taken a pledge against anything intoxicatin'. Hop beer will intoxicate, 'cause it's got a ferment in it. We'd be glad to make you some lemonade, if you'd as lief."

Mr. Campbell surveyed the two small boys with a sort of amused expression of countenance.

"And supposing I don't want the lemonade?" he asked.

Deep dejection could be plainly seen in the faces of both the boys, but they answered firmly enough.

"We can't make any more beer 'cause we've taken the pledge."

"I'm glad you can't," was the smiling reply. "You do quite right to stick to your pledge, and I hope you will always stick to it. I honor the boy that tries to do right. I wouldn't give much for a boy, or a man either, who wouldn't stand by his principles. I shouldn't want him in my employ. We shall take all the lemonade you can supply, and you may bring it along as soon you like."

Back flew our two small boys to the other side of the street. With them, to think was to act. The thermometer stood at ninety-four degrees in the shade; but the heat in no way hindered the alacrity with which they went to work. Norman ran to the nearest grocery for the lemons, and Jack went down cellar and brought up a big earthenware jar with handles. "Say, Norman, ain't you glad it's lemonade we're makin'?" asked Jack, as he sliced away at a lemon.

"Glad? I guess so! We'd feel pretty small to be sellin' beer after we'd taken the pledge. We wouldn't have enjoyed our money one bit. It makes a fellow feel awful small to be doin' wrong."

Some hours later our two boys might again have been seen crossing over to the library. This time they carried—with great care—the earthen jar between them. Each carried in his other hand a basket with some goblets in it.

It is not necessary to follow the fortunes of our heroes further. It is enough to say that both were kept busy a good part of their vacation. When school opened again each boy had a little money of his own, and he had the satisfaction of knowing that he had earned it without breaking his pledge.—The Youth's Temperance Banner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—One of our Cozy Cornerers from California is greatly interested in the Columbian Liberty bell, and wants to hear more about it and the plans made for it. And I think that the whole Corner will be glad to hear the latest news about the new emblem of liberty.

A bright September day recently saw the beautiful bell taken from its resting place and placed aboard a car. This car was especially constructed by the great generosity of the Illinois Central Railway, to take the bell on its significant journey round the world. The special train which bore the precious cargo away from Chicago consisted of an engine, baggage car, bell car and sleeper. The bell was first taken to Atlanta, stopping at the principal places en route to be seen and heard by the people. It is now occupying a place of honor at the Atlanta Cotton Exposition. When the exposition closes it will be taken through Florida and the Gulf states to Mexico, by special invitation of President Diaz. The plan is then to go directly to England and ring it there for the first time at Runnymede, in remembrance of the signing of Magna Charta.

(I would like to hear from Cozy Cornerers who have read about Magna Charta. What was it? Who signed it? What for? When?)

Our loving thoughts will go with the bright, sweet-toned bell on its journey. We hope it will impress on all the nations, as it rings the anniversaries of great patriots, the blessings of liberty and peace.

I would like to join your Cozy Corner. I so enjoy reading your letters to the boys and girls.

I am nine years old. I came here from Detroit, Mich., two and a half years ago. My father is principal of the Anglo-Chinese school. My mother is president of the W. C. T. U. We have a Band of Hope. My brother, sister and I belong; there are fifty members.

There are so many saloons here that we need to work hard to try to teach the people how wrong it is to drink. When I grow up I want to be a missionary.

Singapore, Straits Settlements. RUTH KELSO.

A temperance missionary, too, Ruth. You are one of our big circle which belts the world, for "God and Home and Every Land."

My brother, Joy, and I would like to join the Cozy Corner if you have still a little place left for some one from China. There is a Band of Hope here on Wednesday afternoons, to which we both belong. Mamma is a member of the W. C. T. U., and was the president last year. Papa is the superintendent of the Presbyterian Mission Press. There are just one hundred Chinese employed here, besides Mr. McIntosh, Mr. Williamson, Mr. Martin and papa.

I have one brother and two sisters at college in Wooster, O. The brother and eldest sister have already decided to become missionaries. I like the Cozy Corner very much, and like to read the letters in that column. Joy is twelve, and by the time you get this letter I will be eleven. We are together in our lessons, and almost everything else. As for pets, we have a canary, a cat and one little kitten.

A warm welcome to the brother and sister Cozy Cornerers from China.

I am a little girl ten years old, and my birthday is the same as Miss Willard's. May I become one of your nieces? CREE MORSE.

Wellington, Kan.

You will soon say eleven, then, won't you, Cree? May your birthday be a happy one.

I am a little girl eleven years old. We have taken THE UNION SIGNAL for three years, and I have learned many beautiful and useful things from the Cozy Corner.

I have a baby sister nine months old, and her name is Frances Willard. KATIE SHEESLEY.

Peoria, Iowa.

Your good words for Cozy Corner are like the sweet scent of a flower, little niece.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

White-ribboners everywhere are taking preliminary steps to make the annual convention, either of district or state, preëminently successful; names of speakers, noted for their eloquence, are sandwiched in between statistical reports, which of necessity are a little tedious these sultry summer days; now and then a soloist of rare merit enlivens the program, but the fact remains that leaders are oblivious to the mighty power of rousing, gospel temperance songs.

We have attended two large, well represented district conventions, and the only hymn sung with fervor was the one in which each member offered praise to the Creator for the reëlection of her beloved president. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," was especially appropriate, for the spirit of harmony indicated the Divine presence, and was cause for an uplifting of hearts and of voice, but at a temperance meeting would there not be a volume of song that would help on the temperance cause mightily, if there were some familiar words sung to some familiar tune, beloved of all white-ribboners?

"The White Ribbon Hymnal" has in it excellent material for meetings, large and small, and if those preparing the annual programs would select the most spirited of these, and sing them as often as they do the favorite hymns of the weekly prayer-meeting, it would require an extra edition of the "Hymnal," which surely is second to no temperance song book in the musical world.

Let some enthusiastic leader select for the opening service of each meeting a few of the most rousing hymns she can find in the "Hymnal," and keep the audience singing them until they sing with enthusiasm, insisting upon all joining heartily, and the victory will have been gained. Persuade some member with a clear, ringing voice to start a line of some familiar temperance song whenever opportunity offers, and the effect will be magical; the dull, apathetic members will have a listening ear, and the whole tenor of the meeting will be changed.

So impressed are we with the power for good there is in united, lively, wide-awake temperance music, we ask from white-ribboners everywhere an opinion as to the five best songs in the "Hymnal," that we may furnish these in single sheets at a low price for universal use.

"Marching Songs," No. 3, for the Senior L. T. L's, will soon be issued from our presses, and its popular new music will be ringing out from the voices of young Crusaders. It is a third larger than "Marching Songs" Nos. 1 and 2, and the price is a third greater, being fifteen cents for a single copy. Special discounts in large quantities.

Miss Gordon has compiled this new song book with great care, and at a time when she was busily preparing for the great World's Convention, so that its appearance is but another indication of her never-failing thoughtfulness and love for the multitude of Legioners who will pray that the good ship, New York, on which she sails with the beloved Chieftain, September 21, may bear her in safety back to them.

OUR INCLUSIVE AIM.

The power of expansion which inheres in the Christian temperance idea, is strikingly shown in this resolution passed by the third biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U.:

Resolved, That the basis of this society is total abstinence, total prohibition of the liquor traffic and the opium trade, the enfranchisement of women, purity of personal life and international peace and arbitration, and we invite all earnest women who are like-minded with us to join our organization, put on the white ribbon, and become soldiers in our peaceful war.

Here we have a clear, concise and comprehensive statement of W. C. T. U. purpose, or, in other words, Christian temperance as interpreted by the "organized mother-love" of the world. The breadth and inclusiveness of the idea —beginning with the limited sphere of the individual and extending until it encompasses the entire globe—is here set forth in orderly sequence.

Total abstinence for the individual leads inevitably by a natural step in Christian growth to total prohibition of the liquor traffic by the state, and later to its prohibition and that of its twin evil, the opium trade, by the governments of the world. "I am my brother's keeper," is being borne in upon the minds of men and women with greater force as the days go by.

We would pledge every lover of his kind to total abstinence, not only upon the ground of duty to self, but upon the higher Christian ground of duty to others; we would make its basis not self-love, but brotherly love. "We believe," says the World's W. C. T. U. in its Declaration of Principles, "that each man's habits of life should be an example safe and beneficent for every other man." It is this same altruistic spirit—and altruism has been aptly defined as otherism—which inspires all effort for legal prohibition of intoxicants the world over. It is not that we would make men sober against their will, not that we would curtail personal liberty, but that we would protect our homes from the ravages of the destroyer, that we would secure to all mankind the most wholesome and helpful environment possible—moral, mental, physical. "We believe," declares the World's W. C. T. U., "in the coming of His Kingdom whose service is the highest liberty," and to our minds nothing will more quickly lead men into the "glorious liberty of the children of God" than the annihilation of the rum traffic.

The enfranchisement of woman is necessarily one of the basic principles of Christian temperance, first, because it is right and just, and second, because it insures the protection of the home. No one is debarred, however, from joining our organization, because of any prejudice they may have against woman suffrage. All that is required of any woman desiring to become a white-ribboner is to sign the pledge and pay her dues. True, the pledge, in addition to personal abstinence, requires that she "employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in" intoxicating liquors, but if she regards woman's enfranchisement as improper means she manifests no disloyalty to the cause by opposing it. Experience proves, however, that nothing is so effective in winning friends for woman's ballot as reform work—work for others; and we venture to assert that no line of reform has convinced so many women of the justice and expediency of woman's ballot as the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is rare in these days to find a white-ribboner who is not a woman suffragist.

Purity of personal life! Truly a brighter day has dawned for women and for men when the largest organization of women in existence, and whose influence is world-wide, declares this to be one of its basic principles. This, be it known—and we would like to sound it in trumpet tones wherever the white ribbon is preparing the way and making the paths straight for Christian temperance—this is one of the distinctive signs of the "new woman." She demands a single standard of morality and that the highest, for man and woman! And the beneficent influence of the real "new woman" is nowhere so strikingly apparent as in the fact that this principle of personal purity is already being "worked out in the customs of society and the laws of the land."

That the establishment of permanent peace between the nations of the earth should be a part of the "aim" of a world's organization of women is eminently fitting. The rôle of peacemaker is one which naturally and properly belongs to Christian womanhood, and in this "woman's age" it will not be denied that the W. C. T. U., in conjunction with the peace societies, wields no mean influence with the governments of the world in securing the adoption of measures looking toward peace and international arbitration.

The natural and symmetrical development of the Christian temperance idea from birth to majority suggests that broadening and deepening which the years before maturity shall bring. "What is the W. C. T. U. going to do when there is no longer any liquor traffic to fight?" says some one. We reply, there is always a next thing. Women have learned the power there is in organization, and not until the "kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ," not until men are "transformed by the renewing of their minds that they may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God" toward all mankind, will the work of organized mother love be accomplished. If, as has been said, Christian temperance means "total abstinence from all that is evil and moderation in all that is good," the W. C. T. U. has a long and busy future before it. Our final goal is prohibition, "written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God, not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart"—not Christian temperance for the world, but the world for Christian temperance!

TEMPERANCE IN ATLANTA.

We are glad to announce a partial victory for temperance in Atlanta. The liquor men petitioned the city council for permission to keep the saloons open until midnight during the Exposition which is soon to open in that city. As was to be expected, the temperance people rolled up a large counter petition. As was not to be expected, the council heeded the latter petition and refused that of the liquor men.

In many of our cities, where all restrictions placed upon a licensed liquor traffic are dead letters, this might seem a very small matter, but we are informed by Prohibitionists in Atlanta that the restrictive laws against the traffic in that city are enforced to a very unusual degree. We are assured that the saloons are actually closed, back door as well as front, on the Sabbath, that they are also closed at ten o'clock in the evening on week days, and that when one of them violates any of these regulations the proprietor really runs great danger of arrest and punishment. In view of these facts, the refusal of the council to allow saloons to remain open until midnight during the exposition, is a substantial victory for the temperance forces.

Encouraged by this victory, the Methodist ministers of Atlanta were inclined to follow up the advantage and turn, if possible, the defeat of the enemy into utter rout. According to the local option laws of Georgia, upon the petition of a certain number of the voters, any county may hold an election every two years to decide whether or not licenses to sell liquor shall be granted in that county. In their regular weekly meeting, immediately after the extension of the hours had been refused, these ministers discussed the advisability of starting a prohibition campaign and calling an election in Fulton county, November 1. Though a final decision was postponed until their next meeting, the suggestion drew forth a vigorous protest from the Atlanta Constitution. This protest is a characteristic bit of liquor logic and liquor facts (?) It pictures the evils of a prohibitory campaign thus:

"Our people know by sad experience what a prohibition campaign means in a large city like Atlanta. It means strife between old friends, neighbors, kinsmen and factions—it means general uneasiness and distrust—it retards the growth of the city, drives people away, injures every material interest, breaks down the color line, creates confusion and bitterness and makes Atlanta the laughing stock of the country."

The editorial specially deprecates such a ruinous campaign just at the time of the Exposition. The claim is made that Atlanta has a "strictly regulated system of liquor traffic," one which has been generally acknowledged by "visitors, municipal officials elsewhere, newspapers generally and religious and temperance publications" to be the best in the country. The conclusion is therefore drawn that it is wise to let well enough alone lest an attempt to tinker the system shall end in one of two equally disastrous extremes; the extreme of "a loose traffic" or the extreme of "total prohibition which doesn't prohibit." The article concludes thus:

"In denying the petition of the saloon men to extend their hours, our council represented the conservative sentiment of the city. Now, let us all whirl in and back that sentiment. The people, through the council, have smashed the extremists on one side, and the thing to do now is to smash the extremists on the other side. Do this, and all will be well."

We are strongly inclined to believe with the Constitution that now is not the time to start a prohibition campaign in Atlanta, but not for the reasons given by that paper. The people of Atlanta have thrown themselves into the work of the Exposition with the most surprising enthusiasm and energy. They have already achieved success for what at first seemed to many an almost hopeless object. To expect just in the midst of this great undertaking that people will give the necessary time, strength, thought and money to a prohibition campaign, seems to us unreasonable. Moreover, we share the "doubt" of a little temperance paper of Atlanta, The Crusader, as to the policy of Atlanta's ever having such a campaign again. With that paper we say, "Let the next election on this question be a state election."

That a prohibition campaign "means strife between old friends, neighbors, kinsmen," we do not question. Christ said distinctly, "Think not that I came to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword," "and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Strife is not a desirable thing in itself, but it is an inseparable accompaniment of progress. Moreover, we cannot obtain peace without it; stagnation we may, indeed, attain; but peace, genuine and lasting, is won only by the sword of progress.

As to the other statements of the first quoted paragraph, they are largely questions of veracity between the contending parties. The only kind of people who have ever been driven away from any place by prohibition, actual or prospective, is a kind that can well be dispensed with. They are those who are either hopelessly addicted to the use of liquor or who propose to engage in the business of drunkard making. As to injuring the material interests of the city, whatever may be the immediate effects of the campaign, prohibition itself has a far different effect. According to the testimony of many citizens, chief of whom was Atlanta's brilliant and lamented orator, Henry W. Grady, the few years in which Atlanta enjoyed prohibition were the years of her most solid prosperity. Coal-dealers, grocers, merchants in all lines of legitimate business testified that prohibition was an unmixed blessing to them and a help to their business. They said that people who heretofore had bought only the most meagre supplies and often on credit at that, now laid in their supplies for a long time in advance, and bought for cash. The number of persons turned out of their houses because of inability to pay rent was found to have been diminished by more than half.

Forty-four counties in Georgia have prohibition by local option, twenty by special act of the legislature, twenty-eight more have it in various ways by what is known as the "three-mile law," by the refusal of ordinaries to grant licenses, etc., so that in all ninety-two out of the one hundred and thirty-seven counties of the state have practical prohibition. We are reliably informed that it is the widespread prohibitory laws of Georgia, with their reasonable enforcement, which secure the enforcement of the "regulated system" of Atlanta. It is said that the liquor men are so fearful of stirring up the dormant prohibition sentiment, that they dare not arouse the temperance people by open and flagrant violation of the laws. In this also lies the secret of the defeat of the recent petition. The Atlanta Constitution, which has never laid claim to being a temperance paper, opposed granting the petition of the liquor dealers on the ground that the present arrangement was a compromise between the extremists of both sides, and, if the contract was broken, the other party to it was also released from its obligations. In other words, as we understand it, the opposite party would be left free to move for prohibition.

The situation in Atlanta is another illustration of a truth we have mentioned before: Prohibition has never yet "prohibited" any crime, but it is the only measure which successfully restricts crime. The fact that regulation of the liquor traffic in Atlanta is as successful as it is, is due to the widespread sentiment in favor of total prohibition in the city and throughout the state. We sincerely hope that while Atlanta may never have another merely local campaign, the Prohibitionists of that city and of the state will unite in an effort to secure prohibition for the entire state. We earnestly hope that the Anti-Barroom Bill will be adopted by the legislature which is soon to convene.

WHO ARE CALLED.

Knowing the objective point, upon the anniversary of that day in mild September (28), when to the women of the nineteenth century was given the spiritual leader whom no woman has been born too rich or wise or great, nor yet too poor or ignorant to follow, the wearer of the white ribbon sets forth, in the hope of securing her quota of the latent woman power of this nation, to commemorate membership week.

Now, who are the women, she asks, who should wear the snowy ribbon which adorns her own breast? Theoretically, all women, but the little mistress of this first dwelling is a stranger, upon whom she has not yet found time to make the formal welcoming call. May she not feel some resentment that the first visit should be on business, even though it be the King's? Gentle Crusader, pass not by. Somewhere among the newcomers to your village dwells the woman whose energy, cheery presence, fresh enthusiasm, will bless your union in a way neither you nor she could anticipate. Do not run the risk of losing her; this may be your woman. This work calls for every kind of women, and we want them; the bright, fun-loving girl and the woman of leisure, as well as the grave young teacher and the busy householder, the mother of many little children, who can scarce find time for the hour of social meeting; aye, we want those who cannot even do that; they can wear the ribbon and do its work, even though they can seldom or never be present at our gatherings.

Here is the home of the aged saint, who of course could not attend the meetings; well, the local meeting is not everything. Do we not need the prayers of one approaching so near the actual Presence? Would not the white token of woman's faith and hope and patience appeal with an added pathos from that peaceful bosom? And may it not be a joy to her to know that she is not yet retired from active service, that we understand and appreciate the temperance work she can do?

Here lives one of the overburdened women. When you think of the load she carries you would burn with indignation if there were not also involved an overburdened man. You feel that you can scarcely have the face to ask her to join the W. C. T. U., but hold, here may be one of your very best opportunities. It seems to be those whose hands are already very full of their own or the world's work who feel most compelled by the greatness of our cause. Our very experience has, perhaps, awakened us to the world's terrible needs. What shall you say to the woman who cannot find time?

It is doubtful if there is a woman in your village who is such a slave that she has absolutely no time at her own disposal. If there is, it is a burning shame! Most of us find some time to follow our hearts' desires. She who honestly plans for a little time for temperance work generally succeeds in securing it. One little woman whom we know sometimes dresses herself and her children in underclothing beautifully clean, but only rough dried, "folded and sat down on," she laughingly says. She is a good housekeeper, but sometimes something has to be crowded out, and there are more necessary things than shining linen.

We know that our girls have much to occupy their time and attention, but we especially and particularly want them. It is they who shine in social ways, and who can do beautifully beautiful things which older women cannot touch at all. Try for them. They should be in training to take our places.

Elizabeth Cleveland says: "I wish some strong, bright angel stood before you just now, girls, to flash before you as no words of mine can the power you possess to help or hinder the cause of temperance, to make you feel your responsibility, because you are girls, in this matter, to shudder at its weight and to never cease trying to fulfill it."

When we see such power in the hands of the little, careless, pleasure-loving creatures we long to impress them with the thought, it is time, full time, to begin to be wise. But who can wonder at them if they have not the example and moral support of the women they most look up to and admire?

Perhaps your union has never succeeded in enlisting the society women of your town, and you feel positive that in your quest it would be worse than useless to touch the electric bell of the handsome new house you are about to pass unvisited. She of the rugs and hardwood floors and art furnishings would feel very disdainful, you think, over an invitation to become a member of the temperance union. Well, do not be mean spirited on account of these things; their possession does not constitute her more than woman. It is true that not many rich or noble are called, but some are. Her social influence is one of the talents the Master expects returned to Him with usury. Do not you become responsible for the disuse by not asking her to take service! She could wield a mighty influence. Try for her.

Can there be anything in silken robes and trained servants and spacious houses and all the things which make a pleasant easy time to cause indifference to the evils we might remove or the miseries we might lighten? Is it not that, enshrined in such a full and pleasantly rounded sphere, such things as the world needs and troubles have glanced off and left no impress?

Oh, beautiful, gracious women who sit in fair homes, with leisure to do pretty, pleasant things, who entertain gracefully, whom young girls imitate, of whom young men say, "I want my wife to be like that or do like that," you have a talent whose use this world greatly needs! It would make a tremendous difference with young men if all the girls they admire and all the women they look up to should pin on our knot of ribbon and gravely and seriously defend the principles it represents. What if your indifference and inaction be made the excuse for the evil things we see and hear of in them? Your class might hold their salvation in your hands.

Of Joan of Arc one writes: "She has entered as a spiritual force into the inheritance of the ages and become a practical influence in human lives." Such is your opportunity, oh, woman of to-day, if you but listen—as did the peasant girl of Domreme—for the heavenly voices, calling not to the clash of arms on the battle field but to slay evil by the touch of your Ithuriel's spear of purity and truth.

Is the day gone, dear Crusader, ere you are out of sight of your own dwelling? Perhaps your experience has convinced you that you should crusade more days than one.

Mrs. Prindle writes, in speaking of her visit to Piccadilly, that that night scene in London made her head sick and her heart faint. Scores and hundreds of mothers, beautiful girls, young, fair, sober, intellectual, handsome, well dressed, courteous and polite, but lost, oh, how lost, yet willing to return when the door is open. "I distributed among them," she continues, "our Florence Mission cards; the face of the little girl touched their hearts, and my material left in Jesus' name won them, and they said: 'Yes, we do want a mother and a friend.' I placed my name on the back of each card, and after a little one of a group of four came running after me and said: 'I will be good, and will write to you; I am so tired of this bad life.' Another sweet girl of sixteen would gladly have come with me; I think I could have taken a number of them that night if there had been a home for them. The Florence Crittenton Mission must cross the water; let us have faith and doubt not. Only think of it, not a missionary there that night to speak a friendly word or extend a helping hand. 'Near a whole city full, home they had none.' I felt like shouting there on the streets of London, 'Wake up, all ye who are at ease in Zion, lend your hearts and hand, your garments, for the blood of the slain daughters of my people is upon you!'"

Canon Wilberforce, Mrs. Wilberforce and their accomplished daughter were recently guests at Lady Henry Somerset's country house, The Priory, Reigate. The Canon is one of the most delightful talkers in the world, and Miss Willard sends me some of his bright sayings, not verbatim, but from memory:

"A mother takes her child to the hospital to have the surgeon set a broken limb. Suppose that he waved his hands over it, saying, 'I forgive this bone. It was wrong to have it broken, but I forgive it.' What would be thought of such a course compared with the true method of procedure, which is setting the bone? And then, if there should be a mistake about the setting, how cruel it would seem to one who did not understand the matter, to see the bone deliberately broken and put together properly. The Bible says, 'That the bones that thou hast broken may rejoice,' and the love of God often requires this dealing with us—so hard to understand—so infinitely merciful."

"The Bible says that we are to be 'wise as serpents.' When I was in India I learned more about the meaning of that word. The serpent fascinates before it kills, and they who would be wise in winning souls must by their character draw the people to themselves and slay them with the sword of the spirit."

"The sacerdotalism of science is, if possible, less tolerant than that of theology. Whoever dissents is under ban, and he who assents must speak the precise shibboleth of the High Priest. But the principle of evolution is so godlike we shall doubtless never outgrow it. I cannot help feeling that many of the keynotes of modern science will become as inharmonious in the centuries ahead as those of the past age are incongruous to-day."

"With all its faults, England has the best government in the world. It is a true democracy. The people conduct the empire. The fierce ambitions that grow out of changing the head of the government every four years are of doubtful advantage. The stability that results from hereditary rulers is really a social rather than a governmental power, and is of incalculable value to us."

"We think we have free will, but to my mind its best emblem is that of Dr. O. W. Holmes, 'a drop of water enclosed in a crystal.' We think that we decide for ourselves, but we are as much bound to this planet as the smallest particle of dust. We must roll on with it through space; we must submit to its change of seasons, its uncertain climates, its laws that interlace so closely about us that we wear them as a vesture, and are penetrated by them throughout every atom of our being. But we are conscious, and self-consciousness is the one phenomenon that no science can explain. 'I think, therefore I am.' Through this thinking power we learn the laws of God, and feel ourselves united to him as a child to its mother. To see, to feel and to be loyal to this union is the sum and substance of religion."

NEWS LETTER.

Three summer meetings and a Y conference furnish material for this letter. The latter, held at Kensington, was the third in the state and was full of enthusiasm. The attractive program was arranged by the state secretary of young woman's work, Mrs. Ida Pegrum. Several state officers were present to encourage the Y's who did the duties assigned them in a graceful manner. Eight Y unions were represented and many visitors were present.

Every one voted the gathering a delightful one. The music of the day was varied, consisting of organ, violin, mandolin and vocal selections. The collations were bountiful, and at the social hour which followed the evening exercises, cake and lemonade were served. Some of the important business was the acceptance of an invitation to meet for the next conference at Stonington, the passing of resolutions relative to the work of the coming year and the appointment of a committee to arrange if possible, to establish a fund exclusively for Y work in order that the state secretary might visit the unions and otherwise aid in the work.

The temperance gathering at Willimantic was filled from opening to close with interesting exercises. Mrs. Forbes presided and Mrs. J. T. Ellis and Shiro Kuroda, a Japanese student, were the speakers from out of the state.

Mrs. Ellis gave a Bible reading on fruit bearing, and upon this subject built up a most helpful and inspiring address.

Shiro Kuroda began by voicing a thought many of us must have had. He said: "God created man in His own image," but it seemed to him in the present condition of things, that there was a mistake somewhere. Man is certainly not now in God's own image. Like so many outside our country, he does not see why we, with our boasted freedom, do not stop the iniquitous traffic with the ballot.

A pleasant exercise of the day was the representation of each county but one, by a short address by the president of the county. The exceptional one was reported, however, by a state superintendent from that county.

After the afternoon song service, Mrs. Pegrum spoke for the Y's interest, and then Mrs. Ellis followed with a strong address. Mr. Kuroda then told the story of his life, and, after the pause for refreshment, the closing exercises of the day took place in the form of a combined temperance, missionary and revival service. May the Lord bless the Willimantic day.

At Camp Bethel was spent a happy, helpful day. This is confessedly a children's rally, but many of the audience are grown-ups, children who still love the sweet, simple things of childhood. Mrs. Rice, the children's friend, spoke twice, and was interesting both times. In the evening her subject was, "God's Hand in History." Rev. Mr. Boole made the afternoon address, "Will the Church Help the Nation in its Crisis?" and it was a strong appeal to the best in everybody. Fine speakers, beautiful weather, a picturesque spot, a good children's meeting and an attentive audience—what better enduement of a good day?

The Plainville temperance meeting was truly a cold water day, for the heavens opened and the floods descended and beat upon the heads of those who were present until the friendly shelter of a building was sought.

The program was excellent, the speakers being, Rev. J. S. James, Mr. S. P. Thrasher, Prof. J. J. McCook, an Episcopal clergyman, Mrs. C. B. Forbes, Rev. J. W. White and a stereopticon lecture by Dr. James.

NOTES.

North Stonington reports a union just organized.

Pawcatuck gave a dime sociable at the home of the president, Miss Hannah A. Babcock. The lawn was decorated with Japanese lanterns and the house and veranda with flags. Tables were spread on the lawn, veranda and in the house and a delightful time enjoyed. Twenty-two dollars was cleared.

Danbury held a fair and made forty-seven dollars and also gave aid to the Law and Order League.

Greenwich has a large L. T. L., nearly two hundred, a sewing school and children's savings bank, in which has been deposited during the few years of its existence nearly seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Sherman has made some additions to its loan library. The schools of the town are well supplied with physiologies.

South Norwalk W and Y combine and send a school physiology journal to sixteen teachers.

Stamford sends a temperance paper to the wives of its clergymen. Stepney subscribes for its young men.

South Norwalk struggling along amid discouragements still holds its own. The discouragements are not due to lack of interest or similar causes, but are the results of death in the union or in the families connected with it.

New Haven No. 1 are deeply interested in, and work hard for, the Bethesda Home, and have given many entertainments for its benefit; the latest being a "pound party" which was very successful.

Mansfield union is active on the subject of franchise, and has held several meetings to consider the subject. The L. T. L. of this place had a very enjoyable picnic and lawn party, the last to raise money for the fresh air fund.

Rockfall union has had a picnic and a social tea, both of which were very pleasant social events.

Greenwich has been stirred by a temperance evangelist.

Portland held a free will offering gathering in which the W and Y united; a pleasant social time was enjoyed and everybody was entertained as Portland always entertains, royally.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

GOLDEN HARVESTS.

I write this letter from the midst of golden harvests, for New Hampshire has been favored this summer with copious rains, and our hearts are gladdened by the encouraging reports which come to us of fine crops in the south and west. We may expect much good work done by our superintendents at the many state and county fairs which this prosperity will make possible.

August was a quiet month in temperance work, but on the 21st the annual meeting of Sullivan county convention was held at the Claremont Junction camp grounds, and from the interesting report of Mrs. L. E. Barnes, of Claremont, I glean the following items:

The business meeting was held in the Claremont House, the county president, Mrs. M. E. Partridge, in the chair. Five of the seven unions in the county were represented, with full and encouraging accounts of their work during the year. Adjournment was made to the auditorium in the grove where delightful songs were rendered by Mrs. Upham of Claremont, and Miss Jackson of Bellows Falls, Vt. Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston, delivered an able address. From the remote ages when the handwriting on the wall struck consternation to the heart of Belshazzar, down to this closing nineteenth century, historic events, illustrative of the pivotal thought of this admirable lecture, "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," were cited with an eloquence that held the close attention of a large audience, her several digressions but adding to the general interest. The Claremont union provided a delicious collation for the visiting unions, and all felt that this was one of the most successful conventions ever held in Sullivan county.

Mrs. S. E. Bickford, of Wolfboro, writes of successful work done by their superintendent of Temple Wheels. Many have been filled in that town, one of which held the names of their oldest people, whose combined age reached the sum of ten hundred and forty years.

July 17 was Temperance Day at Weirs, an all-day meeting being held under the auspices of the state union, with the state president, Miss Wendell, in charge. The praise service was a fitting opening for the day. The workers' conference, as conducted by Mrs. Rice, of Boston, was helpful and inspiring. Mrs. Bowers, of Nashua, led the devotional half-hour, her theme being the command "to love one another." The state president gave a review of the work of the "Mercy Home," awakening a responsive chord of sympathy for the unfortunate ones cared for there in the hearts of her listeners. Dr. Ellen Wallace read a valuable paper on hygiene as related to schools. The address of Mrs. Rice was an able production, and was listened to with much interest. Fine solos were rendered by Miss Hill, of Lakeport; Mrs. Perkins, of Somersworth, and Miss Bradbury, of Boston. Several ministers were present, and spoke words of encouragement. A hymn of praise closed the meeting, which all felt had been most profitable as well as enjoyable.

The first of October will bring us to our annual state convention, held this year at Franklin, and which promises to be an unusually attractive and delightful gathering.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The fifteenth anniversary has been held of the organization of the work in the state. Several unions observed it in some way. Mrs. Chapin requested the members of the different local unions to give fifteen cents per member for each year of our state's existence.

In Spartanburg the day was observed by a visit to the poorhouse. A large committee went out loaded with baskets. It was a red-letter day to the paupers. Three long tables were loaded with the best of things and buckets of lemonade stood outside. We had gone to some expense at the livery stable which was more than covered by the generosity of Mr. De Shamps, a Methodist minister, who was of our party.

This poorhouse is a standing proof of what can be done with very little effort. When we paid our first visit to it several years ago, it was a desolate place, rude, comfortless houses, the inmates mixed up in the same rooms without any regard to sex, color or age.

Now there are neat cottages. Some for the men, some for women, now and then you come across a room inhabited by husband and wife and children. The negroes have the same neat cottages by themselves. They have a long dining hall divided into two apartments, one for white and one for black. These improvements are due to the work of the W. C. T. U. What has been done can be done, and there is no excuse for cheerless poorhouses. I cannot close this without telling that we will doubtless soon have a chapel built convenient to the inmates.

Our committee on scientific temperance instruction is a wide awake one. Mrs. Wheeler, chairman of committee, has obtained suitable literature from headquarters and her committee has interviewed the teachers, the professors of the colleges and trustees of the graded schools, and at least given them some new thoughts upon the subject, gaining the informal promises of adopting the books required.

You remember Mrs. Chapin got the legislature to pass the bill for scientific temperance instruction to be taught in all the public schools. Our committee here is only trying to have this law put into effect in Spartanburg with the right kind of books. Our local union a short time ago, by a unanimous vote, invited Mrs. Chapin to come up to our mountain region and be our guest for a month. But she did not feel well enough to endure the dust and heat of the journey. It was a great disappointment to us.

The Charleston union takes no vacation. Theirs is all the year round work. Though several of their members are away from the city and there is sickness in many families, the brave little union works steadily on, keeping up their weekly visitation to the almshouse, the hospital and visiting sick and needy. The union has suffered a severe loss in the death of one of their best workers. A few months ago Mrs. Dr. Bleckley was promoted to the ranks above. Speaking of her death Mrs. Chapin said: "I could have spared some whole unions better than that one devoted, consecrated worker."

The home is now in the hands of the Rev. Mr. Williford. This report for three months was very encouraging. The home is a quiet, Christian place, where respectable, industrious persons of limited means may by a merely nominal price obtain comfortable lodging and meals if desired. Destitute strangers, homeless and friendless, can have their wants supplied at the expense of the W. C. T. U. for a short time. This home has done great good, and I believe it will do more in the future. It ought to be made a state work.

The anniversary celebration was a grand thing. The hall where they held their public meeting was packed. A large crowd was treated to delicious ices, cakes and fruits. Mrs. Chapin gives herself no rest. She not only enters every door opened to her, she opens doors no other one would dare to enter. She works constantly with tongue and pen, and never misses a meeting of the W. C. T. U.; takes charge of their Bible readings, their mothers' meetings, parliamentary exercises, straightens out their rough places and does all their newspaper work. She is now at work trying to get the age of consent raised. All this is done whilst sick and suffering.

Mrs. De Gafferrille, the president of the Charleston union, has been named St. Mark by Mrs. Chapin, because "when there is anything to be done, she straightway goes and does it." She will be our delegate to the National.

It would not do to close without a mention of the Charleston Y's. Their most important work for two years has been with the factory children. They hold meetings twice every week when the children are instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic and spelling. For one year they paid eight dollars a month for rent. Then the factory officers, appreciating the work being done, offered the school-room free of rent and all expenses. The children are being treated to interesting lectures, song services and entertainments. These never-grow-weary Y's have held in the last year, memorial meetings for Mrs. Lathrap, Dr. Gordon and others. They have carried flowers to the almshouse all the summer. Their president, Miss Lottie Olney, is also state superintendent of the Y's. She has visited some of the state Y's. She hopes to capture Miss Kearney some time soon, but that is a secret and now that I have told it I had better stop, or I may forget and tell something else.

MISSOURI MOVEMENTS.

"The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

Our women are looking forward to a fine state convention in November, when we shall meet in Nevada and welcome back our peerless leader, Mrs. Hoffman, and under her direction plan to take Missouri for Christ and righteousness in civic life. Our districts and counties are sending in reports of successful conventions, and the general outlook is most hopeful.

An excellent report of the Fourth of July celebration at La Belle was received too late for my last letter, so I mention it in this. The Declaration of Independence was declaimed by Miss Wells, several addresses were given, and the little folks sang, "Saloons Must Go." After a bountiful dinner and a pretty flag drill and song by little girls, the orator of the day, Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, gave a masterly address to a very large and attentive audience. An elocutionary contest closed the day's proceedings.

A reception was tendered by the St. Louis Central W. C. T. U. to their former president, Mrs. Thos. C. Fletcher, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Fred H. Ingalls, St. Louis, president of the district W. C. T. U., in parlor 84 of the Southern Hotel, Friday evening, August 30, with a full attendance of local unions and a number of prominent distant visitors, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Crandall, of Brookfield, Mo.; Mrs. Erminida Needham, of Des Moines, Ia.; Mrs. C. C. McDaniels, of Sedalia, Mo., and Mrs. L. S. Mount, president of the W. C. T. U. of Mississippi. It was much lamented that the president of the Central union was absent owing to ill health.

The room was profusely and most beautifully decorated with palms and cut flowers, and very sweet music was furnished by the Venetian Mandolin Club, including a fine selection by the noted bell ringers. After greeting their past and present chief rulers, plans were discussed for the coming winter's work, many new friends made and old ones heartily welcomed, and pleasant social and business conversation was heartily enjoyed by all. 'Twas a late hour ere the company dispersed, and all felt very much encouraged in their work, and more fully realized that "It is not all of life to live nor all of death to die."

Central W. C. T. U. is very busy at present with Exposition work, and arranging for a great rally on Membership Crusade Day, September 28, as well as planning for winter work and their annual W. C. T. U. convention, to be held at Butler, Mo., in November.

The third annual convention of the thirtieth district W. C. T. U. was held in Dexter last month. The delegates met in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, which was decorated with flowers and flags. While the attendance was small, those who were present were enthusiastic and hopeful. Good reports were read from Bloomfield and Dexter unions, and from the Dexter Y.

Mrs. Millie Lewis recently spent three weeks in this district, organizing new unions and strengthening the old ones. The result is seventy-one active, and eight honorary members gained. The thirtieth district now numbers ten unions and Y's. A gold medal contest was held in the evening, and was much enjoyed by the large crowd present. The church choir and the L. T. L. added materially to the evening's pleasure by their singing.

Mrs. C. H. Howe has been at work in the third district; six lectures were given and three afternoon meetings held. A new union was organized in Milan, and one of ten members on the North side in Trenton, the latter taking the name of the Howe union. An L. T. L. of thirty-two members was organized here also.

Mrs. Millie Lewis writes of work done in the thirtieth and twenty-eighth districts and reports four Y's and four W. C. T. unions organized; the Poplar Bluff union, numbering forty active and ten honorary members, gaining in the month 119 active members, a majority of whom have already paid dues. Jail meetings, mothers' meetings and gatherings of young women have been addressed, also C. E. societies, Epworth Leagues and Sabbath and day schools. Maitland union planned and carried out a fine Sunday-school rally a few weeks ago. The different schools were represented by scholars who assisted on program. The principal address was given by Mr. B. O. Cowan, of New Point, a talk on narcotics, followed by some excellent argument on the duty of the Christian. So much interest was manifested that the union propose to hold these exercises regularly.

Bedison L. T. L. is doing a quiet but effective work in that community by their regular monthly meetings. While the children are reciting the older people who remain after Sunday-school are entertained by the reading of temperance stories and incidents from THE UNION SIGNAL. The leader of the L. T. L. writes "We keep wall pockets at depot and post office supplied with temperance literature; we are trying to do our duty and leave the result with God."

Pineville W. C. T. U. arranged a meeting with the teachers during the county institute. Inspiring messages were sent to the teachers from the unions of Southwest City and Anderson. A reading, a recitation, and short talks from the teachers as to their views on teaching temperance completed the program, at the close of which strong resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Fairfax union entertained the Atchison county W. C. T. U. convention in August. Fine papers were read, and it was decided to employ a state organizer for a month's work in the county.

Tarkio union recently held a memory test social; refreshments were served, and two members gained. At these parlor meetings each member is requested to bring a friend, not a member, and a dime to replenish the treasury.

Excellent work has been done by the Maryville union at the county harvest home; a space ten by twenty feet in floral hall was given them, and one of the large furniture firms of the city generously supplied rockers, couch and other furniture. Mottoes, pictures, curtains and rugs gave a homelike air to the booth, and two or more members of the union were in attendance each day to extend a welcome to visitors, and to dispense ice water and distribute literature. Many copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, "Timely Talks," and addresses of John G. Woolley were given away, about six thousand pages in all, one member gained for the union, and a Temple Wheel partly filled.

LOCAL NOTES.

My dear constituents must not think me indifferent or that my long silence has been caused by negligence. A short time after the state convention I went to Tennessee where I spent the summer. In my trunk were the envelopes and paper for my UNION SIGNAL letters. But the time never came for me to write. My little daughter was ill all summer and my whole time was given to nursing her.

The reporters for the local unions have evidently been overcome by the heat; nothing else can account for their complete silence. Not a letter has reached me. Our dear Mrs. Stoddard, who has been "far across the wave," could not supply me with her usual notes. We were so proud to know that she spoke on the second day of the World's Convention.

Fort Worth temperance workers gave Mrs. Stoddard an enthusiastic welcome home and she gave them in return an eloquent description of her trip to London, Paris and Switzerland. Fort Worth rejoices to have her presence during the campaign for local option.

Austin W. C. T. U. had recently an interesting meeting "for women only." A mothers' meeting, papers on "Heredity," "Social Purity," "Teaching Children the Mystery of Life" and "Hidden and Unknown Dangers" were read. The meeting was well attended and a good collection was received. Austin having set its heart on raising one hundred dollars for the Temple, has received fifty Temple Wheels.

The press department is active, original matter appearing every week in the local papers. The city missionary is doing a grand work. Her weekly reports are a revelation of the sorrow, sin and destitution in the city.

Ennis mourns the loss of Mrs. J. N. Rowe, one of its most active and earnest W. C. T. U. workers.

Canton has local option and at the last term of court there was not a criminal in the county jail. At the last medal contest Miss Lorena Ware won the medal. Her subject was, "The World on Fire."

Whitt was enjoying local option so fully that a saloon was opened and an election was ordered when the antis were voted out.

Dublin union held noonday prayer-meetings the week before the county election. Though the county went "wet" through the naturalization the day before of hundreds of ignorant foreign miners at Thurber, Dublin showed her appreciation of local option by a largely increased majority over the election two years ago. The churches united in a praise meeting when the result in Dublin was known.

Greenville has organized a W. C. T. U. among the colored people. Ten members were secured.

Dallas will have an important meeting October 22, during the state fair. Hon. Samuel Dickie will address the Prohibitionists and the general public at the fair grounds.

It is to be hoped that the petitions now being circulated by the W. C. T. U. protesting against the prize fight announced to be held in Dallas, October 31, will have the desired effect, and our state will not be disgraced by such brutality.

Miss Fanny Chambers, superintendent of Demorest medal contests, reports a number of contests arranged and held by the Rev. V. G. Thomas. One at Boerne, a German town, was attended by our beer loving friends and won their applause. Miss Nellie Perrin won the medal.

At Salado the medal was won by Mrs. Thomas, wife of the minister. Another contest at Davenport was the next point on his circuit where Mr. Thomas held a contest. Mrs. Benona won that medal. All honor to Mr. Thomas, a busy circuit rider.

Bandera was also surprised with a medal contest by six Mexican girls who had attended school at Laredo Seminary. Maria Herrera won the medal. The same girls afterward spoke at Kerrville with another to take the medalist's place. Nicolasa Hill was the fortunate one.

Contests have also been held in San Antonio during the summer. West End L. T. L. is still flourishing under the care of Mrs. Rountree, its devoted superintendent. There are frequently a hundred in attendance.

While not exactly W. C. T. U. work it is in our line and I will mention the rescue work that is now going on in San Antonio under the care of Rev. W. W. Pinson, Mrs. Pinson and Mrs. Ohlstrom. The keeper of a well known disreputable house has been converted and made a public profession of her conversion. She sent all the girls she had in her house to their own homes except one, to whom she gives a home. The owner of the house proposes to give the house for a refuge for unfortunate girls who wish to reform. It is a large, two-story, frame house elegantly furnished. Services are held there every few days, and there have been several conversions. How to maintain it is the question.

UTAH.

A GLANCE AFIELD.

The white-ribboners from Maine to California I know will be glad to hear of Utah's progress, and what I tell you in these gleanings from the field I trust will seem encouraging, although to us who are here laboring day by day, the seed sowing results in such a poor harvest. It is now almost time for another territorial convention, and so many of our most earnest workers are absent in the East that we fear it may not have the attendance that is desired just now when there is great need in Utah of agitation on the temperance question.

During the spring an interesting temperance convention was held in Salt Lake City, which was a perfect success. It was the result of the work of the ministers in this territory, and was a gathering of most devoted and earnest temperance workers. Mrs. Eddy, of Logan, presented the W. C. T. U. cause in a most able manner, many remarking that her paper was the best given during the convention. The result of the convention was the organization of a territorial temperance club, and its object was to promote temperance sentiment. It was thought best not to make it a third party, but let work be done along the two great parties.

The Good Citizenship League has also urged the need of temperance instruction in the public schools. This is done to some extent in all the grades, but books are used only in the higher grades. Teachers are instructed to impress upon children the effects of stimulants and narcotics on the human system. We are very anxious to see the work more thoroughly done in the lower grades, and are working to that point.

Demorest medal contests have been held in some of the smaller places, and have been successful. Many young people have become interested in temperance through these contests that might not have been reached in any other way. We are hoping to make the contests more a feature of the work, but will talk that over at the convention.

Mrs. Telford, of Denver, Col., is now in the Territory and is doing able work in the lecture field. She is assisting the president, Mrs. Martin, in arousing temperance enthusiasm, and we expect to have her in Salt Lake City in a very short time. The Y's are doing excellent work in this city by remembering the sick and afflicted in the hospitals and their many little, thoughtful deeds to the suffering.

Dr. Anna Shaw and Susan B. Anthony were here this spring in the interest of woman's suffrage, but our union had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Anna Shaw at a reception given for them by the W. C. T. U. of this city. We were sorry that their time was so fully taken that we could not have the benefit of their talent.

As is well known, the suffragists secured the clause in the constitution giving the franchise to women, when Utah shall have been admitted as a state, but the Prohibitionists, who worked just as hard for their clause, did not succeed. However, we are promised much when women vote, and we hope to make Utah a temperance state very soon after her admission.

Considering all things, we are determined to bravely march on, and never falter until Utah shall stand out as a clean, pure state, an ornament to the Union.

RHODE ISLAND.

SUMMER JOTTINGS.

Rhode Island is not asleep. In fact, she is very wide awake, but her correspondent has been taking a vacation for so long that to give a detailed account of the work meanwhile would be impracticable.

Our little state was represented in London at the World's Convention by six white-ribbon women. So interested were the workers at home that noon hour prayer-meetings were held at headquarters during the week of the Convention, asking for blessing upon the meetings, upon the leaders, delegates and rank and file. The reports from London justify us in repeating, "The Lord hears and answers prayers." Since that week, by special request, we have kept up our day of prayer on Friday of each week. Our leaders have been Mrs. J. K. Barney, Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Mrs. H. D. Walker, Rev. G. S. Weaver, of New York, the state president, and superintendents of evangelistic work and of work among railroad and firemen. The interest increases and we trust that out of this noontide retreat hearts will return to their labors "strengthened by His spirit in the inner man."

Several of our summer meetings have been of special significance. A "World's Convention meeting" held at the home of Mrs. L. N. Meader at Saylesville, was attended by more than a hundred men and women, and notes of the great meeting were given by three delegates. The grounds were lighted with Japanese lanterns, the speakers stood on the piazza, and tables with bountiful refreshments were spread upon the lawn. A good collection was taken and sent to the state treasury.

Successful conventions have been held in all the districts. Middletown, on the beautiful island of Rhode Island, was the spot chosen by the third district. Delegates from many unions were present and a good audience listened to the service of praise and thanksgiving for the safe return of the World's delegate. Papers upon various topics of interest well repaid the people who left their homes to hear them. The L. T. L. hour was one of the brightest of the day, and all spoke highly of the report of the World's Convention by our delegate. Beautiful songs added to the program.

The Y's of Providence have held three meetings for the purpose of increasing the interest in our work among the Y. P. S. C. E. societies. Each was addressed by a leading clergyman of the Universalist, Episcopalian and Methodist societies respectively. A social time followed and all were pronounced successful in a large degree.

Newport union is carrying on aggressive work under its zealous president, Mrs. Howes. Gospel services are held each Sabbath. Parlor meetings have been made both interesting and instructive and other lines are followed with good results.

Abbot's Run is always earnest in school work. Physiologies have been furnished to the teachers, one of whom arranged an exercise consisting of songs and recitations by the children. Miss Cargill, president of the union, told a story, an address followed and each child was presented with a card and booklet as a reward for cheerful effort.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of New York, has been with us several days, visiting our rescue homes, missions and W. C. T. Unions at Olneyville, Providence and Pawtucket. The results of her efforts are already apparent in the addition to our ranks of fifty new members and a great revival of interest in the cause.

Mrs. Barney soon sails for England to resume the work which she dropped last spring to return to her home. Her parting words to the workers gathered in executive meeting August 30, were founded on the text, "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." Those who listened to her that day cannot fail to carry more of earnest purpose into the work of the year before them because of her words. We shall miss her presence with us, but the work is one and we are glad to loan her for a little time to our sisters across the sea.

Preparations are going forward for our state convention at Woonsocket and we hope for blessed results.

News in a Nutshell.

AT the recent gold medal contest of the first district Illinois W. C. T. U. convention the medal was awarded to a saloon-keeper's daughter who beautifully recited "A Voice from the Poorhouse." The second prize was a year's subscription to Young Women.

AFTER fifteen years in South Dakota, Mrs. Ruby J. Smart has returned to her native state, and city of Boston. Having been through the conquests for prohibition, she feels regret in leaving as the new campaign under resubmission draws on. God must have other workers ready for the conflict while she may be able to "lend a hand" elsewhere.

THE union at Ovid, Mich., cordially endorse the work of Mr. H. E. Gurney whose labors among them have been productive of great good. He remains a week in each place, his only remuneration being a small admission fee of ten and fifteen cents on two evenings. Any desirous of securing his services can do so by addressing him soon in care of Gertrude Minore, Ovid, Mich.

MISS C. S. BURNETT, of Brockway, O., who is state organizer, has recently added new unions at Nova and Carroll. She has attended four county conventions since she returned from London, and lectured twenty-five times besides much other work. At each point she visits the schools and speaks on "Narcotics." She also gives popular lectures before schools and colleges. Parties desiring her services can write to her at address given.

REV. EUGENIA ST. JOHN was unanimously elected ministerial delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church which meets in Kansas City, Kan., in May, 1896. The Conference was entitled to two ministerial delegates and two lay delegates. Four ladies and four gentlemen were elected, including alternates. "Male and female created he them." Mrs. St. John has recovered her health somewhat. She speaks at Nebraska convention last week in this month, also at Kansas W. C. T. U. state convention. She did not accept any regular work this year at the hands of her conference, needing rest as much as possible.

THE W. C. T. U. of North Monroe, N. H., was organized March 12, 1895, with eight active and two honorary members. Since then meetings have been held regularly every two weeks at the homes of the members and there are now thirty-five active and eleven honorary members. Although they had been organized only six months it was thought best to hold their first annual meeting September 5. The meeting was opened with devotional exercises, after which a business meeting was held. The treasurer's report, also the report of each superintendent of the different departments was read and three officers elected. Rev. J. H. Hoffman, of Littleton, gave an illustrated lecture on "The Black Valley Railway," which was very interesting. At seven they listened to an illustrated lecture about the effects of strong drink upon the human stomach, by Rev. J. B. Merrill, of Littleton, which cannot fail to do great good. Both afternoon and evening meetings were well attended and a great success.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

This week my column will be a chapter of announcements and requests.

1. Will all the superintendents who have arranged department meetings which they wish noted on the first pages of the program, as was done last year, please notify me at once, both of time and place.

2. The local committee some time ago wished me to say that if any of the members of the Convention are intending to furnish their own entertainment, as has been done in the past, it would be a great favor if they would notify them of the fact. Baltimore will be crowded this year, and if a place is assigned to any woman which she does not intend to fill, it will be an act of great kindness to the local committee if she will let them them know it as soon as possible, that the place may be passed on to some one else.

3. Will all the state officers send to me, for the convenience of the Sunday meeting committee, lists of speakers in their delegation who "might, could, would or should" occupy pulpits on Convention Sabbath? Please do not fail to observe this request.

4. Will all corresponding secretaries notify me, immediately after their state conventions, of any change in the official roster, and will they also send an accredited list of delegates to the chairman of the entertainment committee at Baltimore, that she may arrange for their entertainment.

But a few more days remain for the states to send in their dues, in order that we may learn which one among them has secured five hundred new members, and which, if any, are in excess of that amount. I hope to be able to make the announcement in next week's paper. Please give the utmost diligence to this matter, and remember that the treasurer's book must always be the final authority. One organizer has reported more new members secured in one state than the state has paid dues for in both old and new members. The fault was not hers, but must rest with those who joined and failed to pay. Our work is constantly minimized in this way. We are hoping for a grand gain at the final round-up, but in this year, shortened by one month, it must be by earnest effort on the part of all, if gain is made.

Monday evening of the Convention promises to be unique in character. It is impossible to tell just yet what the program will be, but prepare for something beyond your wildest expectations. Tuesday evening has been set apart as Benefit Night, and as soon as we know what states are entitled to be consulted in the make-up of its program, we will announce whatever features they choose to have made public. The song service for Wednesday will be, I am sure, a never-to-be-forgotten delight. Some of the songs have been already sent in, and have thrilled our hearts in the reading. What will it be to hear them sung!

Treasurer's Corner.

In the midst of much work incident to the closing up of the year's record and the preparations for the coming convention, I take my pen to remind superintendents that all financial reports that are to be incorporated, or printed as an addendum to the treasurer's report, must be in her hands by October 1.

Dues have been received during last week from New York, New Hampshire, North California, Illinois, Maine, Massachusetts, Kansas, Virginia, South Dakota, New Mexico, Connecticut. Some of the states already show a good gain but we cannot yet tell which is the prize state. Remember that all dues that are in the hands of National treasurer October 1 will be reported at Baltimore.

A good friend in Maine sends a donation to the National of five dollars, while a birthday gift comes from Sarah D. Pahadie, New Jersey.

Don't forget to devote Miss Willard's birthday, September 28, to a rousing meeting and make a special plea for a large Crusade collection and especially to securing new members. Self-denial contributions to World's and National should be gathered on Mrs. Leavitt's birthday, September 22. Make this a week of good deeds and helpfulness to the work.

NOTES.

The members of the Baltimore W. C. T. U. have arranged an excursion to Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon, for Thursday, October 24, the day after the close of the Convention. Special cars will be furnished the delegates and special rates have been obtained. If two hundred or more tickets are taken a special train will be supplied. Tickets including admission to the grounds of Mount Vernon two dollars.

As is well known Mount Vernon, Va., is where George Washington resided and where he died in 1799. It is about fifteen miles from the Capital, and it is pleasantly reached by the Pennsylvania railroad to Alexandria, and thence via the Washington, Alexandria & Mount Vernon Electric railway. This is a delightful trip, affording a splendid view of the Potomac River, Long Bridge, Arlington, Naval stores; through the streets of Alexandria; Christ Church, where Washington worshiped; Jackson House, where Colonel Ellsworth was killed; Braddock House, Fort Foote, and other places of interest on the Potomac River. The hills used as fortifications by the Confederates are also in full view.

Special rates to Annapolis, the state capital, and seat of the United States Naval Academy, have also been obtained. Round trip tickets are sold for seventy-five cents, provided one hundred or more are guaranteed.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

TWENTY-FIVE LETTERS ON

ENGLISH AUTHORS,

By MARY FISHER. 12mo, cloth. 406 pages. Price $1.50.

This work treats of those eminent writers who for more than five hundred years have most influenced the thought of the world. The author makes the reader acquainted not only with the character of their works, but, what is of greater interest, with them as men—what they felt and believed, their way of looking at life, and their experiences.

The work is a departure from its class in its omission of the hackneyed judgments which pass from book to book; its fresh, telling matter, from original sources; and its special notice of the effects of weak and vicious literature upon young minds—its mission being to inculcate a taste for the "best that has been thought and said in the world."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

This is a book marked for its simplicity of style and its directness in clear statements of the literary characteristics of eminent English authors, from Chaucer in 1400 to Mrs. Humphry Ward in 1891. Such a broad field can give only epitome sketches, but her characters are wonderfully clear in their delineation. She does this not so much in words of her own, but allows each to speak, and thus clothes each in living character; what each thought and believed; how they lived and acted and labored. The reader will seldom find more of positive value in such small space, told more vigorously and pleasingly, than in the neat, compact volume. Teachers and literary clubs will find the book boundlessly suggestive—inviting to wider fields—while the intelligent, thoughtful reader will find richness upon every page. It is not often a book of the kind is more deserving of full commendation.

Kernels.

Mrs. Mushley—"John has got the hypnotism."

Mrs. Gushley—"What kind of a disease is that?"

Mrs. Mushley—"Why, you know; rheumatism in the hip."

Kitty was learning her Sabbath-school lesson, and one motto she had to say was, "Walk in the way of good men."

"Mamma," she said, after a minute's thoughtful pause, "papa is a good man, isn't he?"

"Certainly, my dear."

"Well, I don't see what it means. You always tell me not to get in papa's way, but he is a good man, and this says, 'Walk in the way of good men.' I think it's pretty queer."

The latest discovered haunt of the bacilli is the window-sill. This little stone ledge affords an excellent roosting place for the enterprising bacillus, where he may sit and brood until the convenient breeze transports him into the bosom of your family.

"Young man," said the fond father, "in giving you my daughter I have entrusted you with the dearest treasure of my life." The young man was duly impressed. Then he looked at his watch. "Really," he remarked, "I had no idea it was so late. The cars have stopped. Could I borrow your wheel to get down town?" "Young man, I would not trust anybody on earth with that wheel."

"I enjoyed your lecture on the financial issue very much," said the citizen to the orator, "but I would like to ask you one question." "Certainly," said the orator, "go ahead." "What side of the question are you on?"

Health, comfort and happiness abound in homes where "Garland" Stoves and Ranges are used.

"Dis is to-morrer," said Russell, as he waked early one morning. "No, it ain't," said Jimmieboy, "this is to-day." "No, 'tain't," said Russell. "Yesterday was to-day. Mamma said so, and she said last night when I waked up it would be to-morrer. Dis is to-morrer."

"I'm going to call my baby Charles," said the author, "after Lamb, because he is such a dear little lamb."

"Oh, I'd call him William Dean," said the friend, "he Howells so much."

Aunt Fanny and little Walter had a difference of opinion. "I tell you," said auntie, playfully, "I know a few things."

"And I know as few things as anybody," replied Master Walter, proudly.

NEW KIDNEY AND BLADDER CURE.

The new botanic discovery, Alkavis, is an assured cure for kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back and rheumatism. The best proof is that the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, will send you treatment by mail prepaid free, if you send them your name and address. Alkavis has certainly wrought some wonderful cures, and we advise our readers to try it, as it is offered free.

A class of pupils being asked to mention the name of a ship in which the Pilgrims came over, a little fellow enthusiastically responded: "I know, teacher; 'Pilgrim's Progress."

"Our first impressions most readily slip our memories," said the teacher.

"Oh, I know why," shouted Johnny.

"Well, why?"

"Our first impressions are slippers."

Tramp: Will you please give me something to eat, sir?

Farmer: Yes, but do you see that pile of wood out there?

Tramp: Oh yes, you saw me see it but you won't see me saw it.

"Ah! what's this?" exclaimed the intelligent compositor. "'Sermons in stones, books in the running brooks?' That can't be right. I have it! 'Sermons in books, stones in the running brooks.' That's sense." And that is how the writer found it. And yet he was not happy.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Home Hints.

Graham bread:—Two teacups thick sour milk. One-half teacup New Orleans molasses or brown sugar. One small teaspoonful soda. A little salt. Thicken stiff with graham flour. Stand in warm place and let rise three-quarters of an hour. Bake in slow oven about one hour.

Lemon pie:—Two eggs, leave out one white. One cup of sugar. Pinch of salt. One tablespoonful cornstarch. Beat eggs thoroughly, put in cornstarch wet with a little cold water, then sugar. Grate in the whole of one lemon. Last add one cup of boiling water. This makes one pie. Beat the white, left out, to a stiff froth, adding about two teaspoonfuls of sugar. Spread this on the pie when cold, set in oven until a delicate brown.

Do not let the tablecloths go to the wash with holes in them, for the holes get larger in a very alarming way. If the breaks are very small darn them carefully with linen floss which is the same size as thread of the cloth. For larger holes baste a square of the same material under the hole, matching the pattern as nearly as possible, trim off the edges, turn under and hem down. Turn the cloth over and hem the edges of the patch down in the same manner. If this is neatly done the place will hardly show when laundried.

For a cough, boil one ounce of flaxseed in a pint of water; strain and add a little honey, one ounce of rock candy and the juice of three lemons. Mix and boil well; drink as hot as possible.

To test a ham that you are boiling slip a sharp knife in along the side of the bone. If it comes out milky looking the ham is not done; if clean, it is.

White and delicately tinted book bindings may be cleaned by rubbing them with a soft, perfectly fresh piece of chamois skin dipped in very finely powdered pumice stone.

Some one says that raisins for fruit cake are very much improved by cooking. Let them soak and then simmerslowly until the skin is tender.

It hardly seems necessary to make a suggestion about anything so simple as folding table linen, but it is so often ironed with the monogram, initial or name on the inside that a word may not be untimely. Fold both napkins and cloths with the selvages together, and be sure that the embroidered markings are on the outside corner. The same rule applies to handkerchiefs. However, these remarks are much like those which the minister makes to his congregation about rainy day Christians, the right ones don't get the scolding.

Children, as a rule, get the most amusement from playthings which stimulate their imagination and give their inventive powers a chance. A pair of scissors with blunt blades, a small assortment of colored tissue paper and colored pencils will furnish the average child employment for many an hour.

To clean zinc, wet it over with vinegar, let it remain a few minutes, then wash thoroughly with warm water.

To remove grease from matting wet the spots with alcohol; rub on white pure soap, forming a thick covering. Let this dry on and then wash off with warm salt water.

Among the new conveniences for cooking are caketins with movable sides, which allow careful handling of the most delicate cake, as the sides are held in place by tiny springs, which on being removed leave the cake on a flat tin, which answers the purpose of cake cooler.

Here is a good idea taken from The Household. In a certain delightful home there is on the library table a dainty receptacle called the chip-basket. The chips are bits of pasteboard, cut from a large sheet into many shapes—squares, triangles, oblongs, etc. It is the home of a family where much reading aloud is done, and on these cards are written the wise, witty or curious truths and sayings that please as they are read. One of the members of the family who is clever with his pen illustrates many of the quotations in black and white while listening to the reading. The chip-basket furnishes a constant opportunity to fasten in the memory these choice selections.

OCTOBER BIBLE READING

is written by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, which is saying enough to insure a wide circulation among unions, the writer being well-known and well-loved by white-ribboners from the beginning. The subject is and like all Mrs. Henry's Bible expositions is replete with spiritual food, and the inspiration which strengthens aspiration and results in more faithful service for the Master. It reveals in every word the clear vision of one who walks closely with God and will come as a message of practical uplift to every worker. It is a most timely reading and might be used most helpfully in connection with our National Day of Prayer, October 3.

October Responsive Reading,

by Mrs. Mary T. Lovell, National superintendent of the mercy department, is a presentation of practical methods for carrying on the work of this department in local unions. It answers the question, How are Bands of Mercy in line with temperance work, suggests the best way to conduct them, outlines a program for meetings, gives information concerning supplies, in fact, the reading is a most practical help and will doubtless result in giving added impetus to the work of the mercy department throughout the country. We hope it will be very generally used by local unions.

The season of conventions is at hand. Are you making a choice selection of music from the White Ribbon Hymnal? Good, thrilling, hearty music will give life to your gatherings, and a liberal supply of books is a necessity. Until October 1 we will sell these at $3 per dozen; $1.50 per half dozen for cash only. There surely will not be a better opportunity to supply your union, and a five or ten cent contribution from each member will help the "good cause" amazingly. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union owns a large number of these Hymnals, and if each state convention would have a good supply on hand always, is it not wise to own them at such a trifling cost?

SPECIAL OFFER.

From August 15 to October 1, with every cash order of literature or subscriptions amounting to $5, we will give a copy of "A Wheel Within a Wheel; or, How I Learned to Ride a Bicycle," by Miss Frances E. Willard.

For every cash order of literature or subscriptions amounting to $10, we will give a copy of "A Great Mother," a sketch of Madam Willard. "One of the noblest incentives to true motherhood this age has seen."

RAILROAD RATES

TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION,

Baltimore, Md., October 18-23, 1895.

The committee on transportation had hoped, yea, had dared to believe, that this year they might secure the much to be desired concession of one fare for the round trip, not upon the ground of numbers, but of the increasing importance and influence of these yearly conventions. Correspondence, personal interviews have availed naught; the maximum of attendance is the only point of consideration; the fiat of the secretary of the Trunk Line Association, in whose jurisdiction the Convention is to be held, has gone forth, and the lowest possible rate is one and one-third fare upon the certificate plan.

Railroad Associations.

The railroad associations which have already granted the one and one-third rate, are the Trunk Line, Central Traffic and Southern Passenger Association. The Western Lines Passenger Associations and New England Passenger Committees have the matter under consideration, and it is believed will grant the concession, so that a uniform rate upon the certificate plan will doubtless be secured in all territory covered by the various associations.

The Certificate Plan.

The certificate plan makes necessary the obtaining a certificate from the agent of whom the ticket to Baltimore is purchased, which certificate must be duly signed and stamped by him, indorsed at the meeting in Baltimore by Caroline F. Grow, and viséd by special agent of the association at that point.

Owing to the meeting of the National Purity Association to be held the same week in Baltimore, the tickets will cover the dates from October 14–23, and may be purchased THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) prior to October 14. Certificates will not be honored unless presented within THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) after the adjournment of the meeting.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. In such a case the ticket agent can inform a delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained, a local ticket should be purchased to such station, and through ticket and certificate there obtained.

Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

Tickets are available for continuous fare only, and no refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

It would be well for delegates to give ticket agents such timely notice of their intentions that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required.

Those wishing to avail themselves of the concessions should be present at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before the departure of train. As members arrive their certificates should be deposited with me, so as to be ready for special agent upon his arrival.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

It is frequency of such disastrous mistakes that led Mrs. Sarah Perkins, of this city, to write the story of "Helen; Or Will She Save Him?" which has been published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London. In her preface Mrs. Perkins says: "In studying the lives of those around me, and in listening to tales of broken hopes and broken hearts, particularly since I have thought more about 'the evil that is destroying more lives than war, pestilence and famine,' I have wished that young women would exercise more care about linking their destinies with those who use the intoxicating cup, even moderately. So many have listened to the sweet words, 'my badness was all before I knew you; had your pure influence been about me I had never fallen. But it is not yet too late. Be my guardian angel and all will be well.' Into such a snare many and many a noble girl has fallen, but the saving never came. This thought has led me to raise the warning voice. That it may be heard, and save some young spirit from a sorrowful future is the earnest wish and prayer of the author."

Mrs. Perkins has succeeded in making a very good story, and its purpose cannot be too highly commended. The lesson it teaches is one that cannot too strongly be urged upon girls and young women.—Plain Dealer, Cleveland, O.

IN TIME OF NEED.

"Have you a copy of the Birthday Book?" "Have you an extra silver pin?" were two questions asked us frequently on the outward-bound steamer, and it occurred to us that no white-ribboner should start from home without these essentials. Fountain pens were pressed into service constantly, and the possessor of a Birthday Book had an air of conscious superiority as she saw her neighbor asking for autographs on an ordinary pad of paper. Just what you need at state, county and National conventions is the White Ribbon Birthday Book.

Signal Notes.

GENERAL BOOTH is on a tour around the world.

THE United Temperance Conference committee will meet in London, November 12-14 to take action on a united temperance bill.

A GRANT of one hundred pounds from the Royal Bounty Fund was given Dr. Frederick Lees, the British octogenarian temperance reformer.

MR. GULLY, a great lawyer and the new speaker of the House of Commons, states that although he has always been very abstemious, since becoming speaker he has never tasted intoxicating liquor, and finds that total abstinence has done him much good. All he drinks is a glass of apollinaris water at lunch.

A PARIS correspondent writes that all classes in France are fast poisoning themselves with spirits and with the essential oils such as are found in absinthe, bitters and so called digestive liqueurs. The Academy of Medicine has termed these "pick-me-ups" rank poison which must lead by degrees to the degeneracy of the race. He asserts the need of a remedy but thinks it "most doubtful whether a pledge would have much effect on this fickle race." The education which leads to prohibition is the only cure.

THE "Summer Garden" of the Woburn, Mass., Y. M. C. A. is a practical exemplification of religion in active operation. It was started as a counter attraction to the thirteen licensed saloons of that city. A corner store was secured, seats were provided and a generous assortment of papers and magazines. An orchestra discoursed good music for two or three hours each evening. Ice cream and lemonade were provided at cost. During the first ten weeks the attendance averaged eight hundred and five each night, thus proving the need for such a pleasant resort.

THE Polyglot Petition was photographed on August 8, at Memorial Hall, London, the height of the cube composed by the Petition and the boxes in which it is kept being ten feet and the breadth fifteen. An impression of the size of the mass is obtained by seeing the photograph in which it lifts itself far above the heads of the two leaders, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard, who are seated in front of it busily examining a scroll of the Petition. This interesting souvenir of the largest petition in the world may be had by writing to the secretary of the British Women's Temperance Association, Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London. All moneys received will be used to extend the work of the World's W. C. T. U., especially in India, Australia and South Africa.

THE University of Buffalo has recently incorporated a school of pedagogy with its other departments of law, medicine, dentistry and pharmacy. The school is designed for advanced students of teaching; particularly, though not altogether, for principals, superintendents and training teachers, and hence will be devoted exclusively to professional work. The school is in no sense a money-making institution, being sustained by the munificence of public-spirited citizens of Buffalo, under the conviction that institutions of the highest order for the training of teachers are seriously needed. The course of study covers a period of two years. The first term opens on Wednesday, September 25, 1895. Any information in regard to the school may be obtained by addressing Herbert G. Lord, 55 Cottage Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

IT is stated that in the last quarter of a century seventy-five millions of the money made in America has been given to the cause of education. George Peabody left $6,000,000 of his estate to the cause of education; Isaac Rich, $2,000,000 to Boston University; Johns Hopkins, $3,140,000 to found a university in Baltimore, which bears his name; Asa Packard gave $3,000,000 to Lehigh University; D. B. Fayerweather left a bequest of nearly $3,000,000 to various colleges; Cornelius Vanderbilt gave $1,000,000 to the Vanderbilt University; John C. Green gave $1,500,000 to Princeton College; Asa Stone, $600,000 to Adelbert College; G. I. Seney, $450,000 to Wesleyan University; Matthew Vassar, $800,000 to Vassar College for Women; J. D. Rockefeller's gifts to the Chicago University aggregate $4,500.000, and Leland Stanford's estate will yield from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 for the university that bears his name on the Pacific coast. Dr. Pearsons, of Chicago, has given away vast sums during the past six years in helping weak institutions. This is a notable record.

Gentlemen: About three years ago, while working at my trade as blacksmith, I was taken down with Kidney disease. I suffered severely with pain in my back and general weakness, and was compelled to quit work. I was treated by several different doctors, who filled me full of drugs and medicines, but without benefit. I had begun to get discouraged when I received one of your almanacs and read of a case in it that was similar to mine, cured through the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. I concluded to try it. The result was entirely satisfactory as I began to improve immediately. I used, in all, three bottles, and was able to go to work once more, and ever since have enjoyed the best of health. I would be doing less than my duty if I failed to give you these facts, so that others may hear of the wonderful powers of your Liver and Kidney Balm.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Sir Herbert Murray has been appointed governor of Newfoundland.

Rock River, Ill., M. E. conference, without a dissenting voice, has endorsed woman delegates to the General Conference.

Professor Louis Pasteur, the famous French bacteriologist and inventor of the cure for hydrophobia, born in 1822, died Saturday at Paris.

Rev. H. Webb Peploe, Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, concluded a series of meetings at Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, October 2.

By a vote more nearly unanimous (101 to 10) than any yet taken by that body the Indiana Methodist conference has favored woman's representation.

A new movement has generated among Irishmen in America, as an outcome of the recent convention in Chicago, which is to be known as the Irish National Alliance, and whose object is securing the independence of Ireland.

An interview between the Spanish minister, Senor de Lome, and Secretary of War Olney, regarding the Cuban insurrection, has resulted in the statement that unless the rebellion is ended in three months' time, the United States will take steps to protect its citizens and commercial interests in the island.

WE call attention to Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth's letter on page 4 of this issue. Her recent address on "The New Woman" has been so widely misrepresented by the newspapers that our readers will be glad to have this explanation from one whom we all regard as a warm friend and ally of the W. C. T. U., and as a splendid type of the real new woman she so truly describes. Mrs. Booth is particularly anxious that the correct interpretation of her views upon this absorbing question shall reach white-ribboners.

WE remind our readers that October 3 is to be observed by the W. C. T. U. throughout the country as a day of prayer "for the work and workers and for unity of spirit at the National Convention." Let every white-ribboner, either in the prayer and praise meeting of the local union, or in the seclusion of her own home, lift up heart and voice in petition to the Supreme Leader of the Christian temperance hosts for an outpouring of His spirit. In this way each may become a factor—and perhaps the humblest the mightiest—in the success of our great Convention.

SPEAKING of the reforms advocated by his church, a leading Methodist divine declared the other day in the Rock River Conference: "When a Methodist Episcopal preacher reaches a town, whether he comes in a palace car or on foot, on a bicycle or on horseback, the liquor dealers know that a mighty and uncompromising enemy has invaded their territory." That depends. If he preaches and prays and works against the liquor traffic and on election day votes for it, he is not the kind of foe to be feared by the saloon-keepers. If he gives his vote or lends his influence to a party that in any way countenances the drink business, he is neither a "mighty" nor an "uncompromising" enemy of the evil which his church declares "cannot be legalized without sin."

THE following extract from a private letter, the writer of which is a regular correspondent of a leading daily paper of St. Louis, gives an interesting glimpse of a country about which too little is known: "I am out in the Ozarks, and in a country to which Puritan New England could not hold a candle. They indict people for doing unnecessary labor on Sunday; it is a misdemeanor with heavy penalty to give away a drink of liquor, and there seems to be a revival in progress in nearly every town of any size, with meetings three times a day. They have no railroads but they are the most religious people I know of anywhere. In three counties the only prisoner was a crazy man. My preconceived opinions about the north Arkansas country have been completely upset." The three-mile law of Arkansas, we would add, is one of the best local option laws in existence, because the most prohibitive. The women people as well as the men people have a voice on this question and as a result a large proportion of counties in that state are under prohibition. We are glad to know that the weak point in the law—that which exempted native wine—has been removed, and now in prohibition localities intoxicating liquor can no longer be sold under the name of "native wine."

"IF it were not for drunkenness there would be no crime in Ireland at all," was the statement of Archbishop Croke, of Ireland, in a recent interview. "As it is, there is no crime which does not arise out of that evil. . . . We are contending against drinking customs in every way we can." This statesman-prelate thinks, with Prohibitionists, that reducing the number of drinking places does not reduce the amount of liquor sold. He says: "As for the number of houses licensed for the sale of drink, that need not concern you; I do not think that the number of licensed houses stands in any relation whatever to the quantity of drink consumed. . . . A man can get drunk in one place as soon as he can in half a dozen." That Archbishop Croke has "advanced ideas" is proved from the fact that he notes with "keen delight the success which has attended the bold initiative taken by New Zealand in the enfranchisement of women." This from a leading light in the Romish church is a noteworthy sign of the times, and the fact that the Archbishop was for many years a resident bishop of this progressive little island gives his opinion more than ordinary weight and significance. New Zealand, he declares, will soon be recognized by Great Britain as the "brightest jewel in the Imperial diadem."

THAT keen observer of the signs of the times, Cardinal Gibbons (recently returned from Europe), gives it as his opinion that "all the powers are, without doubt, most anxious for a general disarmament, but neither of them is disposed to take the initiative." It is not to be expected that either of the great nations is going to be the first to disarm under present conditions. The first step toward a consummation so beneficent in its influences to all mankind, is clearly the establishment of an international court of arbitration. Before the powers that be will dispense with their standing armies, which are such a burden to the tax-payers, they must arrive at some mutual understanding with regard to future methods of settling disputes. The special work of peace advocates just now is in the line of securing parliamentary action looking toward permanent peace treaties between the leading nations.

"HOME again!" Every white-ribboner will, in thought, send a loving welcome to our beloved Chieftain who landed in New York last Saturday. Among the white ribboners at the dock to greet her were Mrs. Frances J. Barnes and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, who conveyed official greetings of New York state convention, which had just closed. Not only her loyal following of the W. C. T. U., but Americans generally are glad to have our leader once more on this side the water. A prominent Chicago daily thus truly voices public sentiment: "Miss Willard will be welcomed as only one can be welcomed who is held in the loving esteem of all who know her and come in contact with her." She will attend the Pennsylvania state convention October 11 to 15, in fulfillment of the promise to speak for that state showing the greatest gain in membership during the past year, and with Miss Gordon will spend the intervening days with Dr. Cordelia Green, of Castile, N. Y., where Miss Gordon's mother and sister are also guests.

THE decision of Judge Chitty, one of the most famous judges of the English bench, in the suit of Lady Somerset, was given under peculiar circumstances. The White Hart Hotel in Reigate is an old family hotel at which George the Third was wont to stop when he went coaching from London to Brighton, and which was well known long before his day. It is a sort of family hotel, and for a place that has a bar is said to be remarkably "well kept." It is the only hotel of any "standing" in Reigate, and the point made against Lady Somerset is that to close it would have kept many people from going to the town. Nevertheless, for her to have renewed the lease without protest would have been wholly inconsistent with her position as the leading temperance reformer among the women of the British Empire. She had then no alternative when her trustees declared that they would not submit to the withholding of the license on the ground that by this means she was doing damage to an estate of which they are the guardians, and she but a tenant for life. But although Judge Chitty stated that each case of the kind was to be judged on its merits and consequently his ruling was not of a general character, Lady Somerset has felt that the case ought to be carried to a higher court, since, if the present ruling stands, the presumption would be against the power of a life tenant to keep public houses off his estate and that would gradually lead to the introduction of these houses on large areas that are now protected from them. Doubtless we have not heard the last of this already famous case. Meanwhile the general principle that the value of real estate is diminished rather than enhanced by the presence of a house at which intoxicating liquors are sold as beverages is being insisted on by the religious and philanthropic press of England, and the outcome of this controversy will no doubt be a more complete education of the people concerning the "true inwardness" of the dramshop, whether it exists "pure and simple" or is described as the bar of a hotel.

THE NEW KINGDOM.

BY MARY MARK LEMON.

Two little friendless children—
  Comrades for more than a year.
One sold flowers on a doorstep,
  One swept a crossing near.
He was a curly haired laddie,
  Brimful of laughter and fun;
She was a staid little lassie,
  Her hair kiss'd gold by the sun.

And when the lights of the city
  Told that the night had come,
She would tell him a wonderful story
  Of a kingdom she had heard called "home."
Roses that cost not a penny
  Grew in a garden fair,
Lilies that never faded
  Blossom'd in winter there.

Over a golden threshold
  Children were always at play,
Nobody sang for money
  So nobody sent them away.
And when she had finished her story
  They wished that a stranger would come
And show them the beautiful pathway,
  That leads to the kingdom called "home."

One night, when the snow was falling,
  He came for the old sweet tale;
But her voice began to falter,
  Her face grew wan and pale;
One kiss on the gold-crown'd forehead,
  And he knew that the stranger had come
To show her the beautiful pathway
  That led to the kingdom called "home."

THE MINOR PENALTY.

BY J. F. COWAN.

"Disobey this warning on the penalty of death.
"Personal Liberty."

These were the concluding words of an anonymous communication over which John Boreland had just been poring. It had startled him a little when his eyes first fell upon the threatening words scrawled in glaring red characters (probably intended to convey the impression that it had been written in blood) upon the page of note paper he had unfolded. The substance of the warning was that, if he, John Boreland, did not desist from his obnoxious conduct of proposing to testify in court against certain liquor dealers of the town who were under indictment for illegal selling, it would be dangerous for him to remain longer in the community. At the lower left-hand corner were drawn characters intended to represent a skull and crossbones, and the language of the message throughout was of a blood-curdling, dastardly nature. John Boreland had found the missive slipped under the crack of his front door that morning. It was not the first one of the kind he had received, but the most explicit and direful in its tone.

"Well," he mused to himself, after meditating over the contents for a time, "I've no doubt they are brutal enough to carry out just such a program as they have indicated here. Hum—well, what is the difference? Let them do their work. I must do mine."

However, he thought it best to take counsel in the matter, and so dropped into the office of Henry Sayers, a legal friend of his, handing the letter out for his inspection.

"Ah! another Ku-klux!" commented the lawyer. "Well, John, this is beginning to grow interesting—not very, though, I suppose for you. Really, I don't like the ugly temper displayed in these things; and there is just the right sort of an element in this community to do what they are threatening."

"In spite of the fact," said John sententiously, "that the law provides heavy penalties for such offenses." There may have been a slight touch of irony in his tone.

"Yes," assented the lawyer, "after the offense has been committed and duly proved; but there's the rub. If we could even prove the identity of the threatener, we could only bind him over to keep the peace, but—"

"But we can't, and so we must go ahead and await developments," said John Boreland quietly.

"Do you think that the wisest course?" queried Mr. Sayers, elevating his eyebrows.

"I do not know what you would call 'wise' or 'discreet' or 'politic,' or by any of the other temporizing terms you lawyers are wont to use; but I do know very clearly what my duty seems to be in the case, and whatever is duty to me that I must do regardless of consequences."

"Pshaw! John," reasoned the lawyer, "I don't believe it is your duty to run into danger. It is not your duty to butt your head against a stone wall. There is a condition of affairs in this community which we all deplore, but which none of us seem to be able to correct. I don't see any sense in sacrificing a good man to the vengeance of a crowd of brutes and demons, and all to no purpose. If you could secure a jury that would send some of them to the penitentiary, it might be of some use."

John Boreland's lips shut close together as he answered: "Because 'a crowd of brutes and demons,' as you say, are terrorizing a community by their bullying and defiance of the laws of the state, is no one to have the courage to gainsay their right to do so?"

"Gainsaying is one thing, John, and overcoming might by right is another," urged the lawyer.

"I see I can't argue the case with you, Sayers," replied the young fellow; "and possibly it would be useless to argue it before the community. But there is one thing which I can do and will—that is, to set the example of fearless righteousness. Perhaps that will do some good, even if I fall; it may be that is the only way, the Lord's way."

"If ever there was a hot-blooded fanatic rushing on to his own ruin, that young fellow is one," commented the lawyer to himself, as John Boreland passed down the street. "But after all there is a pluck and nerve about it which I admire. If there were enough men in the community like him, this question would be easily settled."

Scowling, vengeful faces glared down upon John Boreland as he took his place in the witness-box, and with an unshaken voice testified in a way that would have been death to any cause but to the one so bolstered by cowardly and selfish interests and defiant lawlessness as was that of the whisky sellers in that town. Outside the court-room, peering through the windows, were dark, lowering faces, imbruted and savage. Some even hissed openly, despite the calls of the court for silence, and after endeavoring in vain to maintain order, the criers glanced around helplessly as though intimidated by the brazen defiance of lawlessness.

There was an ominous silence in the court-room when John Boreland stepped down from the witness-box, his duty done. No one spoke to him as he made his way from the court-room. Significant glances were cast at him as he passed down the street, some pitying, some full of vengeful fire. "Poor fellow!" a citizen was heard to say, who, upon former occasions, had been known to declare himself just as good a temperance man as anybody else dared to be, "he's a marked man."

And so he was marked in the sight of God and in the sight of God's people, who had sufficient faith in him to hope and believe that a time might come when the galling yoke of bondage to a gang of defiant law-breakers might be thrown off, and the boys and girls of the city be saved from the disgraceful spectacle of drunken men reeling down the streets, and from the hideous painted faces of bedizened women—the almost invariable accompaniment of whisky selling. Prayers ascended for him that night from hearts so loyal that they could not be reconciled to look upon such a state of things as a necessary evil.

"Please don't go, John," pleaded his sister, as he prepared himself for an errand that would necessarily expose him to the threatened revenge, "or, if you do, don't go alone. Take Harry Jones or some of the other neighbors with you."

"I have no right to expose the lives of any one but myself," replied the brave fellow, "and mine, you know, is in the hands of One who is abundantly able to take care of it."

"But you know, John, the penalty they threaten—and I did hope you could feel yourself excused from testifying."

"I knew the penalty," answered John, "but I also knew the command, 'Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul.' Had I refused I should have invited upon my head the greater penalty. I should have stultified my manhood, lost my self-respect and driven the life of God out of my soul by my cowardice. I could no longer have been His son had I feared to do what my Elder Brother did not fail to do when he was upon the earth—testify against sin and unrighteousness."

. . . . . .

"Bang! Bang!" rang out two sharp reports upon the still air of the night. Many ears were startled. Many felt dismal forebodings in their hearts. Some hastened with quick footsteps in the direction of the sound. It needed none to tell the story. In spite of their fears and warnings, the men of that city had not believed that sin would stalk red-handed on their highways so soon. Tender hands picked up the prostrate form and carried it homeward. But there were other hands clenched in righteous indignation. There were hearts steeled as nothing else could have steeled them, with courage to henceforth resist with their own lives such a murderous cause. Men mounted fleet horses in pursuit. Bloodhounds were put upon the track. The whole community was aroused, and before another month had swept by, the storm of righteous indignation roused by the brutal revenge wreaked upon John Boreland, had swept that city clean of the curse and blight of rum-soaked lawlessness.

And on the monument which they reared to the hero-martyr, they wrote this inscription: "He suffered the less penalty of the assassin's bullet that he might keep alive his soul and the souls of those who beheld his faithfulness unto righteousness and unto the eternal God."

And John Boreland, could he have looked down upon his own city, must have felt that he had done well in choosing the lesser penalty.

A Prohibition Leader.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mr. Tennyson Smith is an Englishman who has worked for five years in Australasia and New Zealand where he accomplished much for the temperance cause, his special line as a speaker and organizer being Prohibition and the ballot for women. Miss Ackermann says that Mr. Tennyson Smith's work did much toward creating the sentiment that secured the ballot for women in New Zealand. His wife went with him, and their tour involved over 50,000 miles of travel, 1,500 lectures and 32,000 signatures to the pledge. He is perfectly at home on the platform and has the arguments for prohibition at his tongue's end.

Mr. Tennyson Smith was born in Birmingham, England, in November, 1850. He had the advantage of being trained by parents whose Christian teaching and refined taste left their impress upon their son. From earliest childhood he exhibited a talent for learning and possessed a really wonderful memory, as will be seen from the fact that he has frequently learned poems from simply hearing them once repeated. Although of a deeply religious nature he did not become an avowed Christian until early manhood. For some years he carried on a successful work among children in the church of which he was a member, and was also an acceptable lay preacher. Until 1879 h' was in the ranks of the moderate drinkers, holding the belief that "moderation is a higher virtue than total abstinence;" but on hearing the great orator, John B. Gough, in Carnarvon, Wales—who pleaded with Christians to abstain for the sake of others—he saw the selfishness of his arguments and decided henceforth to adopt the platform of the teetotaler.

As a temperance speaker he began by repeating from memory word for word, the very oration with which Mr. Gough had won his adherence to the temperance cause. His first effort was made at Denby, May, 1881, and was highly spoken of by the press. In a short space he won for himself a distinguished position in the ranks of temperance advocates, and in 1890, with a view to improving his wife's health, he went on a voyage to the antipodes. He has recently returned and a "demonstration" has been arranged for him in his native town. It seems fitting that our temperance workers should know these facts concerning one who purposes going to America before long to "lend a hand" in our great battle "For God and Home and Native Land."

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

BY JOSEPH S. SAGESER, M. D., M. S.

The question of the constitutionality of prohibitory law has long been settled by the highest court in the land.

As long ago as 1847, a Democratic United States Supreme Court unanimously declared that the state had power "to regulate, restrain, or prohibit altogether, the traffic in intoxicating liquors." And this decision was rendered in the face of the fact that two of America's greatest lawyers, Daniel Webster and Rufus Choate, pleaded the cause of the liquor dealers.

Just forty years later, a second decision was given from a Republican United States Supreme Court which was also unanimous and equally emphatic as to the power of the state to prohibit the liquor traffic within its borders.

Taking these two decisions as a basis for our reasoning, the following conclusions readily present themselves: First, the responsibility for the existence and continuance of the liquor traffic in the several states rests with their respective legislatures of the several states. Second, the responsibility for the existence and continuance of such legislatures as these, rests with the individuals who voted for these legislatures.

This being true, the conclusion is inevitable:, that the responsibility for the existence and continuance of the liquor traffic rests with voters who refuse to cast their ballots for the candidates of that party whose principle and policy stands for total prohibition of the liquor traffic, both state and national, but persistently vote for the candidates of a party which, for a money consideration, is pledged to protect the drink business.

If the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church was right when it declared that the liquor traffic "can never be legalized without sin," how can the Methodist voter, be he bishop, pastor or layman, consistently cast his ballot for the candidates of a party which he has every reason to know stands for the continuance of the legalized saloon?

The best method for the destruction of the liquor traffic is through the agency of an independent political party, whose central idea and only test of fealty is total prohibition of the liquor traffic in state and nation. No great reform movement of national importance was ever brought about without the aid of a political party. Think you, that the slavery question could ever have been settled right without a party holding the principles of the Republican party and with the same courage to back its convictions? "Opposition to the extension of slavery" was the grand central idea around which was formed the Republican party. In the stormy days that followed, and as war clouds gathered fast over the land, this idea grew into the grander central idea, of preservation of the Union.

These were days that tried the metal of men. But thanks to such patriots as Abraham Lincoln, the protectionist, and Hannibal Hamlin, the freetrader, Salmon P. Chase, the Democrat, and Charles Sumner, the Whig, and scores of others who loved truth and justice better than they loved their old parties, the grand new party was made possible and the preservation of the Union secured.

In order to take up the temperance question, and deal with it properly, it would require, in the case of either of the old parties, a complete reconstruction upon an entirely new foundation, the chief corner-stone of which would be total prohibition of the liquor traffic within our national borders. I desire to go on record as declaring the hope of such a thing unreasonable and, in the light of past history, wholly vain.

I am a partisan; a believer in the efficiency of parties as a means to an end. I would have all friends of prohibition rally around our grand central idea as the only test of party fealty, then coin that idea into ballots, and assert their authority by casting those ballots into the ballot box, the only place under our form of government where individual opinions are registered.

WOMAN'S SOCIETY IN CITY AND COUNTRY.

BY MILES MENANDER DAWSON.

In nothing perhaps are the city and country farther apart than in the social relations of the sexes and especially of young persons. The primitive idea was that a youth and maiden would hardly choose each other's company except with matrimonial intentions, or pseudo-matrimonial in the worst sense. Hence the fact of the giving and receiving attentions is always occasion for gossip and often of scandal. If such companionship does not result in wedlock and at the same time no evidence of disagreement or quarrel is found, the neighborhood gossips are sure that one or the other has been jilted. In many cases the reputation of the unfortunate young woman is badly damaged and in nearly all cases her feelings are severely wounded.

The foregoing may seem a strong statement of the case and it may be conceded that very often the actors in the drama are only vaguely conscious of the restrictions upon their free association. But consciously or unconsciously, when she accepts his attentions, a young girl is supposed to have settled the question of the eligibility of a young man as a possible husband, so far at least as she has observed him. Should she find him other than she thought, it is considered her duty to discard him; and if she does not do so she must not complain if her complaisance is misinterpreted. That is the theory upon which country society among young persons is constructed.

One result of this narrowness is that there is no true association of persons of opposite sexes. This is true in general though of course subject to some exceptions. Each sex is therefore thrown upon its own resources for society at least until after marriage; and even then the custom of separation has a strong tendency to perpetuate itself as is evident in the proneness of married men to find company among bachelors away from home, and of women to form gossipy tea-table circles. The occasions for association of young men and women are not many and are for the most part trivial in character, such as balls, merry-makings, picnics, etc., where one can hardly come to taste the flavor of another's personality. True association which alone is beneficial cannot take place in so mixed and democratic assemblies; it arises not from a mere sense of loneliness and desire for society but from a growing appreciation of the abilities and character of each other.

Men are gregarious animals; if shut out from the society which uplifts, they fall into that which degrades. Heredity and even training are usually powerless to prevent this. In country districts, where by the edicts of the gossips he is forbidden the society of maidens of his own age and station to whom he might repair to while away a dull hour, a youth is likely to be driven by the newer love for society and by ennui to seek the genial and jolly coterie of unambitious loafers who gather in the bar-rooms, about the livery stables, at the corner-grocery or in the newspaper office of the country village. Here vulgarity passes for wit and salacious recitals provoke mirth rather than disgust, while pollution sinks into the soul which might be uplifted by a society in which such impurities would be impossible. I have myself seen men of national repute, and even clergymen, impelled by the unconscious force of custom, take part in these gatherings to the delight and destruction of admiring striplings.

Of course, this condition of affairs cannot be permanent. It arose from the old conception of woman as a toy instead of a helpmate; from the old ideas about woman's sphere and from the narrowness of her education and her view of life. It was because in this state no society with her was possible on any plane of broad human interest instead of individual interest in her, that the general attitude of the public toward the association of the sexes came into being. And this view must necessarily disappear as education, tolerance and independence change the capabilities and offices of women. The foolish old-time ideas may have suited the days of peasant ignorance and feminine subordination, but scarcely these days when the influence of womankind is felt in all the movements to advance and uplift the race. The various philanthropic and charitable enterprises in which women have united, and especially the W. C. T. U., have done much to break up this provincialism of our out-of-town society; and in every community there are little oases of the new life in homes presided over by mothers whose eyes have beheld the light.

I am happy to pay the grateful tribute of this testimonial to two or three such ladies in my native village, who did all they could to refine my rugged nature and polish my awkward manners while implanting a love of truth and right never to be effaced. But these homes are yet the exception, and admission to them is often a reward of merit rather than an unusual privilege. They are, however, centers of the local influences which make for right living and sobriety.

In the South a different system exists, which has not grown up from peasant customs, but is an effort to continue the exotic of foreign aristocratic customs. In this world the forms of polite society are fully observed, so fully, indeed, that there is an air of unreality in all association. As in the days of chivalry, woman is outwardly worshiped, really disregarded in all serious matters. It is legitimate and praiseworthy to deceive her; it is unladylike for her to show that she is not deceived, or to break in any way the silken ties of social custom which keep her out of the lives of her husband, lover or brother. This condition is rapidly passing away under the leveling influence of the flood of democratic usages. Woman in the South is asserting her essential equality with man, and spurning the adulation offered instead of respect.

What made the society of the South artificial and fatal in many cases to true association was its derivation from false ideals of chivalry; the defect in the social life of the North was in the absence of ideals. In the one case association between the sexes was but trifling and insincere, a hollow pretense which refines the manners but leaves the person yet a barbarian at the core; in the other, association of an intimate character between persons of opposite sex was practically deemed impossible except on a sexual basis, the association of souls and minds not being comprehended.

The city has not wholly outgrown either of these falsehoods which poison society at its fountain, but neither of them has the force which obtains in smaller districts.

The fact of beneficial association of the young people of both sexes is in almost all quarters regarded as settled; for all that was needed to prove its desirability was to open the door, and that has long ago been done. In any of the larger cities of the country a young man may enjoy and profit by the society of women of refinement and culture at the least possible cost to himself and without arousing gossip concerning his intentions or suspicion of his motives. But this is his on the one condition, that he must for all time avoid the society of women who would drag him down to a sensual level.

In the city the scarlet woman is far from nature, cold, greedy, repulsive; she is not to be feared if honest thoughts have been implanted in the heart. Her doors are too open, her wiles too obvious; she may ensnare but she does not deceive. But for the soul that would mount upward, the great mother-soul, incarnate in a thousand bosoms, yearns until it is wooed into the aura of refined influences. If you have by your own society, oh, mother, made your son aware of the blessings of a good woman's sympathy, and if you have given him something to live for, you need not picture the city as a hell of alcoholism and impurity yawning to engulf him. There are waiting to guide his footsteps troops of pure women, ready to teach, to arm, to comfort, to broaden and uplift him if he will but turn to them.

But if he will not? Then the city is ready to minimize his evil influence by speeding him to destruction. For it is your son who comes to defile the city, to add to its pollution, to destroy and to be destroyed at the same time. The city and his life is what he made it. But if he has been fitted to enjoy the society of virtuous and noble women, evil can never prevail. This is no idle assertion; I have known many who have come into the great city from the country. Some came with pure ideals which have remained pure; others came with a purpose in life, which by its strength redeemed them from a life formerly irregular. None but those whose ideas of enjoyment centered about the low and sensual went down, and unto them many a helping hand was held forth which they would not grasp.

WHY JOHN G. WOOLLEY IS A PARTY PROHIBITIONIST.

[Delivered in Music Hall, Boston, Sept. 18, 1895.]

It is beyond debate that a man ought to be true to himself; not only true to his conscience, which is the response of his unperfected faculties to the movement of the divine harmony, but also true to his judgment, which is the same thing vibrating at a lower rate. That is my apology, if any apology were needed, for being a Prohibitionist and a member of the Prohibition party.

In the flush of a January sunrise, after an awful night, nearly eight years ago, a conviction gripped me that I ought to go to war against the liquor traffic. I did at daybreak, and have never rested. It was no desperate outreach after a livelihood; I left an assured position, ample salary and a profession which I loved, to become what you see me, a wandering, uncredentialed missionary to the voting church. I believed the Democratic party to be incapable of administering this government, even in conditions of prosperity and utter quiet, and as to that my judgment has undergone no change. I have learned since that southern democracy is intelligent as it is brave and loyal, but all to great devotion to the theory of states rights, bred to a statesmanship too provincial to deal with this unbounded and unlocalizable agency of evil, and by the express declarations of its national platform, self-appointed defender in ordinary of the saloon.

I believed the Republican party to be the brainiest thing in politics thus far, best trained to rule and in its ranks sentimentally an enemy of the saloon but swamped past remedy by bossism. Its "bloody shirt" idiocy in Ohio, its progressive degeneracy in Pennsylvania, its moral insolvency in Maine, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, its moral paresis in New York, its inexpressible infamy in Iowa, its concentric conspiracies of conscience crucifying candidature throughout the land, marks the regal ruler of "the sixties" the flabby, impudent, decadent of the century's end. You have it at its best in this state. The Republican party in Massachusetts, in its relation to the national concern, is an island of hopeful ill-health in an ocean of pus. I had no choice but to leave it. I have to be a party Prohibitionist or be false to myself.

A man ought to be true to his country. This is a republic, a government of the people, for the people, by the people. Once a year the voter stands within the throne-room of the nation's power and with unbated breath and unbent knee may speak his mind. I hold my citizenship a thing so sacred and so royal that every time election day comes round, I say to myself, "My country wants to know my mind to-day, and like an honest, loyal man, I shall give her the best that I have." To do less would be incipient treason, and what I say to her I will stand to, even in the shock and smoke, blood and cruelty of war, or that worse thing, the jeers and contumely of majorities. I believe the tariff, the financial reforms, the recurring panics, to be trifles light as air compared with the saloon in labor, commerce, politics and law, and as to the Monroe doctrine, about which we hear so much now, upheld by a government which derives one-third of its revenue from the ruin of its own citizens and the degradation of its own honor, I am at a loss whether to consider it a howling farce or paltry brag.

A man ought to be true to his church. Mine says officially, that the liquor traffic can never be licensed without sin, in which case, unless logic be a Jack o'lantern, it is a sin for a man at a general election to be a Methodist and a Republican. I have to be a party Prohibitionist or be false to my church.

A man ought to be true to his party and that is why we are here, and we have come to stay. To the charge of being a feeble folk and unprolific, we must needs plead guilty. But there is good blood in our veins. Twenty-five years ago a white-plumed, clean-handed, knightly man, returning covered with glory from the great Crusade—not for the holy sepulcher of the Saviour of men, but a crusade for the holy cabin of the poorest man himself—took up our flag and it has never touched the ground, and by the grace of God it never will. Stand up, you Prohibitionists; salute the name and the fame and the white soul of the flower of Massachusetts chivalry, the immortal Wendell Phillips!

He has gone away, and Gough and Hale and Finch and Fisk and Smith and Black and Gambrell and Haddock and Mary Lathrap and "the other Mary" have followed on. We cannot see where in the eternal depths of stars our constellation shines, but we can hear Mead shouting at the front, the swish of Hopkins' steel, the rhythmic swing of St. John's battle-axe, Leonard's maxim gun sweeping the century, with Small and Bennett raking the "right" and "left," Boole rushing like a mighty whirlwind on the foe, Bain's silver trumpet voice like the voice of an angel of victory everywhere along the line of battle, Fitzgerald leading the Epworth Leagues, the gallant young chairman of this meeting, John Willis Baer, calling on the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, Mary Hunt deploying the children of forty-three states along the hilltops of the future, five hundred thousand women praying, our Prohibition press like the sound of a mighty going "in the tops of the mulberry trees," Dickie in the midst, crying, "Steady, steady," Frances Willard coming home to stay, and yonder, in snowy glory haloed, sits the King Arthur of the new chivalry at his "table round," and with Heaven's far, sweet bells all ringing in his ears, salutes eternity and glorifies humanity by remaining of it yet awhile. I expect to see unveiled on Boston Common a heroic statue in everlasting granite of Neal Dow, the party Prohibitionist, and when he goes away there will remain two hundred and seventy thousand conscience voters, standing like Lebanon cedars in the rift of coming revolution, biding their time. Break us, will you, you unclean-handed, empty-headed politicians? Well, break, and be judged at the bar of honest history. The breaking boughs, the falling trunks, the snapping roots will testify the truth even in death, and church and country in the generations that are coming will delight to speak in honor of the "whip" of God's unorganized democracy in these days—the Prohibition Party.

OUR TWO LEADERS.

Dear Union Signal:—For several weeks I have been Lady Henry Somerset's guest, and in close association with our beloved chieftain, and I must share with my white-ribbon sisters the joy and comfort of these days of close companionship with Miss Willard, and the convictions that have matured therefrom.

Naturally and inevitably the heart of the W. C. T. U. has gone out with anxious solicitude toward our leader, and every soul is interested to know how she is. In all my acquaintance with Miss Willard dating from 1882, I have never known her better than she is now. She is not rugged and could never again bear the jauntings through the country with incessant writing on train all day and speaking every night as in the past. There are very few strong men who could have borne these things as many years as our leader has done. But she is well, and fully capable of getting through an enormous amount of work each day. She is uniformly bright, cheerful and hopeful, her appetite as good as ever, for she was always a very light eater, and she sleeps like a child, sweetly and soundly.

Lady Henry has spared no pains and no expense to exercise and develop the physical powers, which during all these past years have lain almost dormant, while the brain has been taxed to its utmost. With an expert and experienced teacher, Miss Maxwell, in the house, and a gymnasium fitted up with appliances for every kind of practice, Miss Willard has become almost as agile in body as she has long been in mind. I fear Union Signal readers would charge me with romancing if I should relate one-half the physical feats, with and without bars and ropes and rings, that I have seen our leader, her ladyship, and Anna Gordon perform in the Priory gymnasium. I could hardly believe the seeing, and no wonder if others would doubt what they have not seen.

Miss Willard is becoming an expert bicyclist and rides morning and evening each day. Lady Henry has just presented her with a new and beautiful bicycle, inscribed on the saddle:

"F. E. W.—Never to be lent.—I. S."

Because the old one has been used by sixteen persons to learn to ride on, and consequently was in rather a shackly condition; for we all know that Miss Willard's cardinal principle ever is, "The best that any mortal has is that which every mortal shares." Lady Henry also is learning to ride the wheel, and will do it well, as she does everything she undertakes.

The bicycle is coming into prominent use by women here, as with us, and white ribbon officials will lead. Miss Gorham, treasurer of the B. W. T. A., takes long trips through the country on her wheel, and now comes her ladyship president, also. I have long known that all reforms wait woman's complete emancipation, and, therefore, most devoutly thank God for the bicycle which is rapidly helping forward that much desired consummation.

We have now been at Eastnor Castle for a week, and find it a most restful place. I cannot imagine a lovelier country than this, lying on every side of the castle. And it is historic as well, for within sight of these walls occurred some of the most memorable struggles between the Romans and the Britons.

I have never possessed any degree of awe or respect for titles, believing always that character must be the test with every mortal; nor do I experience any change of sentiment now that I am where titles abound; they are but outside decorations, having little to do with the real man or woman. And since, with the Queen's sanction, brewers may step from their beer-age to the peerage, titles are bound to fall into discount even here in England before many decades.

But I am glad to learn that the relations between many great estate owners and the tenantry, continuing from generation to generation, are every way honorable and delightful. The loyalty and love of tenants and servants is something too seldom seen in America.

This morning as I was passing through one of the corridors with Miss Willard we met a gentle-faced old man with snow white locks, whom Miss Willard stopped and asked after a sick daughter. This trusty old servant, almost eighty years old, has never lived on any estate but Eastnor, and here, when wife and children sickened and died, every comfort and care were sent from the castle, and the gentle, faithful old man has no fear of want or the workhouse now that his active work of carpentry is over. At the Priory a young servant girl has been sick for weeks with lingering fever. A good physician and trained nurse have been in attendance all through her illness. As soon as able she was sent out driving every day.

There seems to be an unwritten law among such estate owners as possess conscience and a sense of personal responsibility, that none who have served them shall know want or suffering. This is as it should be, and it is matter for rejoicing that our English leader stands in this as in other things, above reproach and criticism.

A man's character can be more justly estimated by his conduct towards his servant than towards his equal.

NEW YORK NOTES.

Dear Union Signal:—The white-ribboners of the Empire state greatly rejoiced last winter when the revised scientific temperance instruction bill became a law. This victory was won against tremendous odds, for the saloon power, with its political manipulators, and the daily press, to a large degree, were bitterly opposed to it. Even the state superintendent of public instruction, with the prestige of his office, had used all the resources of a skillful and unscrupulous politician to kill the bill while it was before the legislature, and later to induce Governor Morton to veto it. This victory, hard-earned as it was, is not final, unless the forces that won remain thoroughly organized and alert. The daily papers are constantly agitating against the law and there is every indication that there is an organized force with an unscrupulous literary bureau, working for its repeal.

Theodore Roosevelt, for the credit is largely due to him, has won. He has demonstrated that a Sunday closing law can be thoroughly enforced in cosmopolitan New York. And after all sorts of resistance, after all possible evasions, after discovering that the reformed courts would not help them, and that they must go to prison if they kept open, the Wine, Beer and Liquor Dealers' Association, with a membership of five thousand five hundred, has announced that it submits to the law. There were fifty cases up for trial before the Court of Special Sessions, and the counsel for the liquor dealers made their capitulation and begged for a light fine, offering to the court the resolutions passed by the Liquor Dealers' Association, declaring that the man "who shall thereafter keep his place open in violation of this resolution and of the law shall forfeit all his rights and privileges as a member of the Association."

The action of the recent state Republican convention in passing a resolution in favor of the maintenance of the present Sunday laws has greatly encouraged those who are fighting against the "continental" Sunday, which has so long threatened New York city. The declaration of the leaders of the party in New York, Brooklyn, Buffalo and other rum centers, that notwithstanding the state platform, that all Republican candidates for the legislature must pledge themselves in favor of a local option Sunday law, emphasizes again the divided condition of the party when the saloon is opposed.

Dr. Parkhurst has declared in favor of the proposed local option law, giving New York city the privilege of voting for or against Sunday saloons. This is the pet scheme of the liquor dealers, and it seems strange to see Dr. Parkhurst and the big brewers advocating the same legislation. Dr. Parkhurst has sorely disappointed many who warmly admired him for the almost miraculous things he has accomplished in reforming New York.

The hardships—for the liquor dealers—which Sunday enforcement has caused is portrayed as follows in The World, and is worth putting on record for reference:

"This summer Mr. Roosevelt has made it so dangerous to carry on business on Sunday that the smaller saloonkeepers are losing money. Sunday was always their day of greatest profit, as it was also the day of greatest profit to the brewers themselves. Hundreds of thousands of people bought their beer on Sunday in summer in pitchers. It is indeed probable that as much beer was sold on Sunday as during the rest of the week. . . A man went in to get a can of beer and bought a cigar, perhaps, or a drink of whisky. Now the saloons are closed on Sunday for the sale of beer. The small saloonkeepers cannot pay the debts they incurred last winter. They are getting deeper into debt. Those whose saloons were mortgaged to the brewers are renewing their mortgages; those whose saloons were not mortgaged are mortgaging them now. There are other consequences of this state of affairs. The brewery collectors cannot collect the money due them for the beer lately delivered. It used to be that when the collector went around on Monday in summer his money was ready for him for that week's beer and some part of the old debt, if old debt there was. Indeed, Monday was chosen by the collector because it followed the profitable Sunday. Now so far from collecting money, many brewers are refusing to deliver more beer unless it is paid for cash on delivery. . . The brewers do not alone find this difficulty in making collections. The wholesale whisky houses experience it. They sell on thirty or sixty days, or four months. When time is up now and a whisky house cannot get its money, or if the saloonkeeper can pay and won't pay, the whisky house gets judgment against him for the amount of his bill."

Mr. Frederic R. Coudert, of this city, has been frequently mentioned as President Cleveland's choice for the vacancy in the United States Supreme Court. White-ribboners will be glad to learn, for I do not think it is generally known, that he is a staunch friend of woman suffrage. In a letter to me, last November, extolling the work which the women had done to redeem the city, Mr. Coudert, said: "Women are, in my judgment, quite the equals of men intellectually and much their superior morally. Upon what philosophical principle they can be eliminated from political contests involving the safety of the country, I have never understood. To claim that our system rests upon the virtue of our people, as it necessarily must, and at the same time to declare with much gravity that the most virtuous element of society shall have no voice in bringing about political results is an anomaly that I have never understood and probably never shall. Time ripens everything, however, and the day will certainly come when the voice of woman will not be stifled and she will be allowed by law to lend a helping hand in preserving the edifice of our constitution, provided the bungling of man has not caused the whole concern to topple over before the golden opportunity has been vouchsafed to her." ## MRS. BOOTH'S "NEW WOMAN."

Editor Union Signal:—Considerable comment has been made all over the country on my supposed utterances on the new woman question, hence my motive in addressing you, that some personal explanation from me may be allowed to reach the public through the medium of your valuable paper.

My opinions have been made the topic of comment. I beg, therefore, to give you the following facts, which I trust for the sake of the women officers of the Salvation Army, and our relation to other women, you will insert at your earliest convenience. The remarks which have been quoted and attributed to me, I emphatically deny ever having uttered in the way in which they were represented to the public.

I was surprised and startled at the stir which had been caused in newspaper circles over the address which I delivered on the first of September on the subject of "The New Woman." Were I seeking notoriety and cheap advertisements I should certainly have been gratified and flattered by the result of that hour's talk, but as my sole purpose was to bless and help spiritually the very large audience which had gathered to hear me, I am grieved that so many misrepresentations should have been scattered broadcast concerning the meeting.

I do not resent criticism when I am criticised for what I have really said. My convictions and opinions are, I think, carefully enough uttered for me to stand by them, and certainly I am prepared for the consequences. I am, however, grieved that comments should have been made all over the country upon ideas and utterances which I have never held nor spoken. It is only fair to me and the women of the Salvation Army, whom I represent, to state that the assumption that I have criticised or spoken harshly of the new woman, is due entirely to the fact that my remarks were grossly misquoted, as can be proven by the shorthand notes of my address of September 1.

Allow me briefly to state the outline of my remarks.

First, I showed that there were so many misrepresentations as to what the new woman really was, that, before I could talk of her logically, I must find her. I spoke of the caricatures, the newspaper skits of the new woman, and of her as represented in pernicious literature and on the stage. I spoke of this as the debris which hid from view the real woman, showing that to find the real, true woman I must push aside this debris.

I then showed the new woman, so called, of the cartoonist, the press and the novel, who is also sometimes seen in real life. I called her a "mock-man," and all the hard and bitter things I am supposed to have spoken were directed against this creature, whom I am sure every right thinking woman would help me in declaiming.

I then spoke of the advanced woman, for whom I had nothing but the highest praise. I showed that whether she were lawyer, preacher, doctor or business woman, she would always be womanly, and that her influence could but help and elevate man. I advocated her advancement in every possible direction. I honored her for her brave stand, and censured those who, from their narrow views, hindered her advancement and usefulness.

I then remarked that while we pressed the education of the woman's brain we must never overlook the education of the heart. This brought me to the whole point of my address, namely, that there was only one way of making a truly new woman—a new creation—that there was only one Being who could create, and only one power that could transform; and the text of my remarks was drawn from a verse, which, to my mind, solves the question, "Who is the new woman?" "And if any 'woman' be in Christ Jesus, she is a new creature; behold, old things are passed away, and all things have become new."

I am known all over the country as a religious woman, and so it is natural that I should treat this question preeminently from a Christian standpoint. I did inveigh against the free-love notions which have been advocated in some of the vicious literature, which would advocate the annulling of marriage, and which depict the vilest passions of human nature. I did say that I would throw the erotic novel of to-day into a bonfire, if it were in my power. I also consigned to the flames the cigarettes and chewing-gum, which I think every educated and refined Christian woman would also wish to see consumed rather than allow them to desecrate the lips of our growing girls. I never mentioned or hinted that I objected to reform dress, nor did I mention the word "bloomers"; but I did say of the women who wear man's dress that I would like to give it back to those to whom it belongs.

Why these remarks should have been interpreted into a scathing and cutting rebuke of woman, I am at a loss to understand. Up to this time I have always been considered a champion of women. I have always loved and admired woman, and have, I believe, been in return loved by many of my sisters. I have rather regarded with pity those few women who have no friends among their sisters, but command only the interest and attention of the other sex. Such an attitude in a woman's nature is, to my mind, always a danger-note of warning.

Now, by the misstatements in the newspapers, I am afraid that many enemies will be made, not only for me personally, but for my many sister warriors (which concerns me far more vitally) in the ranks of those with whom we most fully sympathize.

The moral which I draw from this occurrence is that all speakers who speak rapidly, and without manuscript, should have a verbatim reporter in the form of a phonograph, so that he or she may not be proclaimed to the world as saying precisely those things which they did not say, and so that the reporter's hand and head may not be wearied and confused with the scribbling of shorthand notes that must be in type within a given time.

Yours very truly, in the holy War,

MAUD B. BOOTH.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Grape season is upon us and a Presbyterian sister writes: "Since our general assembly took the stand for unfermented wine at our communion, there are some of us who will make it for this purpose. Can you give us recipes?"

Indeed I can, with heart rejoicing because of this forward step by our esteemed brothers. Before giving the recipes, however, I would like to quote a few paragraphs from an article contributed some time since to THE UNION SIGNAL:

"Grape juice is coming to the front throughout the country. Physicians are using it more and more, as they become aware of its remarkable nutrient and medicinal qualities. As a food it ranks with—itself. There is no other fruit which contains so large a proportion of building materials for the body. There is a plentiful supply of gluten, which forms blood and muscle, and gives strength and substance to the body; a large amount of sugar, pleasing the taste, and producing heat; gum and aromas; a touch of malic and citric acids—the latter the principal acids in lemons; phosphorus and sulphur—for the brain; plenty of bi-tartrate of potash (cream of tartar)—for tendons and ligaments; tartrate of lime—for bones, and water, quantum sufficit. All these are retained, unchanged, in pure and properly prepared grape juice.

"There is a good theoretical medical foundation for the beneficial effects of grape juice upon the human body. The bi-tartrate of potash is well known as a cooling drink. The tartrate of lime is not unlike the acid phosphates so much used for soft-boned scrofulous and scorbutic patients. Phosphorus is doubtless one of the active agents in building up exhausted nerves, and as a simple fruit, perhaps the grape offers more good points than any other."

Following are the recipes:

1. Twenty-five pounds of best Concord or any juicy grapes. Scald with only enough water to keep from burning. When the skins burst set off the fire to cool. Press through a stout jelly bag, add nearly four pounds of coffee sugar. Let the liquor come to the boiling point again, and seal as you do canned fruit. This ought to make twelve quarts of rich wine. Keep in a cool, dark place. If open any length of time it will ferment.

2. Express the juice of the grapes and allow it to settle a few hours. Draw it off from the sediment into bottles, which must be entirely filled. Place them in a boiler of cold water and heat until the juice reaches one hundred and seventy degrees. Remove the bottles, cork and seal immediately, and store in a cool, dark place.

I have read a simple rule for the proportion of sugar to grape juice, viz., one teaspoonful to every quart.

---

Why could not some of the smaller unions in the country make this unfermented wine for sale, supplying the churches of the locality? Perhaps, by a judicious word in the ear of the leading physician orders from him for his patients might be guaranteed, warranting an extensive bottling of this valuable food drink. Recently we had under discussion doctors' prescriptions of alcoholics for typhoid fever patients. Educate the physicians, and accompany your instructions by two or three "complimentary bottles" of harmless, healthful wine.

We had a discussion about root beer lately, and one of our careful readers has sent us the following: "I find root beer a healthful as well as appetizing drink. I use it in this way. I put a little of the prepared extract into a pitcher with lemon juice and sugar to taste, fill up with water and put away in the refrigerator. By putting some cracked ice in our glasses we have a delicious drink to which no exceptions can be taken."

We agree with our friend that thus prepared the drink is without reproach. However, we wish the word beer could be eliminated, and also, that we could know that our use of a harmless beverage would not be an excuse to someone else for using an alcoholic preparation bearing the same name. It is almost dangerous to be safe, these days!

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.—I Cor. 16:13.

The Texas White Ribbon is one of our brightest state papers. The September issue is just out. It is a Temple number, with a fine picture of the Temple on the front page. It is full of nice things about our "House Beautiful." An article from the gifted and witty pen of Marietta Holley ("Josiah Allen's wife"), appears in it which has never come under my observation before. It is so good I will share it with my readers

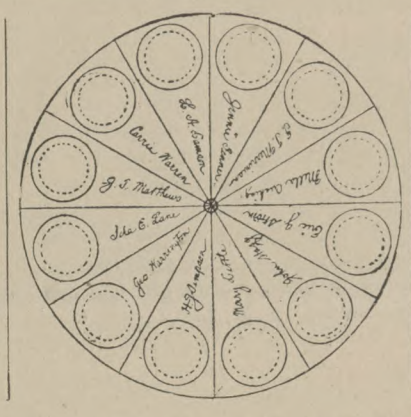
"So, at my request, we went out of our way a little, so I could set my eyes on that Temple dreamed out by a woman and wrought a good deal by faith, some like the walls of Jericho, only different, for whereas they fell by faith, this wuz riz up by it.

"And my feelin's as I looked at that Temple wuz large and noble-sized as you will find anywhere.

"A Temple consecrated not so much to the Almighty in heaven, who don't need it, as to God in humanity—to the help of the Divine as it shows itself half buried and lost in the clay of the human—a help to relieve the God powers from the trammels of the fiend. A Temple—not so much to set, pray and sing in, about the beauties of our heavenly home, as to build up God's kingdom on earth, show forth His praise in helpin' His poor, and weak, and sinful.

"My feelin's wuz a sight—a sight to behold—as I sot and looked at it—that tall, noble, majestic pile, and thought of the way it wuz built, and what it wuz built for."—Samantha at the World's Fair.

LET EVERY WHITE-RIBBONER FILL SIX WHEELS AND THE TEMPLE WILL BE PAID FOR....



ONLY THREE MONTHS LEFT IN WHICH TO SECURE THE PRIZES OF $100, $50 AND $25....

Mrs. Grim, of Franklin Grove, Ill., still stands at the head of those filling Wheels. Then comes our dear old Quaker friend, Jane Weeden, and number three is Mrs. Evelyn Graham, of Newark, O. This is from May 23 to September 23.

"Send me another Wheel; when I return it I shall have filled six," writes Mrs. S. A. Woolsey, Phenix, R. I., and yet this dear white-ribboner is a sufferer from asthma. She closes her letter by saying, "I hope every W. C. T. U. woman in the land will do as much as I have." If they did, how much, dear sisters, do you think it would bring in? Six filled Wheels add up $7.80; estimating our numbers at the usual ratio, 200,000 times $7.80 would aggregate the enormous sum of $1,560,000, a much larger amount than we require. Should we expect outsiders to help us with large sums when we are unwilling to help ourselves by raising the small amount of $7.80? Lack of faith is the sole cause of our not being able to comply with this very easy requirement. Think of that godly woman living in a hut of one room in the Wisconsin forest, and denied every comfort, of which Mrs. Campbell told us last week, suffering from bodily abuse as well—all brought about by her husband's love of strong drink; yet she sent a gift of $8.65.

Business men quickly see how we might clear the debt off the Temple in a single year if we would all take hold. This has so impressed Mr. Albert T. Hull, of New York, a successful business man and the husband of Mrs. Hull, president of the Lathrap W. C. T. U., of New York city, that he has written me a long letter on the subject, the gist of which is to prorate the amount each individual white-ribboner should give in order to pay off the indebtedness of the Temple, and then have the work pushed through the state, district, county and local unions, so that each state should earnestly endeavor to raise its due proportion. Eight dollars apiece from the paid up membership of the W. C. T. U. in one year would make the Temple our own, leaving not a dollar of indebtedness. Mr. Hull takes for illustration the state of New York, counts up the income that would come back to it after the building was paid for. "This," he says, "would double their income in any one year from all sources, thus allowing the hiring and paying of skilled organizers, who shall not only plant but water what has already been planted, and develop the young, well-intentioned, but crude organizations into vigorous, coöperating and growing bodies of workers."

Mrs. Phillips, Taunton, Mass., sends $100 to place the name of her husband, William H. Phillips, on the Massachusetts memorial tablet in Willard Hall. Mr. Phillips was an honorary member of the Taunton union, an active Prohibitionist and a warm friend to woman's advancement.

SABBATH DAY.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A little aside from the sweep and whirl,
The shifting splendor of swift Broadway,
Is a place where sounds but gently purl,
And a spell of quiet invests the day.
There marbles are gleaming in beauty wrought,
And rosy faces of children glow,
And the painter's vision hath shrined the thought
Of tropical sunlight or polar snow.

There, late on a summer's afternoon,
Till the shadowing twilight softly fell,
I lingered, reluctant to leave too soon
A simple picture which pleased me well.
Steady and cheerful, strong and sweet,
Was the womanly face that drew my gaze,
With a look which smiled my own to meet,
A wonderful blending of prayer and praise.

'Twas a dame of the Highlands, sturdy still,
Though youth had left her many a day,
And used to taking, with resolute will,
Her path to church in the good old way.
Whether sunlit mists to the mountains clung,
Or the tempest athwart them were driven wild,
She went to the kirk where the psalms were sung,
Fearless and brave as an eager child.

I thought how often some trifle kept
Our dainty women from cushioned pews;
Too late, perhaps, in the morn they've slept,
Or the hat is amiss or tight the shoes;
There's the hint of rain in the clouded sky,
And the book and the easy chair invite.
I thought as I gazed in the steadfast eye
Of the Highland mother, blithe and bright

Little she cared for the bitter blast,
Or the swirl of the storm in her lifted face;
She would win through its uttermost stress at last,
And endurance was hers from a hardy race.
A narrow life in her lowly cot
She led, as she cared for barn and byre;
But narrower far, where God is not,
Are lives which the loftiest men desire.

There's something grand in the quiet way
Yon strong soul passes from sun to sun,
The week-day hours and the Sabbath day,
Counting alike by duties done.
The breath of the hills in that picture fair,
With the tangled heather bent and wet,
And the tranquil woman, amid it there,
Are cordial and help to my spirit yet.

A GOOD WOMAN.

BY C. EMELINE BENNETT.

The afternoon is warm and bright; the buds on the trees are bursting their bounds, the lawn is newly carpeted in green, and here and there hops a robin, his sharp little eyes looking for something to eat. The breath of the freshly-blown hyacinths rising from the garden-bed below, adds its mite to the happiness and cheer of humanity. Truly, "every prospect pleases."

I have just read the closing words of a newspaper article on "Our Great Women." Following the train of thought awakened by the pen sketch, my mind turns back to a plain, sweet face, and gentle brown eyes, so full of love and tenderness, that they have many times drawn forth a confession of the sorrow or heartache of a troubled friend ere they knew it.

She is not a brilliant scholar. She has never thrilled large audiences with her flowing eloquence; I do not know that she ever conducted a prayer-meeting. She has certainly never received a musical education in Leipsic or Berlin. She has never moved thousands of hearts to tears through her books, for she is not an authoress. She is not famous, not being known outside the circle of friends who love and respect her and call her good.

My heroine is none of these, yet she is great, truly great, and I doubt not her crown shall be set with many bright and precious gems.

This little woman has never had the privilege of an advanced education. When she would have taken such a course, her stepmother suddenly died, leaving to her care and training two little brothers and a baby sister, but a few weeks old. Her mother had said when dying, "My brave Emily, you must be a mother to the little ones," and Emily had promised. So she took upon her young life of nineteen summers the responsibility of the household and the training of three little children. But this dear girl had become personally acquainted with a Friend, who had graciously promised to supply all her need, and you may be sure that when trial came He was near to sustain and encourage her. So it came about that she gave up her own plans and hopes, and accepted the duty cheerfully. She had, like every other girl, looked forward to a home of her own. Her friend would shortly graduate from the seminary, and a pastorate was now awaiting his labors. He needed her much to encourage him and brighten his work, but she gave up any hopes she may have cherished in that direction, and set herself patiently at her task of making a home for her father and little brothers and sister.

Thus the years passed on. Emily gave her time and thought to studying the best means of training her little charges, and became their most delightful companion, always living with rather than for them, and was to them a beautiful, spiritual mother, indeed. She labored faithfully that they might each have a thorough literary training, and in every way tried to give them the advantages of which she had been deprived.

The father, her strong earthly support, was laid by the mother, and shortly after a noble boy of seventeen passed away. In a few years the remaining brother and sister married, Emily taking up her abode with the sister whom she had cared for so lovingly all the years, and for whom she had sacrificed so much in her own life.

She had learned to suffer, therefore she knew how to feel for those in trouble. She had learned to sacrifice, to lose her life for others, therefore she could help others in trial.

She has lived deeply herself, therefore is ready to be a blessing and comfort to everyone whose life touches her life. After a quiet little talk with her I always feel elevated, and have gained a new impetus to strive for that which is eternal and "fadeth not away."

She is very retiring; has never held an "office," but always says when urged, "Oh, give that work to Mrs. B., I am willing to work, but I think she will make a better officer than I;" so she is excused. It is a delight to her friends to be admitted to her own room, for there one reads everywhere the secret of her sweet life. On a table near the window lies her Bible, a little ruler and a dainty pen. The Bible is well worn, and opens naturally to Isaiah. The eighteenth verse of the first chapter is lined in red ink, for it is a precious promise. Passing on to the nineteenth verse we see these words: "If ye be willing and obedient," underlined, and connected with these words of the twenty-fifth verse, "I will purely purge away thy dross," which in turn are connected with the words of the twenty-sixth verse, "Thou shalt be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city." Turning to the epistles we find them lined and interlined, showing that they have been indeed precious to her.

Hanging on the wall is this motto:

"Lord Jesus, make Thyself to me,
A living, bright reality.
More precious to faith's vision keen
Than any outward object seen—
More dear, more intimately nigh
Than e'en the sweetest earthly tie."

On a scrap of paper pinned to the door-casing are written these words: "We must resist sin even unto blood." On another piece, "If you wish to make spiritual progress, keep yourself in the fear of God."

It has been through quiet meditations then on holy and pure things, and from precious communions with Jesus, that Emily has become the sweet and helpful woman she is. Christ's friendship has been to her as close, personal, tender, constant as human friendships that have been the dearest. By keeping continually before her the character of Jesus in all its strength and heroism, in all its purity and beauty, in all its gentleness and loveliness, her life has caught the reflection—and thus gives to the world something of His sweetness.

So this quiet woman's life goes on—telling thus the happy things of God's Word, doing kindnesses to all she meets; comforting sorrow, lifting burdens away, cheering sadness and weariness, and scattering benedictions wherever she goes. She is abiding His time and will hear His blessed "inasmuch."

There she sits on the opposite side of the table, my dear half-sister and spiritual mother, little dreaming of my thoughts. May it please God to spare her long to us who so need the sunshine of her spirit to cheer us.

"Earth to earth;" that is true, but earth from earth is equally true. The grip of dissolution cannot hold forever the dust that God has redeemed for himself.—McCook.

MISS WILLARD'S FIVE MINUTE SPEECH AT ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

I was glad to read a few days ago in one of the liquor papers of the realm words to this effect: "We must get up a demonstration, for the women are coming over with their Polyglot." The Petition, exclusive of the fourteen cases in which it is carried, weighs seventeen hundred and thirty pounds, and if each inch had three signatures it would be eight miles long. But if signatures of the Good Templars, the Christian Endeavorers, the churches and the various other guilds that have given their names through votes in their conventions, were all on the Petition, it would be forty miles long.

While our "friends, the enemy," have brewed beer, we have been brewing public sentiment. While they have distilled whisky, we have been distilling facts and arguments. For we believe that intemperance can be cured by an appeal to the intellect through argument, to the heart through sympathy, to the conscience through the motives of religion; but we also believe that the traffic in those poisons can best be handled by prohibitory law. We believe the arrest of thought is coming to the brain of man, and the holy spirit of God is driving conviction throughout the nations. We believe that when prohibition comes its thistles shall prick the bubble of Scotch whisky in the land o' Burns. When prohibition comes every shamrock in the dear old Emerald Isle shall be a four leaf clover; when prohibition comes the ever beauteous English rose shall stand as the type of a Christian civilization, "deep tinctured with a veined humanity," as Barrett Browning said. When Prohibition comes the great corn fields of the West, in my own beloved land, standing stately as palm trees, and lifting their leaves like an embodied prayer, shall no longer mean to the people beer, but bread.

You have been told that the women who rose up against the "living pictures" did not care for pageantry; that music and painting, color and song and the flashing of dramatic scenes before the eye were foreign to their thought and purpose. Let the pageant of to-night forever silence the carping voices that have put forth such criticism. Your welcome makes England home to us, though in all honesty I must declare that we felt at home before, for every one of us is a "chip of the old block."

We wish to help those less fortunate to have a clear brain, a steady pulse, a hand stretched out to help humanity, and a face lifted towards God in love and loyalty.

Women, you know, make a pet of whatever work they do, and we have long called this great Magna Charta of the home, that declares against throwing the guarantees and safeguards of law round the sale of alcoholics and of opium and against the protection of impurity by law, our "Poly Pet," concerning which we have a parody that runs after this fashion:

"This is the Poly Pet,
And we are the women all forlorn,
Who mean to chain John Barleycorn,
And pour old Plenty's brimming horn
Into the house that Jack built."

But when we do so there will be no malt left in that house, you may make sure of that!

ALONE WITH GOD.

One Sabbath night, after discoursing on a very solemn subject which had stirred my own soul, I took a walk before going home. It was clear starlight without any moon, and the heavens looked down upon me with all their sublime impressiveness. I found myself unconsciously walking in the direction of the mill. I had not gone far when I met my senior colleague and friend pacing slowly, up and down, by the side of a stream near his house. As soon as I came up he said: "Man, I couldna gang hame direct frae the chapel the nicht. After hearin' your sermon I wanted to be alane wi' God; and I never feel His presence as much as when I am oot in a nicht like this. Ye war speakin' aboot death! It's aye life that fills my mind. As lang as I see sic a sky as that abune me, and hae a grip o' Christ within me, I'm sure that death is swallowed up in victory. I am no sae sure as some folk seem to be that heaven will be sae different from this warl'. When I was a laddie I used to read the Book o' Revelation frae beginnin' to end on a Sabbath afternoon; and on Monday mornin', when I got up to herd my faither's coos, jist as the sun was risin' and spreadin' a glimmer owre the lift, the bits o' birdies praising God wi' a' their micht, and the loch at the fit o' the field like a pictur' o' peace, I wondered if Revelation and natur' werena a' ane, and sometimes thocht that the 'new heaven and new earth' jist meant that when we woke up on the resurrection morn we would find ourselves in this same place, with this differ—that sin and sorrow had fleed awa' as the n'cht was passin', jist like mist frae the braes."—Scottish Magazine.

SIGN THE PLEDGE.

BY LEWIS E. LANARD.

Sign the pledge, dear little children,
While your lives are fresh and young,
While your hearts are pure and spotless,
With God's praises on your tongue.
Like a flower in all its beauty,
Soon the cruel frost will blight.
Mothers, bring your little children,
Come and sign the pledge to-night.

Sign the pledge, fair young maiden,
Pure and spotless as the snow,
Oh, the good you can accomplish,
As through this life you go.
You may help a fallen sister,
Out of darkness into light,
Some poor brother you may rescue,
Come and sign the pledge to-night.

Sign the pledge, my young brother,
Think not alone to stand
The temptations of the wine cup,
Come and join our noble band.
God and country calls you,
Like a soldier to the fight,
Come and help us raise the banner,
Come and sign the pledge to-night.

Sign the pledge, father, mother,
If you would the children save,
Tell them of a life of sorrow,
And the end a drunkard's grave.
Tell them of the blood of Jesus,
That will cleanse and keep them white.
Parents, if you love your children,
Come and sign the pledge to-night.

Sign the pledge, let all the people
Come and join our noble band.
God is for us, we shall conquer,
And drive intemperance from our land.
Come and help us rout the enemy,
Come and help us in the fight,
Help to save the growing nation,
Come and sign the pledge to-night.

FOR THE BOYS.

BY MRS. M. B. PLATT.

Last year there stood in my yard a valuable young tree. It was straight, thrifty, full of beautiful green leaves, and every one delighted to look at it. It bade fair to become a strong, useful tree.

This year the same tree is in the same place, but it looks not at all as it once did. It is bare, brown, withered, and seems ready to die.

My friends look at it and say, "What a pity! What ails it?"

I reply, "An enemy has been at work about its roots, and it is dying."

Last year I noticed with pleasure a handsome youth who often passed my home. He was tall, strong, bright-eyed, with good, clear complexion, a frank, happy manner, and very attractive to look upon. He bade fair to become a noble, useful man, such as the world needs, and his friends regarded him with pride and high hopes for his future.

This year I see the same youth often, but he is as changed as the poor withered tree in my yard. Friends look at him and say, "How changed! What a pity? What ails him?"

I will tell you. Enemies have been at work. Idle, evil-minded companions; cigarettes, cigars, tobacco; beer, wine, perhaps even stronger drinks: profane words; reading bad books; unclean pictures; unclean thoughts; all these have been at work upon this young man and the result is a blighted character, a diseased body and a weakened mind. Yes, such ruin is a very great pity.

But if the young man had made up his mind and stuck to it—as boys can—that he would have nothing to do with evil associates, that he would not poison his body with drink and tobacco and his mind with impure books and pictures, in short, had he resolved that he would keep soul and body clean and pure he might be now a stalwart, manly man, instead of the wreck he is.

It is a pity the young tree is dying. It is a thousand times a greater pity the young man is dying, yes, a slow moral and physical death.

Boys, look out for the enemies. Give them no chance to ruin your soul and body.

A MEMORY CLOTH.

BY SARA ST. STENTON.

Seeing some little nieces of mine busily at work upon one of these pretty, inexpensive "memory cloths" made me decide to tell the little girls in the families where The Union Signal is a welcome visitor about them, so they may make some like them.

First get a heavy piece of Irish linen about eighteen inches square, and make a hem an inch wide. If you cannot hemstitch it, get your mother to do this for you around the hem, then get your little friends, cousins or schoolmates to write their names nicely with a lead pencil or ink, thus:

Mary Dudley
Alice Caldwell June Hunt
Annie Lee Bradley

After writing their names you work them by outlining or chain-stitching with different colors of pretty wash silks; arrange them artistically over the cloth. You are almost sure to soil the piece in making it, but if you laundry it as I tell you it will look beautiful. Make a lather of ivory soap and warm water in a bowl, wash it out quickly, rinse in warm water, press on wrong side while damp, and you will have a souvenir to put away in remembrance of your childhood friends.

MODERN INDULGENCIES.

BY HAZEL FOSTER.
(Ten years old.)

In the time of Robin Hood all England was Catholic.

The priests dealt in what were called indulgencies, and any one who wanted to murder, steal, cheat or do any other wicked act had only to buy an indulgence, and he could commit the crime specified.

Different sums were required, according to the crime proposed.

The people of to-day would think it outrageous if any one should suggest using the indulgencies of old.

But is the traffic in indulgencies of to-day any more excusable?

Our government deals in indulgencies or licenses, which it sells to any who wish to deal in the poison which leads to murders, misery, poverty and death of body and soul.

A man has only to buy a license and he may sell whisky, beer, cider, gin, rum and other alcoholic liquors, and the crimes of old follow as a natural consequence.

Cleveland, O.

The head of a large mercantile house was looking for a lad whom he could trust to fill a responsible place. Several were recommended, and of one it was said, "He's just the person, but he can't be spared from his present position." "Then," replied the gentleman, "that's the boy I want." There was a volume in the remark. Take the hint, boys, and make yourself so valuable to your present employer that other men will desire your services.—Selected.

Dear Boys and Girls:—I know a little Chicago girl who has been busy at temperance work all summer long, and the more I think about it the more sure I am that she is the very busiest little girl in the whole city, if not in our state or nation! Her home is on Monroe street near our Temple, and during these hot days she keeps as "cool as a cucumber," though she never stops her work. "Without haste, without rest," she works on, and thousands in the hot, dusty city must love her for what she is doing.

She is a bare-legged little girl, dressed all in brown—a very good color when one only has one dress for all weathers.

She stands on the sidewalk near the curb and offers a drink of clear cool water from Lake Michigan to anyone who is thirsty. I just wish you could watch her about noon-time some warm day. She is the most attractive person on Monroe street! Busy men stop to drink from her cup. Drivers of coal wagons smile all over their black jolly faces when they take the good draught from this girlie's hands, and I am sure they say, some of them, "God bless her—that's better than beer!"

How the boys love her, too. They swarm out of the stuffy offices with their cups and pails and climb up beside her, clinging to her with one arm while with the other they reach up for the sparkling water. I have seen them pat her brown arms and laugh up into her round face their heartfelt thanks.

She does not forget the horses and dogs. Just at first some poor horses who were used to troughs in front of saloons were afraid of this lassie, but now they know she is their friend and they plunge their noses into the pool near her bare brown toes and drink long and deep. Birds come there, too, and she is never lonely for company.

Yes, you have guessed right. She is the little Willard Fountain girl and she is doing this work for the L. T. L. boys and girls whose pennies sent her to live and labor beside the temperance Temple. Three cheers for the busiest temperance girl in Chicago!

LETTERS FROM AN L. T. L. IN KENTUCKY.

I think the Band of Hope is nice for boys and girls. We want to keep the saloon down.
Cornelia Coleman.

I have joined the L. T. L. and we are going to keep it up by the help of the Lord. I am going to get all the boys and girls to join us. I am going to keep my pledge, too. Lora Mattie Moran.

I am a little boy just eight years old. I have joined the L. T. L. and I intend to try to get all the little boys to join, for it is a good thing to do good. By the help of the Lord we will do all we can. Clyde Stone.

The Band of Hope is very nice. We are temperance boys and girls. Rada Kinslow.

A while ago you asked to hear from the charter members of your Cozy Corner. The vote for our Cozy Corner name has ever been thought of with pleasure by me, perhaps because I voted for the chosen name. Three years have taken their flight and to-day, as superintendent, I come knocking for admittance to your Corner with the members of the Loyal Temperance Legion of Redfield, who each have every good wish for Aunt Jane and her Cornerers, and who are going to work by the motto, "Lifting others as we climb." Letta D. Horner.

Redfield, Iowa.

Make room, boys and girls, for this bright company and draw them closely into our circle.

I am a little boy almost nine years old. I could not write "A Prize Essay" because I was visiting at grandma's this summer; when I lived at Tower I belonged to the L. T. L. Now I am not doing any temperance work in the Band of Hope but I am a Prohibition boy. Santa Claus brought me the "Illustrated Authors." I have entered the Wheel race. Leigh Teachout.

Northfield, Minn.

How did you come out in the race, Leigh?

Is there room in your Cozy Corner for me? I am fourteen years old. I have been reading the cousins' letters for a long time and like them very much. I want to tell you about my little brother. His name is Francis Willard. He is proud of his name and he says that he is going to be a good man like Miss Frances Willard. He has dark blue eyes and when he laughs they shine like two stars. My cousin got up a Demorest medal contest in Chesterfield county, Va., last month. My sister and I spoke; my sister got the medal. She is proud because she was the youngest one who spoke. Mamma and I are both temperance. Audrey Corson.

Clayville, Va.

Your letter is very interesting, Audrey, and we hope you will come often now you have found the way.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The daily UNION SIGNAL, which in the past has been one of the important factors of the yearly convention of the National W. C. T. U., will not this year send its white-capped messengers through convention hall with its verbatim report of the sessions and its spicy comments upon the events of the day. If it shall be so missed as to give promise of an increased subscription list, it may in coming years be issued again in the same attractive form as in 1894, but it has been deemed expedient to discontinue it this year for reasons which commend themselves to those deeply interested in and closely allied to the great association it represents.

It is the opinion of astute and representative business men, that the recent revival of activity in the iron industry, which has in the past often sounded the cheery note of "better times coming" will extend gradually to other lines of business until the paralysis of the past three years will be wholly overcome, and returning prosperity make possible plans and ventures which are now negatived by the incisive question, "Will it pay?" This has been in some respects the most severe of the years of depression, and the inability to answer the above question satisfactorily has led partly to the decision to discontinue the Convention Daily.

Added to this has been the realization that without the cool, calm, discriminating direction of its managing editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, its success would be in a sense experimental. She has been suddenly called to her home in California, to comfort her bereaved mother, with a great burden of sorrow upon her own heart, and we are deprived of her strong support as editor, as co-worker, as friend. In the close relation of managing editor and business manager, we shall miss her rare judgment, keen business sense, womanly tact and the influence of a consistent Christian life whose genuineness impressed itself alike upon compositors, proofreaders and the entire staff of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The announcement that the daily UNION SIGNAL would be published as usual has inadvertently crept into the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin, and some who have overlooked the contradictory statement in the Publisher's Notes are sending to us subscriptions. To avoid unnecessary clerical work, and disappointment, we hope the fact may be given wide circulation that there will be no Convention Daily this year.

We are also receiving inquiries with regard to the one and one-third fare upon the certificate plan. These reduced rates are available to all persons going to Baltimore according to prescribed dates, who secure certificates entitling them to the reduction, and all such certificates will be duly indorsed at the Convention. Upon receipt of post-office addresses we will gladly forward to any so desiring, time-tables of railroads whose route is from Chicago to Baltimore.

PROFESSOR CASE ON CO-EDUCATION.

Professor Case, of Oxford College, has recently delivered an adverse opinion concerning co-education which is worthy of attention because of the high position, and consequent influence, of its author. Some of his statements are so flatly contradicted by the facts already established in co-educational institutions, and others are founded upon such abominable theories of morality, that we cannot believe they would have any influence if they came from a less important personage. He contends, in the first place, that the women whose mental powers will fit them to work side by side with young men will be exceptional, almost to the extent, one might infer, of being monstrosities, and runs through the old, obsolete list of the feminine characteristics of mind, such as superior memory, taste for the arts, etc. The facts which our numerous co-educational institutions in this country prove beyond a peradventure is that there is no sex in these things. That the average young women hold their own with the average young men in mathematics, the sciences, and all other "masculine" studies, quite as well as in the presumed more feminine studies. In the face of the established facts, it simply shows egregious ignorance of the subject for one to argue the question on the basis of assumed radical differences in the masculine and feminine mind. And we have a right to expect that the educator who attempts to help settle the question should at least possess himself of all the known facts in the case.

Like all the rest of our officious masculine overseers, Professor Case's chief objections come from matrimonial considerations. He greatly fears that should co-education become common, co-educational institutions will develop into matchmaking institutions, and that matches will be made without the consent of parents. It is not long since we read a protest from another individual, who may have come out of the same piece of limestone with Professor Case, against the anxiety which he saw, or imagined, in young people to "get married." Verily, some people are hard to suit! The advocates of co-education have had to exert their powers to the utmost to persuade this same class of people that the higher education of woman was not going to take from her all desire to marry, all taste for home life, and behold, we are suddenly confronted with the objection that co-educational schools will be matchmaking institutions and are informed that young people are anxious to marry! To all of which we have only to reply that we fully believe that young people ought to be anxious to marry. We deprecate the unnatural state of affairs which made marriage woman's only goal in life, because the result was that noble girls were constantly sacrificed to most unworthy men with the necessary result of unhappy homes, divorces and even worse evils. But in the right and true state of society, in which man and woman shall be absolutely equal in rights, privileges and opportunities, the right and natural and happy condition will be married life, and the young man or woman who for any reason fails to find his mate will feel that he has missed one of life's chief joys. And if co-educational institutions had nothing else to commend them, we claim that their record in the one matter of "matchmaking" should establish their claim upon popular favor.

The time is past when parents are to make matches for their children or even to take a very active part in the matter. The life union of two human beings involves every interest of those individuals for time and eternity. It follows that no person should ever enter into the relation until old enough to make his own choice. Youthful marriages, with and without the consent of parents, have borne a bitter fruitage of wretchedness and divorce. The remedy is not in greater supervision of parents, but in the better developed and wiser judgment of the persons concerned. Parental guidance will never be of much value. In the nature of the case, one person, however well he may know his friends, can never be a competent judge as to whether any two of them can form a happy life union. The delicate and mysterious qualities of soul which bind together two persons in irresistible attraction or separate them by as irresistible a repulsion can never be known by a third person. The most that a parent can do for his child in the matter of choosing a life companion, all that he should attempt to do, is to impress upon the child the importance of that choice to his whole after existence, the help and strength and blessing which a right choice will bring to him, the terrible havoc which a wrong one will be sure to work with his life and character and destiny. God himself does not do more. He does not force the human will in the infinitely more crucial moment when it decides for or against Him, and earthly parents may well learn the lesson that they cannot make life decisions for their children, that their service to their children is done when they help them to make those decisions wisely for themselves.

We contend, therefore, that in this matter the best thing that can happen to any young person is to be placed so as to mingle freely with other young people of both sexes, where he can meet all kinds of personalities and where he can have opportunity to judge of their life and character. There has no place yet been found which affords such favorable opportunities as the mixed school. It might be known a priori that to shut young men and women away from each other would have the effect of investing each for the other with a false glamour utterly destructive of any discriminating judgment. But there is no need of any a priori argument, for the experiment has been fully, thoroughly and persistently tried, with the very general result of giving young men the impression that every pretty face and attractive manner indicated an angel, and endowing everything masculine with all the qualities of a hero to the unsophisticated boarding school miss. On the other hand, the free mingling of young people in school must of necessity, as a rule, remove that false glamour. The pretty face and graceful manner must have strength of intellect and character back of them if they maintain their supremacy in the daily acquaintance of the class room. Recitations and literary societies prove a severe test of masculine superiority. In fact, there is no place outside of the home where each is so sure to measure the other at his true value as at school. As a matter of fact, co-educational institutions justify to a large extent Professor Case's fears. Very many matches are made in them. We know intimately of many of them, and we are prepared to show from our own knowledge that the great majority of them are exceptionally fortunate and happy, the smallest minimum being unhappy.

But the worst feature in Professor Case's argument is his assumption, in direct contradiction of the facts, that co-education will result in the moral deterioration of women. He takes the old, vicious view that because of her influence on her unborn child, it is absolutely necessary that the woman be pure of life, and tacitly assumes that the moral character of the man is of comparatively little importance. Hence, he argues that there are many books which it is perfectly proper for men to read which women should never see, and that it is shameful for the two sexes to read together the obscenities of the classical writers. This is the abominable doctrine which the W. C. T. U. is combating so fiercely, the outrageous teaching which so long has maintained the double standard of morals for the sexes and wrought such havoc in our homes. It is the doctrine of the educated men of India who are unwilling their wives and daughters should be educated lest they read the obscene books and literature with which they themselves are perfectly familiar. In accordance with this theory we have tried persistently to make the human race pure and good by giving it pure mothers and corrupt fathers and we have steadily failed. In the meantime we have used better sense in the breeding of our cattle. A shame, indeed, for young men and women to read the obscenities of classical writers together! Because it is a shame for either of them to read them at all. We are not sure but that they would better read them together than apart. It is, indeed, time that young women be admitted to our universities when a principal argument against their admission by a prominent educator is that the topics of discussion, in studies where such topics may easily be omitted, are not fit for them to listen to. Even in physiology, biology, etc., we fully believe that the two sexes may work together to the great benefit of the purity of the race. We are at present given to a false silence and over niceness concerning subjects which should in their rightful place be treated with the common sense frankness with which nature treats all of her processes. This false silence is quite as harmful as unnecessary speech and is responsible for many present evils. A right minded teacher can so teach these subjects to mixed classes as to make them subserve instead of injure the morals of his pupils.

We do not defend a forlorn hope or even a doubtful issue. No modern reform has made more rapid progress than that of co-education. The strong, common sense of the people is with this movement as it has been with few others. In spite of such attacks as these, the universities of the world are steadily opening their doors to women.

IN UNION IS STRENGTH.

One of the strategic movements of reform which is being slowly worked out is that which involves a closer alliance between the forces of the W. C. T. U., the Prohibition party, the Populists and the Trades Unions, of which we have often spoken and to which we still steadfastly adhere. An effort has been honestly made by many of our leaders, and although we have not yet succeeded we have at least helped to make the captains of the different hosts better acquainted, and they are gradually approaching each other. We wish that the Labor party which has already declared for woman's ballot would make the declaration of what we know to be its purpose—that the saloon shall no longer exist as a school of personal deterioration and perjured politics.

It is a thousand pities that the rank and file of the two parties that incarnate the best hopes of our people should not begin the fraternization by holding joint meetings in their various localities. Perhaps we have begun at the wrong end of this difficult problem; leaders are more opinionated and have more of self-interest at stake in the coalescence of great movements than have the rank and file. This is rather the misfortune than the fault of those who lead; but it is a grievous hindrance to the best good of the people.

The president of a local union should use her best endeavors to bring about social and consultation meetings between the members of these two movements in her own town—the W. C. T. U. conference a sort of friendly meeting ground. We firmly believe if this could be done throughout the coming year that the two progressive reform movements represented by these two young parties would become confluent in 1896 by the nomination of a joint ticket, and would afford such a demonstration to the public of the power of united manhood and womanhood in demanding protection for the home and for the working man and woman who guard its doors, that four years later the movement might be enthroned at the capital. We hope the National Convention will pass a rousing resolution on this subject, and that our women will go home to trim the evening lamp and call in the disciples of the new faith, whether they wear broadcloth or blue jeans, inviting them over a fragrant cup that cheers but not inebriates, to set in order their protest to their leaders against the separation in two camps of an army whose faces are set towards the same goal. If that convention could focus its efforts on this single purpose it would by a thousand fold reward all the expense and pains of coming together. At the fireside of the Crusade our foremothers pitifully presented their plea to the saloon-keeper; twenty years later their daughters have risen by God's grace to a point of power where they can persuade the good and true men of their circle to join hands with the honest sons of toil and make common cause in a better political party than the country has seen for a generation, whose platform shall demand the rehabilitation of the toiler as a proprietor and the prohibition of the liquor traffic as one means to this end.

MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY, PH. D.

White-ribboners have a sisterly fashion of wanting to know each other. Thousands of our readers already know Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, but other thousands may not, so for their pleasure and profit we are glad to present the sketch of the managing editor of The Union Signal for the year to come. A portrait was solicited, but has not reached us in time.

Our Ohio readers will all be glad to learn that Mrs. Fry is a native of the Buckeye state, having been born on a farm near Burlington, in Lawrence county. She was graduated in early years from the Western Female Seminary at Oxford, O., one of the leading schools of the West, and founded upon the same plan as the famous school of Mary Lyons—Mt. Holyoke.

Subsequent to graduation, Mrs. Fry spent several years as a teacher in the public schools of Ohio, her work lying mainly in the high schools. In 1868 she married Rev. James D. Fry, a graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University, and a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1873, in company with her husband, she went abroad to study literature and art. Soon after returning, in 1876, she was elected to the chair of belles lettres in the Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill. Two years later the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O., conferred upon her the degree of A. M., and not long after she received, upon examination, the degree of Ph. D. from the Syracuse University. For fourteen years she retained her position in the Wesleyan University, and although her duties as professor of literature and history were as heavy as those of any teacher in the school, she also acted as virtual dean of the woman's department, and found time for the prosecution of special studies which brought the well earned diplomas above mentioned. She also gave lectures on art and history to private clubs in Bloomington, and many a young woman in that intellectual city owes her love of those subjects to Mrs. Fry's enthusiastic knowledge of the same.

The Woman's Crusade swept over this country during Mrs. Fry's absence in Europe and crystallized into the Woman's Christian Temperance Union ere her return, so she had no part in its organization, but she soon became vitally interested in the home protection movement, and was for many years effectively identified with the work, one of her most notable speeches having been delivered before the state legislature in 1879.

In 1890 Mrs. Fry took up her residence in St. Paul, Minn., where she taught one year in the city high school. The next year and a half, during the absence of the regular professor, she had charge of English Literature in the State University at Minneapolis. Her literary acquaintance in the three states where her educational work has been done, Ohio, Illinois and Minnesota, is very extensive, and, indeed, few names are better known in the educational circles of the United States than that of Susanna M. D. Fry. She has always been a progressive teacher, constantly improving upon her own and others' methods, and gaining fresh inspiration for her work with every day's performance.

Mrs. Fry's rare judicial qualities, as well as her broad culture, were recognized in her appointment to the judgeship of the Liberal Arts department at the Columbian Exposition. In the discharge of this duty she resided in Chicago most of the time during 1893, and when the commission was dissolved she was retained upon the committee of awards, her special duties being in connection with the editing of the certificates. Every recommendation for awards which she made was accepted by the board of judges, and its vice-president, General Eaton, for sixteen years commissioner for the United States Bureau of Education, said of her, "Mrs. Fry was one of the most intelligent, judicious and efficient of the one hundred and thirty judges of liberal arts at the Columbian Exposition."

When work in connection with the World's Fair was ended, Mrs. Fry returned to Dodge Center, Minn., where her husband was preaching, and reëntered the temperance field. In September, 1894, she was elected state president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., and has accomplished a most successful year's work, organizing unions, presiding over conventions and delivering public addresses. She was unanimously reëlected to the state presidency at the recent annual convention in August, with the full knowledge of her appointment on The Union Signal, the understanding being that she would keep her hand on the work through correspondence and attendance upon the executive meetings.

Mrs. Fry is one of our most forcible speakers, her style of delivery being clear, easy and sparkling, and her descriptive powers unexcelled. As a writer she wields a racy and facile pen, and during her years of teaching has often contributed articles to the leading journals. While residing in St. Paul she had some practical experience in journalism, editing a department in a weekly newspaper, so she comes to The Union Signal not only with a finely trained, well stored mind, but with some knowledge of the mysteries of the journalistic craft and an intelligent comprehension of the scope and power of the official organ of the W. C. T. U.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICES AT THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, our National superintendent of the evangelistic department, promises a rich season of consecration and devotional services at Baltimore. She writes as follows:

"That our annual gathering should broaden our views of the work in which we are engaged and quicken our zeal, is of great importance. But that it should increase our consecration and courage and bring spiritual blessing upon our work is of even greater importance.

"The evangelistic department has prepared for a rich spiritual feast during the Convention. Daily from 8:30 to 9:30 a morning prayer-meeting will be held in a hall of the same building in which the Convention gathers. The evangelistic superintendent will preside at these meetings and lead on Tuesday, October 22. Other of our National evangelists will lead the other mornings. At 11:15 a. m. each day will occur the devotional hour in the Convention; Friday, a devotional service; Saturday, a Bible exposition by the National superintendent; Monday, a memorial service; Tuesday, devotional hour, and Wednesday, a praise and testimony meeting. Prominent evangelists, superintendents and organizers will conduct these services.

"On Saturday afternoon, October 19, a special evangelistic conference will be held. The evangelistic superintendent will preside, and our National evangelists will be introduced and give brief reports of their work.

"Our hostesses in Baltimore will be invited to coöperate with us in making these services, especially that at 8:30 a. m., a success.

"Will not our officers and delegates make a sacrifice to attend, that rich blessing may fall upon us as individuals; upon the homes of Baltimore and upon the sessions of our Convention. 'There they dwelt with the king for his work.' Let us, as children of the King, dwell with Him during these seasons of refreshing."

It is a cheering indication that Mr. Chamberlain, the British Colonial secretary, has notified the government in South Africa that the home government will not allow the sale of liquors in Bechuanaland. We learn that the Colonial government has had a hot debate, saying that England would never think of putting such a restriction upon Australasia, but it must be remembered that Australia has an established home government, while the annexation of this new territory enables the home government to make conditions that it considers important to the well-being of the people to be annexed.

It was Andrew Bonar who said, "Faith keeps us but God keeps our faith."

The floral emblem of the World's W. C. T. U. is the water lily. The roots of this blossom are in the mud but its white radiance comes from its passion for the sunshine, and the home finds in it a true emblem because only as the sunshine of love and truth keeps its atmosphere wholesome and pure can little children hope to grow up according to the law of God.

It is not always true that the "good gifts" of the parents and the training of a Christian home are evidenced by the children, yet there are many families in which the pure gold strain of the Christian temperance faith enriches each member of the home circle. The recent death of that kindly Christian Prohibitionist, Dr. James M. Sudduth, recalls to my mind an interesting coincidence which is a notable manifestation of the workings of the best heredity. It occurred last spring on the occasion of the Lathrap memorial service by the Colton, California, W. C. T. U. Mrs. Sudduth as leader of the union was in the chair, Dr. Sudduth, who was a warm admirer of Mrs. Lathrap, whom he had frequently entertained in his Illinois home, gave the address of the evening, and Miss Alice Sudduth, our National superintendent of flower mission, presided at the organ. The same week the son, Dr. Wm. X. Sudduth, a well known scientific and reform lecturer, gave an address in a Minneapolis church, his subject being, "The Polyglot Petition," and secured a large number of signatures among the students and faculty of the state university. The remaining member of the family, Miss Margaret Sudduth, was at the time steadily guiding the helm of our National organ in the Temple at Chicago. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The white-ribboners of Adrian, Michigan, gave an afternoon entertainment recently in the principal opera house which was filled with a cultivated and interested audience. It consisted of a reproduction, as far as possible, of the great Convention in London, including the Albert Hall meeting and the garden party given by Lady Henry Somerset at her country home, Reigate Priory, near London. Entertainments like this would be unrivaled for their educational value in making the work and workers known to the people generally, and the reports in the local press would widen that knowledge to the great circle of the great public. Every person and every association has its own public which is often a small one, but in order to make reform movements co-extensive with the real public they must be brought before the people at large in every way that ingenuity can devise and persistent effort along legitimate lines—by which I mean educational as distinguished from sensational lines—will permit.

She was only a bronzed old fruit woman behind her stand in the terrace overlooking the garden of Versailles near one of the entrances to the palace. As we emerged, wearied after a two hours' wandering through the mazes of state apartments and corridors, we stopped before her and looked over her wares for some refreshment. I noticed that among the fruit syrups and juices there were no wine-bottles and called my companion's attention to it. In response to a question the woman earnestly said, "No, indeed, I sell no wine. It is bad stuff and brings much misfortune!" We were delighted to find a comrade so unexpectedly and in such a guise, and told her, "We are friends, for we wear the white ribbon for that very reason." Her rugged, earnest face beamed under the broad bonnet as she ejaculated with true French enthusiasm, "You then propagate good doctrines? Ah, that is right, that is what the good Seigneur would like us to do." "Then you know, too, the Seigneur, the Saviour, Jesus Christ?" "Ah, madame. What should I do without? It is a long time that I have known Him but well! well! for thank God, I have the conscience at peace and that is the best in this world. For if in this world we know not the good Seigneur what therefore remains to us? Nothing but the worst of miseries, is it not?" Before leaving we pinned the white ribbon on her shawl that others of our party might recognize a kindred spirit in the unassuming, hard working fruit vender who had so well learned the Christian's secret of a happy life.

On Duty.

TASMANIA.

While you are enjoying the warmth and gladness of summer, we in this southerly isle are in the middle of bleak winter, a winter, too, that has been unusually cold and severe. We have had sharp frosts, much rain, heavy, boisterous winds, and even a fall of snow has visited this wild northwest coast. This rare visitant has given to many of our young folks the unique pleasure of snowballing. The chill of winter lies heavy on the poor and distressed, and warm, loving hearts and diligent hands are not slack in ministering to their necessities. Benevolent, Dorcas and other societies are trying to alleviate the prevalent distress, and many of our W. C. T. Unions are holding regular Dorcas meetings to assist the indigent in their own neighborhood. This aspect of our work is one that commends itself to all.

Coffee-room work has in some places been resumed this winter, and in others where it has never been allowed to lapse, greater efforts are being made to draw young men and youth from the temptation of gaily lit saloons, to the quieter and healthier coffee-room influences. A few unions, notably the Launceston one, have taken up this department, and are hoping they will be able to do very substantial work amongst young men. The Launceston union has succeeded in enlisting a most estimable member in this service.

Since our convention meeting greater efforts have been put forth to reach and save the children. An L. T. L. has been formed in Launceston, while on the northwest coast two other divisions are in course of organization. One or two unions have started Bands of Hope. In the beginning of April, a deputation from the United Temperance Council of the W. C. T. U., Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army, Rechabites and Christian Endeavor societies, waited upon Sir Edward Braddon, Minister of Education, to ask him to use his influence in enforcing temperance teaching in the state schools. Provisions have been made for the instruction of temperance, but the regulations had somehow or other been a dead letter. The result of the interview is that the Minister of Education issued a circular to state school-teachers throughout the colony, intimating that instruction in scientific temperance shall be given for half an hour twice a week. Broadribb's work is to be supplied for the purpose. Tasmania is now one of the three colonies where scientific temperance instruction is really compulsory.

Mr. John Vale, the energetic secretary of the Victorian Temperance Alliance, which is affiliated with the United Temperance Societies of Victoria, held a crusade lasting a month. The inaugural meeting was held in Launceston, where he gave a series of interesting addresses, and then visited towns and villages along the northwestern line. He then proceeded to the capital city, Hobart, and there, as well as in its surrounding townships, held large and successful meetings. When in Launceston he gave a practical address on "Woman Suffrage." Mrs. W. Hart, the local president of the W. C. T. U., presided. At a similar meeting, held in Hobart, Mrs. Lodge, the local president, took the chair. Mr. Vale is an ardent, clear-headed advocate of temperance, and not a few have in response to his common-sense arguments, as well as his irresistible logic, joined the temperance ranks.

The Tasmanian Temperance Alliance has held its thirty-ninth annual meeting. The report refers in laudable terms to the work of the W. C. T. U. and also to the "efficient service which Miss Murcutt (our Australasian organizer) rendered during the three months she was publicly at work in our colony.

Wherever practicable special meetings for prayer for the World's Convention were held, when we "though sundered far" by faith met "around one common mercy seat." The little gatherings of twos and threes as well as the larger ones have felt it a privilege to pray for those brave women who are called to the front of the great battle against intemperance and impurity, and for that great gathering which will, by its deliberations and discussions, have consolidated and strengthened our work "For God, and home and humanity."

Thanksgiving and Crusade week has been a very busy one. Drawing-room, cottage and public meetings and social gatherings have been held in the interests of the W. C. T. U. In Launceston and Hobart a series of meetings were held, but in country places the unions, owing to the paucity of members, have had to be contented with one or two, in most cases one. We have gained accessions to our ranks, have augmented our funds a little and have received a new impetus in our holy cause.

Parliament was reopened on June 24, and it is with considerable interest we are watching its attitude in respect to the enfranchisement of women. A bill to amend the Constitution Act has been brought before the house, and the wish has been expressed by several members that in it provision will be made to extend the vote to women.

At the beginning of the session a petition was presented from the W. C. T. U. praying for the abolition of the Contagious Diseases Acts. Our women are becoming more awake to the iniquitous laws that exist, and of the enormous injustice such laws heap upon weak and erring woman.

Every true hearted woman will congratulate our American sisters in having succeeded in New Hampshire and New York states in raising the age of consent to eighteen years.

One of the outcomes of the thirteenth sitting of the Church of England Synod was the formation of a society for giving religious instruction in state schools, particularly in county districts.

A rescue home has opened in Launceston, and the home will supply a long-felt need in that city. This noble work has been taken up by the Salvation Army, and that mainly through the energy and earnest devotion of Mrs. Gover, who has had a large experience of rescue work in London.

AUSTRALASIAN W. C. T. U.

Australasia is quietly but steadily going forward in W. C. T. U. work, and woman's advancement generally.

Quickly following the granting of the franchise to the women of South Australia, the W. C. T. U. of that colony took a long step forward by securing most commodious premises (formerly used as a bank) for headquarters. The unanimous verdict is that the site is splendid and the building admirably suited to the needs of the work. The successful launching of this new venture is largely due to the faith of the Australasian and Colonial president, Mrs. Nicholls, and her energetic coadjutor, Miss George, Colonial corresponding secretary, while ever ready to help them is a band of noble women who give generously of their time and talents for the cause we love so well.

Victorian headquarters are becoming more appreciated every day, and it is being more and more laid upon the hearts of the women in the other colonies, that it is necessary for success that the W. C. T. U. should have an habitation; although we are not yet ambitious enough to think of building a second Temple one or two members actually imagined that their Colonial leader s ideas soared as high as that!

The annual Crusade week for thanksgiving and prayer was a time of much blessing to those who observed it and in some places social meetings were held the 4th of July to celebrate the birthday of our honorary Australasia president, Miss Ackermann, who, we rejoice to hear, is slowly gaining strength. It is pleasant to know that not only were we ably represented at the World's Convention by Miss Ackermann, but that some of our own Australian members were present and spoke at those notable meetings. Australasia feels honored by the appointment of Miss Pemell, of Sydney, as World's superintendent of flower missions.

We have three Australasian organizers at work in the field, Misses Vincent and Cummins holding successful missions in South Australia, and Miss A. Murcutt visiting Queensland. Misses Vincent and Murcutt have recently had sad experiences, each losing her mother.

The new edition of "Thumb Nail Sketches," just to hand, brings the workers of many lands nearer to us and makes us realize that we are united in W. C. T. U. fellowship.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE Life Line, organ of the Rangoon, India, W. C. T. U., is an exceptionally interesting exponent of our cause in form, contents and appearance.

MADAME CHANTRAIN, of Charleroi, Belgium, a lady of high accomplishment and great zeal in progressive work, has accepted the position of president of the World's W. C. T. U. of Belgium.

THE important appointment of superintendent of World's W. C. T. U. for coöperation between the Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies and the W. C. T. U. has been accepted by Mrs. Joseph Cook, 23 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

IN the W. W. C. T. U. roster, published recently in THE UNION SIGNAL, for Miss Marshall Saunders, Halifax, N. S., superintendent humane education, should be substituted the department of mercy, Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, Bryn Mawr, Pa., superintendent. Miss Saunders was not able to accept the appointment which was then most appropriately bestowed upon our National superintendent, who has accepted.

WORD has been received from Miss Jessie Ackermann and her friends, Miss Shaffner and Miss Pratt, that they have been successful in their journey to the far north via Norway and with Iceland as its goal. Miss Ackermann writes that she is much stronger, and there is reason to hope that she will resume work ere long, some one of the continental countries being her chosen field for the introduction of the white ribbon movement.

A LETTER has just been received from Miss Denton, Doshisha, Kyoto, recently appointed resident W. C. T. U. missionary in Japan, which is self-explanatory and reads as follows: "I greatly regret that I do not see my way clear to accept the appointment as resident W. C. T. U. missionary for Japan. I am under obligation to the board that sent me to Japan. . . This and other reasons hold me, but I shall be more a W. C. T. U. missionary than ever, and shall work in every way for the building up of our glorious cause. We greatly need a resident W. C. T. U. missionary, and I pray that one far more able to meet the demands of the position may soon be found."

MRS. AMIE HICKS, the leading woman connected with the labor movement in England, has accepted the position of superintendent of the labor department of the World's W. C. T. U. As a speaker and organizer, Mrs. Hicks stands in the fore front of the battle. She visited America as a delegate from the Trades Unions to the great Convention in Denver, Col., last autumn, but was prevented by severe illness from going further than New York. Miss Frances Hicks, the daughter of Mrs. Amie Hicks, is secretary of the Women's Industrial Council of London, and her entire family are devoted to the cause of the uplift of labor and its affiliation with the other great enterprises that are its natural allies.

MICHIGAN.

ETCHINGS.

In our president's annual address were these words: "Not only the fathers but the grandfathers of the future are in our hands. If we fail to mold and fashion them aright, shall we be held guiltless?" On this line I am glad to tell you of an L. T. L. third annual convention held in first district, at Northville. Its program, headed with their state motto, "Do to-day's duties—Resist to-day's temptations," surely gave the gist of the question. Then followed reports of secretaries by companies, eleven so reporting, five located in Detroit. A prize essay, "Alcohol in the Nation," was heard from Company E, of Northville, and a model Legion meeting was conducted by Mrs. Emma Greene, whose enthusiasm caused the first successful convention in our state. She also gave a scientific experiment with root beer which caused quite an agitation on the body politic, whereof we are glad, for dissension ever awakens thought, and the birth of a soul into our kingdom was the result. The convention closed with a Cooper medal contest.

The program for Oakland county convention in the sixth district is out, speaking of welcomes by the mayor, the churches, the Epworth League, Y. P. U., Y. P. S. C. E., and missions. Papers upon flower mission, franchise, mothers' meetings and narcotics, all by able women, with the active president in the chair (who has a five thousand dollar suit on her hands) all promise the most successful, stirring convention of that county.

Mrs. Parrish, our corresponding secretary, in last issue of state paper says: "I sometimes wonder if the members of the unions are making themselves as effective as they should be to carry on this solemn work, and I am impressed with this important fact; that we are responsible not for what we are so much as what we can be. A weighty responsibility surely. Intelligence only begets a permanent enthusiasm."

Mrs. Kellogg is planning for active franchise work. The specialty for the coming year will be the study of civil government in circles composed of members of the unions and all others who can be induced to attend. The study of national, state and municipal government will become so interesting that it will attract the indifferent. The common school text-books for study of civil government will be used and by following this plan we shall at least be intelligent voters.

Mrs. Bradley on narcotics says: "Let us this year strive to make smoking so odious that young men will not feel free to indulge openly; young women will not lend their influence for the spread of this curse. Let us use our young people wherever we can on programs for public meetings; get them to take an open stand against these habits. Pray for open doors and enter wherever you can."

Mrs. B. B. Hudson's Bible reading is upon "The Unspeakable Gift," under these headings: This is a free and unsolicited gift—unappreciated gift—a persistent gift—through the Holy Ghost a continuous and permanent gift.

The second district president closes her letter to the unions thus: "Finally, sisters, be loyal to all the plans of the state board as found in your state reports. Take up the work of the year with zeal." A sermon with at least three texts.

The third, seventh, eighth, ninth, eleventh and twelfth districts have issued their calls for annual conventions. The other districts are bristling with calls for county conventions. The third district calls a county convention in the name of three unions. At Dorrance the W. C. T. U. furnished a barrel of ice-water the day of field sports. At Homer the two local papers have each placed a column at service of the union. At a recent meeting of the Grange, composed of farmers and their wives within a radius of twenty miles, many of whom are Republicans, a strong resolution of appreciation and indorsement of the W. C. T. U. was offered and adopted. At a farmers' picnic held in Archer's Grove, a dealer in liquid goods drove into the lane leading to the grounds and waited for permission from the owner to pass on; upon being refused he drove across the road and proceeded to unload his outfit. His stay was very brief, however, for the ground he had preëmpted was owned by the husband of a loyal white-ribboner, who, upon being apprised of the fact called upon the gentleman and gave him "just fifteen minutes to vacate their premises." He left at once.

Ottawa county, fifth district, held a successful convention with our state president attending all through. Nine unions, three Y's and one L. T. L. were represented. The motto of the Allendale Y's, the Golden Rule, was the keynote all through. Kent county union held their annual picnic at North Park, Mrs. Britton, of Albion, giving an address on the subject, "Cents, Scents, Common Sense." Cedar Springs have furnished depot with wall pockets. Clara Wheeler Y of Grand Rapids has awakened quite an interest and enthusiasm by engaging in a contest; a certain number of "points" being allowed for securing new members. Quite an increase in membership is reported. Madam Boise union has raised much money for hospital and the Y building.

In the sixth district three new unions, one of thirty-six members, organized. Livingston county has doubled its membership the past year. Howell has a Y which numbers sixty. We hold the state banner for largest increase. An enthusiastic meeting was held at Oak Grove in the interest of the press department. We are represented in six papers in Livingston county. At the annual meeting of Genoa the district and county presidents were present, and helpful. Ingham county reports one new union, two as raising dues to one dollar. The seventh district held at Imlay City a union meeting with L. O. T. U., Daughters of Rebekah, at which Miss Birrell gave parliamentary drill. They also had Bennett and Huckins, for four temperance meetings. The St Clair county convention was held at Huronia Beach, a pleasant summer resort. Rev. Stansfield and district president both gave short addresses. Mt. Clemens held tent meetings for two weeks, with evangelist Kerr and Johns as leaders; these meetings were both spiritual and profitable. In the eighth district the Shiawasse county president reports visits to Byron, Laingsburg and Durand, the new union, and a railroad center, with many opportunities for work. At the Simpson Park camp-meeting ground there was a W. C. T. U. rally, with a large attendance of clergymen. In the call for annual convention at Owosso, Mrs. Adams says: "Let the consecrated motherhood of the eighth district come together and send one united petition to the Father that He will in some way make us instrumental in the great work of home protection."

Evart, of the ninth district, has a new L. T. L. At McBain flower mission work has received special attention, and in Oceana county, the purity department. Big Rapids has held both Demorest and Cooper contests. Sherman L. T. L. is now graded into senior, intermediate and primary. Ludington held a special meeting in regard to Armenian atrocities. Scottville is booming on all lines, and is working to put in a reading-room. In the call for tenth district convention Mrs. Faxon says the aim of the whole convention will be practical work, also that a copy of "The School Physiology Journal," edited by Mary H. Hunt, has been forwarded to the president of each union, to be shown school superintendent, and an effort made to induce teachers to subscribe for it as a help in their scientific instruction work.

Eleventh district president is under a cloud of sorrow, having lost a son. The ministrations of white-ribbon sisters has been most comforting.

The twelfth and last district of this great state is hard at work; its president organized four unions since July. It can be said of every union "they are up and doing," and every day we see fruits of labors. Menominee union holds parlor meetings that are a success. Republic is making a specialty of mothers' meetings; they also have an active Y. St. Ignace is working on medal contest lines, Escanaba on the unique entertainment line—fan drill, souvenirs in India ink tied with white ribbon, etc. The district convention will be held at Sault Ste. Marie last of September.

Thanking God for safely returning to us our beloved leader, Frances Willard, and all her helpers, we face another Convention, and our trumpet call resounds from ocean to ocean,

"On to Baltimore."

OREGON.

VIEWING THE FIELD.

I have had nothing but a few private communications as a nucleus for a report since sending my last. Our state organ has been lying still, owing, I conclude, to financial difficulties.

My own removal to the pretty suburbs of Portland ought to give me metropolitan interests, but I am too far off for much personal contact. Unfortunately W. C. T. U. interest (or, indeed, any purely reform interest) does not swell in proportion to the population, and our county president, Mrs. Additon, says that in comparing it with other counties there is less of it than where the inhabitants live in little "bunches," instead of in a large city. I always did consider a huge civic center to be little better than a modern Babel, spread out, instead of up; and I wonder sometimes that a "confusion of tongues" does not arrive in order to put a stop to the infection of wickedness! Thank God there are some latter day worthies among the churches and among our women who strive to "heal the breach" of the city.

Our dear Mrs. Riggs has taken up her abode at the Refuge Home, and devotes herself entirely to the poor girls. Mrs. Gilbert, of the prison and jail department, does the same at the Open Door, still open in the busy part of the city. Mrs. Mead, a near neighbor of mine, our state evangelist, does much toward strengthening the hands of both, by gospel services in each place. The moral wave that seemed to be sweeping over here, soon came to an ebb, and the efforts that were making came to a standstill, leaving things, I am sorry to say, very much as they were before. Consequently as the houses of ill-fame shelter (?) about as many girls as formerly, the Open Door stands ajar in vain. The ladies I mention think, therefore, that a more aggressive mission needs to be established in order to "rescue the perishing."

One of the most encouraging signs that I have noticed lately (because it runs, perhaps, in the lines of my own department) is a column and a half of descriptive writing on W. C. T. U. work in the Oregonian. Now the Oregonian a Good Templar Eastern lecturer describes as the Oregon Bible, the one that is, I am afraid, more read, and with greater formative influence, than the ancient book. Because it is such a "power behind the throne" I gladly welcomed that said article "from A to Z." As I am a "stranger here" I pick up little bits of personal love from it, for instance, what it says about Mrs. I. W. Kern (our anti-tobacco superintendent): "She, a daughter of the well-known pioneer, 'Father' Clinton Kelly, is a tower of strength to the organization. Her judgment is sought for and followed by the other workers, and she is generally correct. She is possessed of much of the spirit which animated 'Father' Kelly, the old pioneer, and is greatly wrapped up in the W. C. T. U. work." The Oregonian admits occasional correspondence from us, and prints business notices for the central union. But outside that I consider a grand press work is being accomplished here. No less than eighteen papers feel its hand, and through that hand, how many pairs of eyes, with brain and heart behind them? Nearly all these touches are put by one woman's hand, that of Miss Sara J. Lyman. Am I not blest in owning such a superintendent?

The press superintendent for Marion county, Mrs. C. M. Charlton, has sent me a well varied report, which I will try to condense for you.

At Salem, Oregon capital, the ladies are busy preparing for a state fair restaurant, and will do much good with literature, under Mrs. Shipley's guidance. When the time comes she is already to give herself up to that work. They have been leading the way in silver medal contests, which Mrs. Robb has been working up. Marion, Woodbridge and Turner follow suit, to conclude with a golden "flourish."

Salem held memorial services for Mr. W. J. Demorest, at which the Reform School boys gave excellent help in the way of music and recitations. I am pleased to have to say that Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks, the excellent couple in charge, were not, after all, displaced at the change of political destiny, as threatened. These changes eat out half the good of a man's work. My axiom is, "when you've got a good man keep him." I should like to see almost all appointments life, and good service ones, like those of the federal court judges!

The reform school holds the banner L. T L. union. Turner has lately held a Christian missionary camp. Mrs. Whiteman, president of the W. C. T. U., arranged that there should be a W. C. T. U. campfire burning at the same time, at whose embers many workers throughout our wide state warmed up their flagging, half-numbed energies.

At our summer Chautauquas efforts were made to bring about a school of methods. Here, at Oregon City, that failed, not from want of space on the printed program, but from vacuity of time and place. It was arranged to take place simultaneously with the athletic sports to which everybody had, of course, rushed off. Mrs. Additon, who was to preside, declined presiding at empty benches. Our state president, Mrs. Narcissa W. Kinney, had given her very able lecture, "The Lady or the Tiger, which?"

"There was a young lady of Niger,
Who went for a ride on a tiger,
At the end of the ride
She was inside,
And a smile on the face of the tiger!"

I believe Canon Wilberforce perpetrated this rhyme.

At Ashland Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, who had charge, tells me they got on better, although the W. C. T. U. was a kind of a "side show" to the main exhibition. However, for the encouragement and building up of our workers at the present day of small things, a small tent is sufficient; but then the great outside is not reached at all! Mrs. Mead gave some of her good Bible readings at Ashland, and on her way back laid off at Albany, Corvallis and Philomarth for the same.

She has lately had a recall to Albany to conduct a mission for boys in which she has been very successful. There is there what is called "the sewer-gang;" boys who have thrown off the restraints of home, and quickly divesting themselves of the constraints of all decent society. One of these, after the evening meeting, Mrs. Mead—with her smiling round face, young although semi-circled with snowy hair — accosted. Seeing his stand-off look she said: "Do you think I am the devil? I only want to talk pleasant to you!" The youngster was disarmed at once and she believes a lasting impression has been made upon the whole "gang."

L. A. Nash,
State Reporter, Mt. Tabor.

Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick and Miss Anna Gordon have with Miss Willard, been staying at Eastnor Castle with Lady Henry Somerset for a brief period of quiet before taking up their duties in the autumn.

EAST WASHINGTON.

STATE AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The work here has been faithfully done by the few who are struggling to bring it up to grade. Madames Cox and Berry, our president and treasurer, made a wide canvass of the east and north parts of the state, driving from May 30 till July 24, accompanied only by Fisk, Mrs. Berry's little boy of four years, who bravely and patiently made the long, hot, dusty ride day after day as these courageous women drove on over dangerous, as well as dreary, uncomfortable roads, speaking every night and many days. Echoes of encouragement come from all points where they went. They visited portions of the state which had never been reached before, organized seven unions in Washington and one in Idaho, and added new members to old unions. St. Andrews, one of the new unions, reports twenty-three paying members, besides eleven honoraries, and five departments of work actively sustained. This union is far from any town or railroad, reached only by toilsome mountain roads, yet the people are more than usually intelligent and progressive. Several of the new unions are taking up active work, but on account of hard times cannot become auxiliary to the state by payment of dues until after harvest and threshing time, but will begin with the new year. Nothing but wheat is raised in that portion of the state, and that is selling at seventeen cents per bushel.

In May, Mrs. Cox organized Columbia county and they report their first semi-annual convention held in August as very interesting and instructive. Kittitas county is organized and reports a convention held last March by Mrs. Cox. This, like so many of our counties, is sparsely settled, with no railroads and has only two unions, Goldendale and Centreville. The latter reports several departments taken up, six Temple wheels filled and other good work done. Goldendale has always done practical work by laboring to secure anti-saloon men on their city council. For two years they inaugurated mass-meetings prior to their city elections, securing the services of Mrs. Cox, and both years succeeded in keeping saloons out of Goldendale, the county seat of Klickitat county, which is the only Prohibition county reported in the state.

Whitman is the banner W. C. T. U. county, having seven locals, Pullman, Colfax, Garfield, Oakesdale, Riverside, Rosalia and Latah. Their annual convention was held July 22 to 24 at Garfield, a town without saloons and was a grand success, the principal features being the spirit of devotion pervading all the meetings, a fine paper on social purity and mothers' meetings by Fannie F. Palmerton, state superintendent.

The president's address, a magnificent banquet and last but not least, a gold medal contest conducted by Mrs. Fannie Penn, state superintendent, completed the good program.

Kittitas, the only remaining organized county, held her annual convention August 7 and 8, at Roslyn, a mining town where Mrs. Cox organized a union last February. Much interest was manifested. An instructive article on "Relation of Temperance to Labor," was read by the state superintendent, Mrs. M. F. Edgington. Madames Mohr and Morrison also read excellent papers. Mrs. Cox gave two stirring addresses. The discussions were animated and instructive, and altogether the meeting was a success.

A year ago last May there was no union in this county; since that time Mrs. Cox

THE PRIZE BABY OF KANSAS CITY MO.

Cured of Disfiguring ECZEMA By the CUTICURA REMEDIES

Our baby when three weeks old was badly afflicted with Eczema. Her head, arms, neck, limbs, and nearly every joint in her body was raw and bleeding when we concluded to try CUTICURA REMEDIES. We began with CUTICURA (ointment) and CUTICURA SOAP, and after the first application we could see a change. After we had used them one week some of the sores had healed entirely, and ceased to spread. In less than a month, she was free from scales and blemishes, and to-day has as lovely skin and hair as any child. She was shown at the Grange Fair, and took a premium as the prettiest baby, over sixteen others. MR. & MRS. PARK, 1609 Belleview Ave., Kan. City.

The annual convention of East Washington was held at Ellensburg, September 10 and 14. The delegation was small but the interesting and tastefully prepared program was rendered almost entire.

It was much to be deplored that the scarlet fever was epidemic in the town, as it interfered with the general attendance and caused the absence of Miss Emma Page, the elocutionist from Olympia, who was to have given an address and remained in our city some time in the Demorest medal contest work.

Thirty local unions were reported by Mrs. Berry, our state treasurer, although the dues were so slow in coming in that the number of members reported to the National was less than last year.

Mollie E. Claus, corresponding secretary, brought in a good report of work done throughout the state. Mrs. Lydia A. Irons, associate National superintendent of mercy, has done most excellent work in our state, lecturing on her department, circulating thousands of pages of literature, mercy calendars, wall cards, pledges, etc. Her work was warmly commended in the president's address. I wish there was room for this address in full, as we will not be able to publish minutes this year. It was full of pith and point, and closed with this appeal: "Let us give a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether the coming year, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Washington may receive an impetus that will lift it furlongs above its present status. We recommend a uniting of forces so far as practical, and in furtherance of this would suggest county conventions, neighborhood conferences, picnics and mass-meetings, inviting I. O. G. T's, woman's clubs, and all reform organizations to participate in discussions of the leading questions of the day. Also in pursuance of the plan of consolidation would urge the continuance of a W. C. T. U. coast conference, held biennially, in which California, Oregon, East and West Washington, Idaho, Nevada and Montana unite; dates, place of meeting, etc., to be fixed by an executive committee consisting of the general officers of each state, state and National organizers, National superintendents and state secretaries of Y's and L. T. L's of their several states." This suggestion was emphasized by the general officers in form of a resolution.

A handsome silk quilt of unique design, having sixteen octagon blocks of sixty-two pieces each, with a broad, white ribbon across the center of each, bearing the name of the donor, and tied at either end with a tiny knot of white ribbon, was sent by sixteen ladies of Dayton. It was designed by Mrs. O. Dantzsches. One block was pieced by "Grandma" Range, and bore the age, eighty-one years. The quilt was to be sold for state work, but as it was desired to keep it among white-ribboners, Mrs. Cox received it, and will credit it on her expenses. With oft-voiced prayer for a grander year than ever before, the thirteenth annual convention of East Washington adjourned to meet next September at Garfield, whose union sent an earnest invitation.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, president; Mrs. M. F. Edgington, corresponding secretary, both of Ellensburg; Mrs. Jennie L. Green, recording secretary, Medical Lake; Mrs. Lucy R. Berry, treasurer, Walla Walla. Active work is done in twenty-seven departments. As we will have no minutes published, I will send a list of our state superintendents that our National superintendents can communicate with them early in the year, instructing, advising, etc., that we may come with full hands at the close of another year.

WYOMING.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

of the Wyoming W. C. T. U. convened in Laramie City, September 7, in the Presbyterian church. Mrs. M. C. Brown, the state president, presided. Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, of California, National organizer, conducted the devotional exercises. Although there were but few delegates present, it was not due to a lack of interest or enthusiasm on the part of our women, but owing to the great expense to be incurred in traveling to and fro.

Many words of greeting and expressions of deep interest in our work came from our dear women, and each delegate present felt herself to be the proxy of a dozen others equally true to our cause.

The sessions were conducted in as able and business like manner as you would find in any convention. Mrs. Skelton was valuable help and was fully appreciated by all present. She spoke to a well filled house Sunday morning in the Presbyterian church and was well liked.

Rev. Horace Doughty of the Baptist church delivered a fine sermon at his church in the morning. He is a wide awake, energetic temperance man in the pulpit and out, indorses the W. C. T. U. and advocates their cause. His wife, Mrs. Clara N. Doughty, was elected state president, and we feel she is surely the right woman in the right place. Mrs. Doughty is recently from Kansas, and is conversant with the work, is a wide-awake little woman, full of force and energy, and enters into the work with a prayerful desire to advance the cause in our state. We are very hopeful. We do not lose our dear Mrs. Brown, as she is still with us heart and soul for the cause.

Mrs. F. E. Warren, of Cheyenne, was elected delegate to the National Convention.

A mass-meeting of children was held in the Baptist church at three o'clock Sunday. Our future citizens were there in goodly numbers and all seemed eager to fight King Alcohol and determined that the "saloons must go."

One little bright faced girl was eager to tell all the others that "that picture on the easel is Frances Willard, the very greatest woman in the world."

Mrs. Skelton talked earnestly to the children, telling them of the fearful effects of alcohol and tobacco. She was followed by Mrs. Brown, who addressed them in her sweet, winning way. Mrs. Brown was made superintendent of Y. W. C. T. U. and will enter with zeal upon her work.

A union meeting was held in the evening in the Baptist church, which was packed to the doors by an attentive and interested congregation.

Rev. Taylor, of the M. E. church, was first on the program, and made a rousing speech for temperance and the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Skelton then spoke for over one hour in her earnest, inimitable manner. The singing by the choir was of high order, two beautiful solos adding much to the impressiveness and pleasure of the exercises.

A business session closed the convention Monday morning by ordering our minutes to be printed, our president to receive a small salary, our superintendents to have money for literature. Several financial superintendents were appointed to solicit money to carry on the work. Money is all we need, we have the energy, the will and our hearts stirred in the work. Our cause is advancing in Wyoming notwithstanding contrary reports. We may do our work a little differently from some others, but we are doing it.

Our corresponding secretary and state reporter was unable to be present at our convention.

News in a Nutshell.

MRS. C. N. DOUGHTY, Laramie, is the newly elected president of Wyoming.

THE new corresponding secretary of Texas is Mrs. Harriet N. Canfield, of Dallas.

SOUTH DAKOTA begins a new year with three newly elected officers: President, Mrs. Lulu A. Ramsey, Woonsocket; corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. L. Kalder, Woonsocket; recording secretary, Miss Kara Smart, Sioux Falls. Mrs. Ramsey is the bright Y secretary of many years, a woman of influence in the state. Her husband, Hon. Samuel Ramsey, is a true friend of the W. C. T. U., a leader in Democratic politics and one of the World's Fair commissioners. The new state president will have his enthusiastic support in her work. Miss Smart is daughter of the former recording secretary and is especially fitted to receive her mother's mantle. Mrs. Anna Simmons was reëlected vice-president, and Mrs. Eugene Steere, treasurer.

A WARNING has been sent out by the Akron, O., W. C. T. U. to all other unions, against two young men aided by a so-called W. C. T. U. woman who came to them and arranged to get out souvenirs for 1895–96. Instead of filling their agreement, for which the union had a written contract with them, they pocketed all the proceeds received from advertisers, etc., and left the city. This is not the first time that the W. C. T. U. has been utilized to fill the pockets of sharpers. Unions are urged to watch carefully into whose hands they trust their sacred name and influence.

THE thirteenth annual convention of the sixteenth district held at Robinson, Ill., September 13–16, was a great success. One hundred and thirty delegates and visitors were present, five having come from Terre Haute, Ind., to attend the diamond medal contest. Mrs. L. S. Rounds and Miss Mary Mahon were present, the former giving brilliant addresses, and the latter ably assisting in convention, conducting overflow meetings, etc. Saturday night a diamond medal contest was held, the first one, we believe, ever given by a district. Mr. Clarence Green, of Lawrenceville, won the medal, and Mrs. Rounds presented it. Wayne county was presented with a beautiful banner for having held the largest number of contests during the year. The new nineteenth district was organized, Miss Marie C. Brehm, president. Monday night was "honoraries' night," and they were given the front seats. Col. George G. Bain, Kentucky's "silver-tongued orator," delivered a fine lecture on "Our Nation's Sin." The press gave extended reports of the convention, and published Miss Brehm's annual address in full. Reports show splendid work done in the different departments during the year.

For. Secy's Notes.

Once more the death angel has come very close to the heart of the National W. C. T. U. The gifted and steadfast managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, Miss Sudduth, has been called to pass through that sore trial which lies somewhere in the path of most of us, and yet in her case, as in mine, has been accentuated through separation from the loved one in that last supreme hour. May God give her of His own comfort! Our hearts are with her throughout all these weary days, and we are sure that she will be held in most loving, prayerful sympathy by all white-ribboners everywhere.

The first meeting of the executive committee will be held at 9:30 Thursday, October 17. The general officers will probably be in session during the afternoon and evening of Wednesday. The superintendents' meeting will also be held all day Thursday; the places of both to be hereafter announced. The Baltimore union is planning for a prayer and consecration service, in charge of Miss Greenwood, to be held on the evening of the 17th. I regret that I cannot announce the place, but the local committee has not yet sent these points. As has been stated in a past issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, there will also be a joint conference of the departments of purity and physiculture on Thursday, October 17. The morning will be given up largely to the work of the Florence Crittenton missions; the afternoon to physiculture, and the evening to the purity department, in charge of Dr. Mary Wood Allen.

Saturday afternoon, by vote of last year's Convention, is to be left open for committee meetings and business of like nature. The executive and board of superintendents will meet; also the various committees, but, in addition to this there will be a three o'clock meeting which will be of intense

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:
TWENTY-FIVE LETTERS ON
ENGLISH AUTHORS,

By MARY FISHER. 12mo, cloth. 406 pages. Price $1.50.

This work treats of those eminent writers who for more than five hundred years have most influenced the thought of the world. The author makes the reader acquainted not only with the character of their works, but, what is of greater interest, with them as men—what they felt and believed, their way of looking at life, and their experiences.

The work is a departure from its class in its omission of the hackneyed judgments which pass from book to book; its fresh, telling matter, from original sources; and its special notice of the effects of weak and vicious literature upon young minds—its mission being to inculcate a taste for the "best that has been thought and said in the world."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

This is a book marked for its simplicity of style and its directness in clear statements of the literary characteristics of eminent English authors, from Chaucer in 1400 to Mrs. Humphry Ward in 1891. Such a broad field can give only epitome sketches, but her characters are wonderfully clear in their delineation. She does this not so much in words of her own, but allows each to speak, and thus clothes each in living character; what each thought and believed; how they lived and acted and labored. The reader will seldom find more of positive value in such small space, told more vigorously and pleasingly, than in the neat, compact volume. Teachers and literary clubs will find the book boundlessly suggestive—inviting to wider fields—while the intelligent, thoughtful reader will find richness upon every page. It is not often a book of the kind is more deserving of full commendation.

RAILROAD ITEMS.

In response to inquiries we give the following information in regard to routes from Chicago:

The two shortest and most direct routes are via Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania lines. The Chesapeake & Ohio takes several hours longer, but passes, as do these other roads, through a very picturesque section of country.

Trains on Baltimore & Ohio are as follows:

Leave Chicago 10:15 A. M.
Arrive Baltimore 1:05 P. M.

Leave Chicago 3:00 P. M.
Arrive Baltimore 6:05 P. M.

Pennsylvania lines:

Leave Chicago 10:30 A. M.
Arrive Baltimore 12:20 P. M.

Leave Chicago 3 P. M.
Arrive Baltimore 6:15 P. M.

Leave Chicago 5:30 P. M.
Arrive Baltimore 4:20 P. M.

We have not the time-table of the Chesapeake & Ohio, but will give it as soon as definite information is received.

The fare over all roads is alike—$23.35 for the round trip. These rates are open to all persons securing tickets upon the certificate plan.

Reduced Rates Account Meeting NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

BALTIMORE, MD., October 18 to 23.

For the convention above named, a rate of one fare and a third, on the certificate plan, for the round trip, has been authorized.

Tickets will be sold over the PENNSYLVANIA LINES, good going as early as three days before the convention convenes; good to return any time up to three days after it adjourns.

The reputation of the PENNSYLVANIA LINES is so well known that it is superfluous to say anything in its favor further than that it is the shortest route from Chicago to Baltimore, and furnishes unequaled advantages for a comfortable and enjoyable journey.

They have four trains daily from Chicago to Baltimore, leaving the Union Passenger Station, corner Canal and Adams streets, as follows:

10:30 A. M., 3:00 P. M., 5:30 P. M., and 11:30 P. M.

Arrive at Baltimore: 12:20 P. M., noon, 6:15 P. M., 4:20 P. M. and 6:20 A. M., respectively.

Pullman sleeping and dining cars on all trains.

A large number of delegates have already signified their intention to go over the PENNSYLVANIA LINES, and have reserved sleeping-car accommodations.

It is probable that a special sleeping-car will be set apart for the exclusive use of delegates, to run through to Baltimore on one of the above trains, to be named hereafter.

Sleeping-car accommodations will be reserved on application to Ticket Agents of PENNSYLVANIA LINES, 248 Clark Street, or Union Passenger Station, corner Canal and Adams Streets, Chicago.

Any further information desired will be cheerfully furnished by

H. R. DERING, A. G. P. A.,

N. B.—Will the presidents or secretaries of other states send the dates of their annual conventions for publication in this calendar?

interest to all who can find it possible to attend, and that will be an evangelistic service, in charge of the National superintendent, where the National evangelists will report. The program is entirely in the hands of Miss Greenwood, and that in itself will be enough to insure the success of the meeting.

On Monday evening the Baltimore sisters are planning a demonstration of like nature with the great one held in Albert Hall during the World's Convention. Tuesday evening will be Benefit Night, the program to be arranged by the state presidents who shall belong to the honor list. Already Louisiana, New York, Iowa and Pennsylvania are sure of their place in that roll. May there be many more!

The closing exercises on Monday evening will be perhaps the crowning feature of the feast. Some of the songs which have been already sent in are so exceedingly good that we feel our spirits rise even now as we anticipate how the rafters will ring with the pæans of victory. Sunday afternoon, following the annual sermon, there will be a purity mass-meeting, in charge of Dr. Mary Wood Allen.

Once again I would ask the sisters who are arranging conferences which they would like to have noticed in the program to send me the time and place as soon as possible. Both the treasurer and corresponding secretary hope to hold conferences with state secretaries and treasurers at least once during the Convention, probably some time Saturday afternoon, but this will be announced later.

Reports, both from the corresponding secretaries and superintendents, are very slow in coming in. Can you not hasten this matter, sisters, as but three weeks intervene between now and October 18?

Treasurer's Corner.

Dues coming in rapidly. Pennsylvania is, up to date, the banner state. New York comes next. Louisiana, Iowa and Maine show the five hundred gain that will give them part in the benefit night. As this Corner is written the 25th there are six days more for receipts, and several other states may be added to the honor list. North Dakota, North and South Carolina, District of Columbia, Indiana, Indian Territory, Minnesota, New Mexico, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia show gains from fifty to four hundred members. Other states will, before October 2, I am sure, come into line with additional dues that will place them in the list of states that have gained in membership.

Birthday gifts from my old co-worker in Dakota, Mrs. O. J. Ward, Kate A. Schenck-Habecker, Mrs. Cartland, N. C., and one accompanied with the following note have been received. The latter has a pathetic interest for us all:

DEAR COMRADE:—If my dear father had been spared to us till to-day he would have been seventy-six years old. I do not know how they count time in the land where he has gone, but I do know that it comforts me to remember the day in a thankoffering to the work which was almost as dear to his heart as to mine. I thank God that he lives to-day and that he will live forever.

Your comrade,
KATHARINE L. STEVENSON.

Mrs. Charlotte Gray, of Albany, N. Y., came in this morning with her annual donation to the National. She is engaged in Chicago University as a teacher in Old Testament Greek and Hebrew, and loyally wears the white ribbon at all times.

Just a word to treasurers. We have to pay exchange on all Southern checks, and if the far Southern states would send money orders or by registered letter it would be better. One day last week we paid one dollar on a large check from one of the Middle states, because it was a personal check. A treasurer can always get a draft without expense where she does her banking, and for large amounts that is better.

All appropriations have been paid to superintendents, but receipts have not been received from all. Will each please send receipt if they have not done so, as I wish to file all vouchers ready for the auditor.

Superintendents who wish financial reports appended to National treasurer's report will please forward at once.

Plenty, Yet Starving.

The thin, emaciated persons we see every day are actually starving for nourishment. You may eat until you are stuffed, but unless your food is assimilated it does you no good. The kind of food that makes tissue and enriches the blood is found in Cod-liver Oil, and the easiest, most palatable form of Cod-liver Oil is

Scott's Emulsion

But Scott's Emulsion is more than this. It contains Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, a nerve tonic and constructive agent. The nutrients in Scott's Emulsion, therefore, are just what is needed to build up the system and overcome wasting tendencies. Children gain flesh and strength on Scott's Emulsion when no other form of food nourishes them. They almost all like it.

Kernels.

O'Flaherty, having heard it said that the French had invented horseless carriages, replied, scornfully, that the Irish had been trundling dirt in them for years.

A shoemaker hung out a sign as follows: "Don't go elsewhere to be cheated. Walk in here." He wondered what made the people on that side of the street so good-natured all the forenoon.

Said a visitor to Mrs. Mifflin: "Emma has your features, but I think she's got her father's hair." "Oh, now I see!" said the dear little Emma; "it's because I've papa's hair that he has to wear a wig."

A boy who was asked in an examination, "What is optics?" replied, "The science of illusions"; and another, more witty, no doubt, than he meant to be, answered the question, "What is a cynic?" thus: "A philosopher who lives a dog's life."

A tiny girl spoke very scornfully of babies. "Don't speak that way!" said her mother, "it isn't very long since you were a baby yourself." "I know it," she said, looking what she felt, "and I'm ashamed enough of it!"

They were going to arrest him for bicycling on the sidewalk, but he asserted that he was only learning. Then they "ran him in" for giving an acrobatic exhibition without a license.

"What is your idea of a dude?" he asked of a bright Washington girl. "A dude," she answered, after reflection, "is a young man who isn't good for anything except to hang a chrysanthemum on."

"That parrot of mine's a wonderful bird," said Smithers. "He cries, 'Stop, thief!' so naturally that every time I hear it I always stop. What are you all laughing at, anyway?"

Little Johnny ran into the house the other day, while the mercury was hugging "ninety-five degrees," with the perspiration streaming from every pore, and shouted, "Mamma, mamma, fix me! I'm leaking all over!"

A public school teacher in a New Jersey town was once asked where she intended to spend an approaching vacation.

She replied that it was such an effort to collect her things and pack her trunk that she was doubtful whether she should leave town. When surprise was expressed at this, she replied:

"Well, the truth is, I have strength enough to do either, but not both of two things: I can get ready and not go, or I can go and not get ready!"

"See the moon," said a lady to her nephew, a bright little boy of five, as they sat looking out the window the other day. "The moon!" said the little man. "You can't see the moon in the daytime." "Yes, you can," continued his aunt; "there it is over the trees." The little fellow had to admit that he saw it, but added: "'Taint lighted, anyway."

Frances and her father had a few squares to go and the latter said: "Frances, shall we walk or take the street car?"

"Well, papa," replied the little girl, "I'll walk if you'll carry me."

"The curious thing about my business," said the mosquito alighting softly upon the nose of the sleeping victim, "is that it's more fun to go to work than it is to stay to hum."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Home Hints.

No real lover of books will ever be guilty of turning down the corner of a leaf to mark his place. A pretty marker can be made in the following manner. Cut off the corners of a square envelope of nice Irish linen, or other fancy paper. On these paint any dainty little design in water color. One envelope will make four book marks. Slip one over the corner of the page and you have your place secured. A set of these makes a welcome gift to one who reads a great deal.

To freshen piece velvet or velvet ribbon which is crushed, brush it thoroughly to remove all dust, cover a hot flat iron with a wet cloth and pass the velvet on the wrong side over the iron so that the steam will penetrate it. The steam raises the pile, and with the heat takes out all wrinkles, making it look almost as fresh as when new. Velvet should be lightly rolled instead of folded to preserve the depth of the pile.

Corn oysters:—Grate one dozen ears of corn, two eggs well beaten, one pint rich milk, one-half pint sifted flour, one teaspoonful baking powder, one teaspoon melted butter, one teaspoon salt. Stir all together. Fry on well greased griddle, not too hot. If sticky, add a little more flour.

Coffee jelly.—One-half box gelatine, one cup cold water, one cup granulated sugar, three cups very strong coffee. Soak the gelatine in the water for half an hour, add sugar and coffee, strain and pour into mould till hard. Serve with sweetened whipped cream or a sauce made of one pint of whipped cream, the whites of two eggs beaten stiff and sweetened.

Garments starched in flour starch should be turned wrong side out to dry. Iron all embroideries or figured goods on the wrong side.

When preparing food for a sick person do not ask him if he is hungry or what he would like to eat. The surest way of tempting the appetite is to bring to the sick room some unexpected, daintily prepared dish, prettily served, and generally it will be eaten with a relish which would have seemed utterly impossible to the invalid had he been consulted beforehand. A small tray covered with the whitest of linen, the prettiest of china and the brightest of silver. A spoon for each separate dish will appeal to the eye and imagination of the sick one and he will be prepared to enjoy the food so attractively served. Further stimulate his appetite by dishing only a small supply of food and he will be tempted to ask for more. Be careful that hot food is served hot, and cold food served cold, and do not let any food stand in the sick room.

A foreign medical journal is authority for the statement that a tablespoonful of glycerine taken in hot milk or cream will at once relieve the most violent attack of coughing.

A fine handkerchief will, after the first small break, very soon be in rags. It is a case where a stitch in time saves the article. With a fine cambric needle and number 120 cotton it may be so neatly mended that no one but the darner will ever know it, and to her, if she is a lover of dainty things, it is a great satisfaction.

Chicken Salad.—The white meat of a cold boiled or roasted chicken, three-quarters the same bulk of celery, two hard boiled eggs, one raw egg well beaten, one teaspoonful each of salt, pepper and prepared mustard, three of salad oil, two of white sugar, one-half teacupful of vinegar. Mince the meat well, removing every scrap of fat, gristle and skin; cut the celery into bits about half an inch or less long, mix with the meat and set aside in a cool place while preparing the dressing.

Dressing.—Rub the yolks of the eggs to a fine powder, add the salt, pepper and sugar, then the oil a few drops at a time, grinding hard, next add the mustard. Whip the raw eggs to a light froth and beat into the dressing, then pour in the vinegar a spoonful at a time, whipping the dressing constantly. Toss the chicken and celery up lightly, sprinkling in a little dry salt, pour the dressing over it mixing with a silver fork till the bottom of the mass is as well saturated as the top. We can vouch for the superior quality of this salad.

Reduced Rates Authorized Convention National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and National Purity Congress, to be Held at Baltimore, Md., October 14 to 23, 1895.

A rate of a fare and a third for the round trip, on the certificate plan, has been authorized, tickets to be sold over the PENNSYLVANIA LINES, good going as early as three days before the Convention convenes, to return three days after it adjourns.

Magnificent scenery may be enjoyed by passengers over the Pennsylvania Lines. From rich agricultural districts in Indiana and Ohio, the scenes shift to interesting industrial centers in Western Pennsylvania's iron and coke region. Then follows the Conemaugh Valley and historic Johnstown. The Allegheny Mountains are crossed at the highest point above sea-level, where the atmosphere is constantly cool and invigorating, making traveling in midsummer particularly comfortable and enjoyable. After passing Cresson, the popular mountain retreat of the East, trains glide around famous Horse Shoe Curve, where the scenery forms a succession of pleasing surprises. The Blue Juniata for miles is in the foreground of a picturesque mountain, valley and river view. The Susquehanna River is crossed at Harrisburg, and recrossed amid pretty pastoral scenes. The entire route is one continuous panorama of ever-changing, delightful views.

PENNSYLVANIA LINES have four trains daily from Chicago to Baltimore, leaving Chicago Union Passenger Station as follows: 10:30 A. M., 3:00 P. M., 5:30 P. M., 11:30 P. M., arriving at Baltimore 12:20 Noon, 4:20 P. M., 6:15 P. M. and 6:20 A. M., respectively. Pullman sleeping and dining cars on all trains. ## RAILROAD RATES

TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION,

Baltimore, Md., October 18-23, 1895.

The committee on transportation had hoped, yea, had dared to believe, that this year they might secure the much to be desired concession of one fare for the round trip, not upon the ground of numbers, but of the increasing importance and influence of these yearly conventions. Correspondence, personal interviews have availed naught; the maximum of attendance is the only point of consideration; the fiat of the secretary of the Trunk Line Association, in whose jurisdiction the Convention is to be held, has gone forth, and the lowest possible rate is one and one-third fare upon the certificate plan.

Railroad Associations.

The railroad associations which have already granted the one and one-third rate, are the Trunk Line, Central Traffic and Southern Passenger Association. The Western Lines Passenger Associations and New England Passenger Committees have the matter under consideration, and it is believed will grant the concession, so that a uniform rate upon the certificate plan will doubtless be secured in all territory covered by the various associations.

The Certificate Plan.

The certificate plan makes necessary the obtaining a certificate from the agent of whom the ticket to Baltimore is purchased, which certificate must be duly signed and stamped by him, indorsed at the meeting in Baltimore by Caroline F. Grow, and viséd by special agent of the association at that point.

Owing to the meeting of the National Purity Association to be held the same week in Baltimore, the tickets will cover the dates from October 14–23, and may be purchased THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) prior to October 14. Certificates will not be honored unless presented within THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) after the adjournment of the meeting.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. In such a case the ticket agent can inform a delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained, a local ticket should be purchased to such station, and through ticket and certificate there obtained.

Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

Tickets are available for continuous fare only, and no refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

It would be well for delegates to give ticket agents such timely notice of their intentions that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required.

Those wishing to avail themselves of the concessions should be present at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before the departure of train. As members arrive their certificates should be deposited with me, so as to be ready for special agent upon his arrival.

WHAT I TOLD DORCAS: A Story For Mission Workers. By Mary E. Ireland.

This story, attractively written and unique in its plan, is that of the growth of a missionary society organized among a few women, who, though earnest, knew but little of the work before them. But devotion soon conquered ignorance, and the work spread beyond their fondest hopes. Aside from the missionary work achieved, the author tells in a very ingenuous manner of the good that came to the individual hearts and lives of the workers and those closely associated with them. The book has many fat plums of suggestion in it, and will give encouragement for their labor to all who read.

CATHARINE OF SIENA: A Biography. By Josephine E. Butler.

Students of history and students of those leaders whose names stand in the lists of heroes, martyrs and saints, are familiar with the name of Catharine, that stern, simple religieuse, who in the fourteenth century, by her prayers and tears and wrestlings with God, learned of Him and taught multitudes in high places and low, that above all power, ecclesiastical or political, should first be sought power from and power with God.

Mrs. Butler has added a rich and indispensable quota to the biographical literature of the day in this rare volume. Hasty and material writers apologize for, explain away, or hasten by those manifestations of spiritual power that gave to Catharine of Siena the title of saint, and there was needed just the reverent and appreciative treatment of this beautiful life by an English writer, for which Mrs. Butler was so eminently fitted. The author has blended history and biography with such clearness that the reader easily grasps the political situations of that day, and Catharine's God-appointed relation to each. Though her earthly footsteps ceased so many centuries ago, the example of this godly woman, whose sole educator and inspirant was God, remains a shining beacon to heights of faith and prayer and victory.

A TEMPERANCE TALE.

It is frequency of such disastrous mistakes that led Mrs. Sarah Perkins, of this city, to write the story of "Helen; Or Will She Save Him?" which has been published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London. In her preface Mrs. Perkins says: "In studying the lives of those around me, and in listening to tales of broken hopes and broken hearts, particularly since I have thought more about 'the evil that is destroying more lives than war, pestilence and famine,' I have wished that young women would exercise more care about linking their destinies with those who use the intoxicating cup, even moderately. So many have listened to the sweet words, 'my badness was all before I knew you; had your pure influence been about me I had never fallen. But it is not yet too late. Be my guardian angel and all will be well.' Into such a snare many and many a noble girl has fallen, but the saving never came. This thought has led me to raise the warning voice. That it may be heard, and save some young spirit from a sorrowful future is the earnest wish and prayer of the author."

Mrs. Perkins has succeeded in making a very good story, and its purpose cannot be too highly commended. The lesson it teaches is one that cannot too strongly be urged upon girls and young women.—Plain Dealer, Cleveland, O.

Price, paper covers, 20 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

"DO EVERYTHING"

has been brought out by our beloved Chieftain at her own expense, and is placed upon the American market by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association that it may aid white-ribboners in the "all-round movement" it advocates.

"Everything is not in the temperance reform, but the temperance reform should be in everything."

"'Organized mother love' is the best definition of the white-ribbon movement, and it can have no better motto than, 'Make a chain, for the land is full of bloody crimes and the city of violence.'"

"If we can remember this simple rule, it will do much to unravel the mystery of the much controverted 'do everything policy,' viz.: That every question of practical philanthropy or reform has its temperance aspect, and with that we are to deal."

These extracts from the preface will suggest the helpfulness of the new manual. It should be purchased by unions in quantities at the nominal price of 25c.

Signal Notes.

The annual meeting of the Scottish Permission Bill and Temperance Association took place recently in City Hall, Glasgow, John Wilson, Esq., M. P., presiding.

Miss Anna Gordon, assistant secretary of the W. W. C. T. U., has been made American secretary of the Mowbray House Cycling Association, the leading women's club for cycling purposes in London.

The British and Continental Federation for the abolition of state regulated vice, held its annual conference at Colmar, Alsace, September 18–20. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell were expected to be present.

A reflection on the standing army system of Great Britain is made by the chairman of the Lichfield Board of Poor Guardians' captain, the Hon. A. C. Littleton, who calls attention to the fact that the short term service is bringing out an army of paupers, "such as has not existed since the days of Queen Elizabeth."

Chief Khama and two of his fellow chieftains are again in England to plead that Bechuanaland may be kept free from the drink evil, which greedy and unscrupulous white men are attempting to force upon them. The prayers and sympathy of all Christians are with these brave Africans in their determined resistance to the liquor power.

"I neither smoke nor drink. When in Bavaria I was occasionally tempted to take a good glass of German beer but it knocked me up utterly and I soon had to give it up. I always walk on pure water or milk." This was the response of the famous Russian pedestrian, M. De Bernoff, when asked as to whether he used alcohol in his long walks.

The notorious Jane Cakebread, who is just serving her two hundred and seventy-eighth conviction for drunkenness, is to go to the B. W. T. A. Inebriate Home in Surrey, through the efforts of Lady Henry Somerset, who personally visited the unfortunate woman. By this action the B. W. T. A. is doing a work which the government should long since have done.

Cambridge, Mass., has been out from under saloon influence for eight years and consequently has a prosperous record. The valuation of property has increased by fifteen million dollars and the same rate of taxation yields one hundred and thirty thousand dollars greater income. In face of such facts can license be considered necessary to revenue?

Three hundred and eight boys and girls from Dr. Barnardo's Homes in England have just arrived in Canada. This is the third party sent out this year and brings up the total number of emigrants from these worthy institutions to 7,959. The industrial farm of ten thousand acres in Manitoba belonging to the homes will receive the elder lads, while the rest go to selected places in Ontario.

The Lichfield Poor Law Guardians have decided to ask for a government inquiry to consider the question of vagrancy and particularly as it is affected by the short term system in the British army. Commenting on this The Christian pertinently adds: "Besides vagrancy there is the peculiar immoral influence which environs every recruit, and to which so many succumb. The deadly teaching that vice is a necessity and that the soldier must have safety provided for him when he sins, is bearing its deadly fruit in our young manhood."

As a further addition to the chapter on the Gothenburg system comes this testimony from an acknowledged authority on the subject, Dr. P. P. Waldenstrom, M. P., in a letter to the Mission Friend of Chicago: "I may mention that our statistical bureau has lately surprised us by showing that the consumption of strong spirituous liquors has slowly but steadily increased since 1890. People have not believed this to be so. If the always colossal consumption of beer is added—undoubtedly the consumption of wine is also on the increase—the prospects are not very bright. How this can be reconciled with the oft-repeated assertion that drunkenness is decreasing in Sweden is a question I do not consider myself able to answer." There Sweden stands to-day, after a thirty years' trial of the Gothenburg system, with an army of temperance workers and Christians trying to counteract its effects and with local option in operation. What say the advocates of the famous system?

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Cuba issued a declaration of independence from Spain, October 3.

The congress of the Roman Catholic Church at Washington, D. C., October 3, declared in favor of saloon closing on Sunday.

The decision of Judge Roger Pryor in a New York court that liquor licenses are not transferable, breaks up a profitable trade among brewers.

Hjalmar H. Boyesen, the noted Norwegian author and professor of Germanic languages and literature at Columbia College, born in 1848, passed away October 4.

Wisconsin equal suffragists held an interesting annual meeting at Evansville last week. Mrs. Catt in her address favored disfranchising disreputable men and women.

The formation of a large body of Armenians last week who marched to the palace of the Porte in Constantinople for the purpose of presenting a petition to the Sultan, brought on a conflict between them and the Turkish police, causing the loss of many lives and the imprisonment of one thousand two hundred Armenians.

Disgraceful scenes were witnessed at many of the Republican primaries in Chicago last week when rioting took the place of voting, ballot boxes were smashed and scores of persons were seriously injured. The Civic Federation had twenty private detectives at work collecting evidence and test cases will soon be entered.

Wisconsin, Minnesota and Northwestern Iowa conferences have voted overwhelmingly to admit women to the General Conference. At the Iowa conference Chaplain Lozier's resolution of protest against Sunday railroad trains and of endorsement for railroads and all other business corporations who refuse to give employment to persons addicted to drink, was unanimously approved.

WHITE-RIBBONERS who attend the Baltimore Convention will be especially interested in the call of our National superintendent of evangelistic work on page 12.

ONE of the most encouraging features of W. C. T. U. work is the readiness of young women to enlist in our peaceful war and the rapidity with which they develop into leaders. North Dakota furnishes a good example. Its new W. C. T. U. treasurer, elected by the recent state convention, is a Y; it also has a Y evangelist, a Y superintendent of physical culture, a Y superintendent of narcotics and a Y as editor of the official organ of the state W. C. T. U. Truly, when the time comes for us older workers to leave earth's battle-field, we may well "depart in peace," knowing that the willing hands and consecrated hearts of our daughters are pledged to the same holy cause.

THE chief characteristic of American institutions, as one studies them from the European side of the water, is the general feeling of social equality and good will among the people. Perhaps we have had no more striking illustration of this than the example of the late Mrs. Harrison, wife of the President. She was accustomed to treat self-supporting women with special consideration. A young lady employed as a stenographer and typewriter by the President frequently assisted at her receptions, and to a visitor who thanked "the first lady of the land" for thus generously recognizing a business woman, Mrs. Harrison replied that the young lady in question was worthy of all the honor she could bestow upon her, and there was no reason why a business woman was not the equal of any other.

AS USUAL the chief problem in the Iowa campaign is what to do to prevent a heavy "slump" of Republican Prohibitionists from the "grand old party." The Methodist conferences of that state, German as well as English-speaking, are not only resoluting against persons and parties who refuse to put themselves squarely on record against the legalized saloon and the re-opening of breweries and distilleries, but are sending "greetings," accompanied by some very plain questions on the dominant issue, to old party candidates. Their vigorous action will, it is feared, have no little influence in depleting the Republican ranks and increasing the straight Prohibition vote. From Republican Prohibitionists who are too good Prohibitionists to vote the Republican ticket, if that party refuses to outlaw the drink business, and too good Republicans to vote with the Prohibition party, the plan suggested by Mr. Woolley in his Fourth of July speech before the National Conference of Reforms, and published in THE UNION SIGNAL of that date, should receive serious consideration.

IN these days when the W. C. T. U. is criticised even in the house of its friends for its do-everything methods, it is encouraging to find a journal like the Congregationalist, recognizing the wisdom of this policy. "The transformation of society," it says, "is a work far greater than the stopping of one kind of wickedness, even so great a one as drunkenness, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union could not have continued and increased for twenty-one years without embracing in its efforts all reforms that affect human character. Miss Frances E. Willard, in her admirable little book, 'Do Everything,' has fully justified the broader policy, and shown that in order to stop the curse of drink, society must in all things be made new." The Congregationalist thinks, however, that to infer that the prohibition of strong drink would abolish crime is misleading, and points to Turkey as having had a prohibition law, well enforced, for six hundred years, yet in that country "crime runs riot in a carnival of diabolical cruelty." Now, while we do not claim that prohibition will totally abolish crime, we think it is hardly fair to compare prohibition under Moslem rule with prohibition under Christianity.

MAYOR STRONG has received a proposition from a French bull-fighter in which he offers to bring over some men and bulls and give exhibitions for the benefit of New Yorkers. The mayor replying, politely intimates that just now bulls have no part in the amusement program of American cities. "The fight which is at this time more especially engaging public attention," he says, "is not a bull fight but a tiger fight. Any information concerning methods for the effectual extermination of the Tiger will be gladly received here."

SOME of the prohibition opponents of the "Tammany Sunday" have been inclined to regard the Warner Miller plank in the Republican platform as a skillfully worded double-faced resolution for catching votes. That astute politicians of the state of New York do not thus construe it, is proved by its prompt repudiation by the Republicans of New York city, Brooklyn and Buffalo, cities which cast nearly one-half the vote of the entire state. That was a good point, by the way, which ex-Senator Miller made in his speech in the Saratoga convention against local option. "We might as well," he said, "let the people vote on the question of legalizing gambling as on that of open Sunday saloons." This is the right position. A universally acknowledged evil like the liquor traffic should be dealt with by a "paternalism" like that which prompts the state to dispense with the direct vote of the people in making laws prohibiting crime and which makes it right for the nation to legislate for states upon questions involving the common welfare.

THE admission of women to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church seems to be generally regarded a foregone conclusion, and with good reason. Of the conferences which have held their annual meeting (forty-two, as we go to press), thirty-two have voted—and at least three of the number unanimously—in favor of the Baltimore amendment, which provides that lay delegates "may be men or women." The Ohio Conference not only voted "for," but showed its faith by its works in electing Mrs. Jane Bashford, wife of President Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan University, as one of its lay delegates to the supreme body of that church. It is a noteworthy fact that with one exception, the only conferences voting in the negative were those made up of foreign nationalities; nationalities whose women in the home land toil in the fields, not infrequently yoked with oxen and with dogs. It is not likely that English speaking Methodist churches in America will be found standing by the continental idea of woman any more than they are found countenancing the encroachments of the "continental Sunday."

THE Lone Star State comes to the front just now as the biggest state in the Union in more ways than one, and Governor Culberson is the hero of the hour. The lawmakers, too, of Texas have been weighed in the balance and found equal to the most sanguine expectations of the adherents of law and order. The special session of the legislature convened October 1, and by the evening of October 3 the bill making prize fighting a felony, with an emergency clause attached, had become a law, having been rushed through the legislature amid wild applause from floor and gallery and enthusiastic demonstrations of delight from the waiting crowds outside. In fifty-five minutes after the senate committee reported the bill it passed that body by a vote of 27 to 1, and was presented in the house, and in little more than two hours was put upon its final passage there and carried by a vote of 110 to 5. Thus, the brutal exhibitions of pugilistic encounters between man and man with their demoralizing accompaniments, are gradually but surely being driven outside the pale of civilization—one indication among many that we have entered upon an era of "better manners, purer laws." We extend congratulations to the Governor and the legislature of Texas.

OUT IN THE MOONLIGHT.

BY O. E. W.

The moon beamed bright with splendor in the sky,
And all the stars, her daughters, shone around;
The orchard in the darkness stood near by
Where grow the winter apples, hard and round.

A veil of mellow moonlight o'er the scene,
Was hung, and the cool breèzes gently blew
An air that seemed so mild and yet so keen
Withal 'twas heavy-laden with the dew.

Alone I stood, the busy world was still,
My heart went up to God in prayer and praise.
Night unto night, I thought, shows forth thy works,
The heavens declare thy glory and thy praise.

I thought the stars, the wind, the leaf it moves;
All say there is a God of love and power.
Then I will serve and love long as I live,
This God that loves me—from this very hour.

"OUT OF THE FRYING-PAN."

BY MRS. M. P. A. CROZIER.

"I declare for't, Mary Ann, I never see such works in all my born days! Here you an' Joe was a-settin' out on the piazzy last night till ten o'clock, a-talkin' an' a-laffin' an' a-keepin' every body awake, when you yourself oughter a-been abed an' asleep so's to a-got up at four o'clock this mornin' an' had them chickens fed an' cows milked afore sunrise, an' now it's half-past five an' you've jest got your duds on; next thing you'll be engaged!"

"Well, mother, p'raps I may as well tell you now as any time—me and Joe is goin' to git marri'd."

"Git marri'd—sakes alive! Why, Mary Ann Wilkinson, what you thinkin' about? An' only eighteen, an' jest as you've got so's you're some use to me an' can pay for your bringin' up! How'm I goin' to git along, I should like ter know! You must have a big bump o' gratitude."

"How old was you, mother, when you got marri'd?"

"Wall, I was only seventeen, to be sure, an' a foolish critter for doin' it. I did hope you would have more sense!"

"I have had, mother, a whole year more. Girls will be girls, you know," said Mary Ann, taking up the milk pail.

"Yis, an' boys will be boys, I s'pose, but all the same I think it's mean to carry off a girl jest as she's begun to be wuth somethin'. Joe is a good fellow enough, I suppose, but I want you to tell him he's got to wait three years an' in that time maybe your father'll git the farm paid for an' you can go."

"In that time father won't git the farm paid for, mother; don't you see how he's runnin' behind all the time? It's better I git away an' be no more expense to him, Joe an' I can earn our own livin' an' be gittin' somethin' ahead. He's got a cow an' a yoke o' steers to start on, an' his father'll let us have the Smith forty to live on."

"Wall, I think you're the ongratefulest huzzy I ever see!" said Mrs. Wilkinson, raising her voice to a high pitch.

Mary Ann went out and shut the door with rather an emphatic slam as she heard the hateful word "huzzy." "I will git marri'd for all her," she said as she went toward the barnyard. "I won't stay here any longer an' be a drudge, an' be scolded all the time! I don't care if Joe does drink a little. Mother don't know that, an' he won't when I git him. I'll run the resk, anyhow. I can't more'n 'jump out o' the fryin' pan into the fire!' besides—it's possible"—and her face wore as unhappy a frown as ever gathers on the forehead of a fair young girl.

So it came to pass that one day Mary Ann and Joe ran away and got married, and went to live in the Smith house.

Her mother never went near her, and in six months she lay pale and sick with a dead baby in a coffin by her side.

In her delirium she muttered, "O mother, mother, if you'd only a' told me—if you hadn't scolded me so!"

"Mis' Wilkinson, you'd ought to go and see Mary Ann," said a neighbor to her one day; "they're afraid she's goin' to die!"

"Catch me a-goin' to see her," said her mother snappishly; "as she's made her bed let her lie in it—catch me goin' to see her!" and she shut her lips closely and looked hard and cold.

But Mary Ann didn't die; a strong constitution triumphed, and before long she was feeding chickens again and milking cows for Joseph Jones. And she sang at her work, for Joseph was pleasant, and it was easier than doing the same work for a scolding mother.

Time went on. Things were tolerably prosperous at the Smith farm, for Joe was reasonably industrious and Mary Ann contented.

Two or three more children came, and it was noticed that Mary Ann had begun to talk to them in something like the same high, rasping key and aggravating manner which her mother had used toward her. By and by she addressed Joe in the same way. "What's bred in the bone," you know. Then it was noticed that Joseph was drinking—not very much, but still drinking. The farm began to run down. The fences weren't kept up, and the Canada thistles were spreading in the fields. The children were big enough to go to school, but they did not go because they had no shoes good enough to wear. Mary Ann began to look anxious and careworn. The fire had begun to burn worse than the frying-pan.

One day Mrs. Wilkinson was stricken with paralysis. She was helpless in her bed, but she could talk. "Oh, if Mary Ann would only come home!" she said. "It is so long—so long since she went away. I did love her, though I didn't say so—I did love her!"

"An' I did love my mother," said Mary Ann to the neighbor who told her what her mother said, "though I thought she didn't love me. I'll go!"

"Have you come?" said the mother, feebly, and she tried to raise her arms and put them about her daughter's neck, but she couldn't do it, and she looked into Mary Ann's pale face and cried like a baby.

"Mother, my dear mother," said the daughter, and she hid her own tears in the pillow that supported the gray head of the dying woman.

"Where's Joseph?" at length her mother asked.

"He's—he's drunk, mother," replied Mary Ann, with a fresh burst of grief. "Oh, mother, I think you loved me better, after all, than Joe did—and now—"

"Yes, now, Mary Ann, I must die and leave you just as we have learned how we loved each other. God forgive us!"

"Yes, God forgive us!" said Mary Ann.

OUR CAPTAIN.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

It is lunch time on a famous transatlantic "flyer," a ship well nigh six hundred feet long, with engines of twenty thousand horse power and fifteen hundred voyagers.

"Here are your table tickets," said the steward, and a minute later I found myself seated at the Captain's right hand. The distinction surprised me, for it was usually given to some famous politician, noted capitalist or society leader. A teetotaler and temperance reformer is the last one to be thus honored, for the Captain generally takes a glass of wine at dinner, and if he does not, his guests are likely so to do.

But this time our Captain was a strict total abstainer. And why not? He was bred in Maine from the age of five, was a Good Templar from his youth, and told me he "had never known the taste of liquor in his life," and I think he knew just as little of tobacco. He was a noble specimen of manhood, over six feet high and well proportioned, weighing two hundred and eighty pounds, and carrying himself with gracious dignity.

We talked of his career. He had risen from "before the mast" until he had now been for years captain of a first-class "ocean greyhound," and he told me that he owed it all to his clean habits. When he first began to rise, the ship on which he was an officer put into the port of San Francisco and as it was "a great day," all the men were drinking, the Captain leading on and asking him to "celebrate." "I did not know but it would cost me my chance," he told me, "but I could not go back upon my training, and I said, 'Captain, I never touched a drop in my life, and I can't begin now.'" Upon this the Captain clapped him on the shoulder, and said, "I wish to God that the same was true of me."

He took us to his room, this manly fellow, saying, "If you like I will repeat to you some of the temperance pieces I used to speak when I was a boy in the Good Templars' Lodge," and then, with lighted face, he spoke "The Two Ships" (Temperance and Social Drinking), and two other dramatic poems by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, rendering them with remarkable talent, and saying at the close, "I often go over them when I am on the bridge at night." And then I gently intimated that I had never been on the Captain's bridge of a big ship at sea, and he playfully said "he saw the point," and took Anna and me and the friend who was with us into the steering room, explained the machinery, guided us up the steep little stairway to the Captain's bridge, and there we stood under the sparkling sky, and watched the tops of the masts as they traced out constellations, while our nineteenth century leviathan plowed its sturdy way toward the land of the Star Spangled Banner.

A hush fell upon our spirits as we stood there beside the strong man who, in the stress of temptation, had kept faith with his mother's teachings, and we did not wonder at the joy with which he spoke of seeing his wife and children soon in the great city where his home is now, and where a man as brave as he enforces the people's law of Sunday closing.

En route, September 30, 1895.

A RINGING APPEAL.

[From the speech of John Willis Baer, chairman of the recent "Prohibition Jubilee," held in Music Hall, Boston.]

A story is current in the Orient of a wise old sheik who gave to a young Arab prince, from whom he was about to part, a list of crimes, and bade him choose the one which seemed least harmful. The young prince turned in horror from murder, theft and loss of virtue, and told the patriarch that he would choose "intemperance." "You have chosen," said the wise old man, "that which will bring you all."

Saloon-keepers, the point in that illustration is an awful condemnation on your business. If intemperance brings murder, theft and loss of virtue, and it does, and your business brings intemperance, it naturally follows that you are responsible for murder, theft and loss of virtue. Drunkenness is a sin, but not the only one. As for myself, I would as soon stagger to the very gate of heaven drunk and in rags as to go there sober and richly dressed as an accomplice of the saloon.

A drunken man was going down the street in Baltimore flinging his hands right and left, when one of his hands came across the nose of a passer-by. The passer-by instinctively clenched his fist and sent the intruder sprawling to the ground. He got up, rubbing the place where he was hit, and said, "I would like to know if this is not a land of liberty?" "It is," said the other fellow, "but I want you to understand that your liberty ends where my nose begins." This is a truth to be applied to the question of licensing the saloon. You have no more right to vote to establish a nuisance next door my home than I have to vote to permit one to be located in your neighborhood. How would you like to live next door to one? I have a right to remind my friend who stands for "personal liberty," that his personal liberty ends where mine begins, and mine begins where his ends. You cannot measure that distance with a tape and line; it requires the Golden Rule.

Then there is the man that claims that more liquor is sold under prohibition than under license, and talks about kitchen bar-rooms, etc. I don't deny that some liquor is sold, but I declare emphatically that the quantity is much less and the public nuisances fewer. Let me correct a misapprehension. Some people think that the law is a man about six feet in height that walks our streets in a blue uniform with brass buttons, with a helmet on his head and a club in his hand. That is not the law; that is a policeman.

A glance at the past does not discourage me. It only makes me want to see to it that the next twenty-five years shall be years of more progress for better citizenship. I am not sure that the Prohibition party will be in existence twenty-five years hence, but that does not concern me seriously to-day, so long as I am sure, and I am, that there will be a party that will stand squarely in opposition to the rum power in the politics of this nation. I do not believe to-day it will be either of the present large parties, for I have no hope for a divided party representing two extremes of license and prohibition. The two opposing forces neutralize each other, and so I say any party that will not openly oppose the saloon in word and deed cannot have my vote, though I vote alone.

For the owners or promoters of the saloon I have great pity,—God forgive them,—but for their business I desire complete annihilation. An old proverb says, "Fire is a good servant, but a bad master." On some quiet evening, when it shines upon your hearth, I might willingly discuss the best method of regulating it,—whether by grate, stove or furnace; but should your house take fire, and smoke and flame fill chambers and hall, I would run and turn in an alarm, and do everything I could to put the fire out. To put it out! I stand for the prohibitory influences of water upon the liquor traffic everywhere, consequently I will not favor regulating it or licensing it anywhere.

So, strong drink may be a good servant (I am not sure of it), but undoubtedly it is a bad master. Its fire is raging in our commonwealth in more places than one. Our saloons are consuming manhood, destroying womanhood, and blighting youth, and I raise my voice to-night and shout "Fire! Fire!" and ask you to rally at the polls and absolutely stamp out the saloon's conflagration; to vote and stamp, and stamp and vote, until every spark of fire has been put out.

Passing a saloon door near my own home one day, not so very long since, you might have viewed a scene that in itself was an object lesson, and would send you home, father or mother, wrapped in thought. A child's hearse was standing in front of the door, empty. The driver, a non-resident, was taking a "wee drop" inside. Empty was this glass-paneled and white piece of funeral livery. Empty! More than one fond parent has heard the click of a similar glass door, as it has snapped upon a little white casket in front of his own door.

God knows, I know what it means. Two years ago my oldest boy, at the age of five, was carried by good neighbors in a little white casket through my front door, and all that is mortal of that boy now lies in Medford's cemetery. There are two more boys snugly tucked in bed in my home, one four, the other two. God knows I love them as I love my life. Bright, happy faces, I see them now in their innocence, sleeping unmindful of what the battle of life is to be. God keep them from all harm, is my prayer, and give them a long and useful life. But I had rather that neither awake again in this world, and I would sooner place them in one casket and let the glass door click with its sickening snap, and place their little bodies in the cold ground beside their little brother, knowing that we would all meet again in heaven, than to have them grow up and become regular patrons of the saloon, or to know to-night that they would walk the path and lead the life their father did for nearly five years. Yes, I had rather fill that empty child's hearse standing in front of the saloon with my innocent children in their innocency than to have that saloon or any other saloon fill a larger sized hearse with my grown-up boys later.

Saloons are run for revenue only—theirs is a selfish and personal wish. I, too, am selfish in my demand that they be blotted out of existence; I want my boys to live and grow up in a community that will not tolerate a saloon. Come, men, fathers, I appeal to you; vote to protect my boys. Will you? I'll vote to protect yours. Come, mothers, throw your influence, as always, upon the right side and protect my home. I'll protect yours. Come, young men, I appeal to you to-night in my selfishness, vote to protect my home and your father's roof-tree. Young women, I appeal to you; tell that young man who sees in you all that true manhood sees in true womanhood that if he values your respect and affection you expect him to cast his vote to protect you, and that it is as much of a crime before God for him to sell his vote as it would be for you to sell your virtue. Up, everybody! Young men and maidens, old men and women—up, and to arms! Strike palms in this battle for home and humanity! I appeal to all, white and black, foreign-born and American-born, Protestant and Catholic, believer and non-believer. Yes, I appeal to loyal American citizens of Massachusetts, whether you espouse my religion and faith or whether you do not. Catholic, let me remind you of the stand against the saloon that many of your leaders in high authority have taken. Fellow Protestant, let me remind you that this is a time for awhile to forget whether we be Episcopalian, Baptist or Presbyterian; Methodist or Congregationalist; Universalist or Unitarian; but shoulder to shoulder, let us present a united front to the enemy, that shall even now, before the day of battle, be prophetic of success for ourselves and a portent of disaster to the saloon business, not only for next year, but for every succeeding year. I have enlisted for the whole war and shall continue in it without fear or favor, please God.

God curse the saloon business and put it to confusion! God save the saloon-keeper and give him a clean heart and a prosperous life! God save America!

WEARING MOURNING.

BY J. FOWLER WILLING.

Our society has merited its A. M. degree—not Master of Arts but Advisory Mother—by its mother-wise care of all feminine humanity, and its occasional looking after the other side of the house. It speaks its mind on all matters of social and economic well being; why may it not say its say on the custom of "wearing mourning"?

When one is broken on the wheel of bereavement she has neither inclination nor strength to inquire into the reason of things. She does "as she is told," and follows customs that her better judgment would condemn if it were itself. Many a white-ribboner has spoken on this subject by example. The Union Signal has uttered its voice; yet we will venture "one word more."

This custom belongs especially to degenerate Christianity. The simpler children of the race have small opportunity for sentiment and narrow means for its expression. It is Christian people who put on heavy black "weeds" when they are bereaved. As a rule, the less spiritual their life the deeper their "mourning." For instance, the South American states are merely nominally Christian. True family life and love, the first fruits of real piety are rare; because marriage ties are almost as loose and easily broken as in ancient Rome. Most of the people are born out of wedlock. In those states women are obliged to wear mourning for any relative, no matter how distant and little known.

There are many reasons why we should free ourselves from this custom.

1. It is one-sided. Men will not submit to more than a band of crape on the hat. Fancy a man wound up in yards of heavy, black material, because he has lost his best friend, and finds himself crippled and lonely, yet obliged to take up the work of two. Such a custom would be legislated out of existence, the first day of the next session of Congress.

2. It is expensive. Fashion enslaves women more than we care to confess. Try to break a chain, if you would know its strength. Women waste money, time and thought enough in following the fashions, to furnish the "sinews of war," and moral force sufficient to give victory to every good cause on the planet. A hat or garment may be faultless in material, color and fit, yet if it is out of date, it must be put aside, whether or not its owner can afford the money, time and thought to get something to take its place. The strength so wasted is sadly needed in this pitiable world. There is not only a dearth of woman's tenderness and tears, there is a sadder dearth of her money and time, thinking and talk. No woman can lay aside her whole outer wardrobe and "think up" another without robbing the world of due care and speech.

3. It is a ruinous example. Mrs. A. may be able to afford "mourning." She may know no better way of taking her mind off her grief than by discussing with modistes the width of a fold or length of a veil. Mrs. B. is left to face the world alone, and fight the wolf with her two unskilled hands. She can ill afford to lay aside her wardrobe and get another; but she must, or she will lose caste. Mrs. A., who can afford "mourning," can also afford to set aside the dicta of fashion. When Mrs. A. T. Stewart was remonstrated with for some plainness in dress, she replied, "I can afford to dress plainly, if I like." Mrs. A. can not only "afford" to save her own money, time and thought for some good work, she can give Mrs. B. the "countenance" necessary to hold her to the needed economy.

4. It may lead to hypocrisy. Among degenerate Christians a woman is obliged to wear black for before-unheard-of relatives, for whom she cannot, by any stretch of sentiment, be said to mourn. She must put on a somber face, and use tones to match; all of which is damaging to truth and genuineness.

5. It keeps up a grief that ought, in the nature of things, to run its course and lose its domination. If all who really mourn should keep up their grief, everything would come to a standstill, for each has his own graveyard full of sorrows. Our bereavements may be weighted with self-pity. The question we ask oftenest, is, "How can I live, with so much gone?" instead of, "How gloriously is my beloved living now in God's heaven?" May we not be unselfish enough to forget our loss in thankfulness for our friend's promotion? What we may have looked upon as loyalty to the departed who are beyond reach of our care, may be robbing the living who need our help.

6. It lessens the general joy. This is our Father's world, and He wants to have it full of gladness. He made the skies of deep, tender azure. He covered the meadow slopes with sweet, restful green. He makes the trees to clap their hands, the rivulets to sing, the flowers to swing their censers of joy, the bird to

"Let his illumined being o'errun
With the deluge of summer it receives."

Even in this land of the dying, the Spirit has written, "To die is gain." When one passes out of this perplexing probation, enters into the joy of his Lord, and receives His "Well done," they who remain ought to congratulate him on his higher service and nobler associations.

Susannah Wesley held so completely the love of her well trained family, that after her sons had risen to places of responsibility, one of them wrote another: "Let us pray God that she may not die; for if she were to die, I could not live." At the hour of her departure, she said to her children: "When I am gone stand around my bed and sing a hymn of praise." They did as she requested. If they who go from us know what we are doing—and who dares say that they do not—it must please them far more to have us take up our work with courage and zeal, than to see us spend the hours in heart-break and gloom. The right thing is for us to give our sorrows to the Lord, learning from them a deeper self-effacement, while He fills us with joy and peace in believing, and enables us to abound in hope by the power of the Holy Ghost. Then we will not care to indulge in expressions of grief either in manner or dress.

If our society will work these, and similar practical truths, into the lives of women it will indeed be worthy of its degree A. M.—Advisory Mother.

WOMAN IN NATIONAL REFORM.

BY T. J. KENNEDY.

Upon the admitted principle that "it is accepted according to what a man hath and not according to what he hath not," is applicable to all, male or female, no distinction can be drawn between men and women in the sphere of moral activity. Woman is equally endowed with man by her Creator with intelligence, judgment, reason and will; she is under moral law, and is, therefore, morally accountable.

"They twain shall be one flesh," does not merge the personality of the wife into that of the husband. That would blot it out. Nor does it even subordinate her personality to his. The husband and wife are not a unit, but a unity; not a physical organism, with one form, one soul, one will, one conscience, one personality, but a moral organism, in which the members, constituting a unity instead of a unit, preserve each their own separate individuality and personal responsibility.

It is very true that woman's kingdom is the home, but she is not simply a part and parcel of the home furniture, nor yet a mere helpmeet to the man in the low sense of being his obliging and obedient servant—his washerwoman, seamstress, housekeeper, cook, nurse, gardener and milkmaid. That honorable word "helpmeet" loses its meaning when it is degraded to fill a mere servile sphere like that. Indeed, there is no such word as helpmeet. It is two words, the latter an adjective describing the former. God said, "I will make a help, meet (or fit) for him"—"meet" or proper for him; that is, one matching, or mating him, his complement—his equal, thus rounding out the full sphere of humanity in joining hemisphere to hemisphere in that honorable Edenic marriage. "And God called their name Adam"—Man. This wedded pair constituted the true man—the whole man. "It is not good," said the Creator, "that he should be alone." He is but half "Man," in that case. Endowed, therefore, with equal personality, and constituting an essential half of generic man, woman has a right to a place side by side with man, in all the moral activities and responsibilities of life.

The curse of all past ages has been the false and pernicious notion of a twofold moral sphere, one for the man and another for the woman. Like that unfounded, unprincipled notion of a "double standard" of morals to which it gave birth, one for the man and another for the woman, it inflicts upon the woman infinite mischief and misery. For the same faults, the same errors, the same crimes, she is accused, he is excused; she is condemned, he is condoned; she is punished, he is pardoned; she is socially ostracised, he is socially lionized.

False modern customs and theories are at war with the divine plan. They say that a man's moral sphere covers the whole field—the family, the church, the state,—but that woman's moral sphere is limited to the family and the church alone. Such a distinction is a purely selfish and arbitrary dictation of political prejudice. The exclusion of woman from all moral interest and service in the state can be justified only by denying that she is a citizen. But to deny her citizenship is to deny her personality, and hence, all rights and duties founded upon it. Who can do that? Who dare do it?

All true and intelligent patriots look with alarm at the dangerous, downward drift of American morals. The government itself persists in habitual Sabbath breaking; it licenses and legalizes the liquor traffic and supports its revenues from this deadliest vice of its citizens. Politics, which once had a most honorable meaning, standing as that word does for the civil and moral interests of the people, has been mutilated, perverted, and degraded, till it represents little more than the trickiness and trades of truculent politicians, practiced for their own personal preferment and partisan power.

To secure national reform it becomes us, under God, to welcome and use all available helps. One of the mightiest forces, eligible and apt for all manner of moral reform, is that of intelligent, pious, consecrated womanhood. In her present civil status woman is not fettered by partisan bonds, not morally biased by political, partisan prejudice. She comes to the rescue with a free conscience, with pure motives, with clean hands, with unselfish purpose, with a high moral sense, with undoubted integrity, with intrepid courage, with heroic faith, with resistless earnestness and devotion of spirit. Responding to the divine call and coming up, as she does, to the help of the Lord against the mighty, it would be better that every hand that waves her aside should fall paralyzed and powerless by its possessor's side.

Although endowed as any other human being with a natural right to freedom of speech, with the right of petition, with the right of protection, with the right of property, with the right of representation and the right of the ballot, a hoary, heartless, hardened prejudice of ages gone, has denied her all these. It has thrown out her vote. It has been deaf to her petitions. It has throttled her voice. It has promised no adequate protection to her personal and property interests. Laws that should protect the wife and the mother against the ravages of the liquor traffic are made to protect the traffic against the home. And so from year to year this curse of our land and our homes pours into the loving, tender heart of womanhood a cup of anguish and pain, more intolerable than death itself. Instead of protecting the artless girl of tender age from the wiles and the wickedness of the heartless villain, and at the same time saving mother and child from broken hearts and the entire home from dishonor and shame, we have laws that protect the villain himself and encourage the practice of his seduction and devilish art.

And note it, these unjust, iniquitous laws are made by men. What absurdity to talk about "protection" afforded the home, the wife or the daughter under legislation like this! And what folly to anticipate a change for the worse from the votes of the voice of injured, suffering womanhood, whose tearful prayers and earnest protests are daily offered against the continuance of these selfish and sinful enactments.

But lo, she comes, whether we will or not; breaks with her own hands the fetters; comes in spite of limitations, in spite of opposition even. She has felt the energizing, emancipating power of the gospel. In the enjoyment of her newborn freedom and power she asserts her right and her readiness to stand "For God and Home and Every Land" in the hottest fights of moral and Christian reform. True, it is only to a bloodless battlefield that this warrior woman holds her march, but with her, it means war to the knife and the knife to the hilt, for every uncircumcised foe of her native land and her children's home.

Here and there, all over the land, all over the world, women are organizing companies and forming these companies into regiments and these regiments into brigades and these brigades into divisions, and these divisions are massing into great armies, and from every quarter of the compass they are coming a million strong. And yet there's more to follow. They ask no music of fife or drum for the march, no musket or cannon or gleaming sword for the field, no stars and stripes for their battle flag. The "shield of faith," the "helmet of salvation" and the "sword of the spirit" is their armor. "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will toward men," that song that rang out from angelic choirs, the sweetest, devoutest of all earth's songs, is the music to which they keep step on this holy march. And their battle flag, brighter and better than even the stars and stripes, is the glorious banner of divine, eternal truth, the very same under which Christ, their Leader and Lord, won His victories and His crowns.

All hail to this holy and helpful host! All hail to this coming and conquering host!

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

There is an indescribable influence about Willard Hall that leaves its impress on all who enter. People come in from the street and drop their look of care, and one man said that he had been attending these meetings for months and would as soon miss his luncheon as this noonday tryst. The long entrance leading up to the hall, the artistic coloring, the spirited singing, the harmony of service and surroundings—all these things combine to weave a spell, particularly noticeable upon those who come under its influence for the first time. There is a set-apartness, a sort of unuttered speech about the services, as if out from the past and up from the future, at the meeting of "the ways," innumerable voices were telling over and over the eternal consequences of this labor of love.

It's a grand thing to take a good pledge and keep it, and many a poor fellow has fled to the pledge table in Willard Hall full of a great hope. I've seen a man take the pledge card, read and re-read his own name at the bottom, and then tuck it away in the coat pocket nearest his heart and go out fully determined to stand true.

One day a man arose, and in a voice clear but pathetic said: "I feel as if I were lost. I have been twice around the globe, have squandered two princely fortunes, have tasted every pleasure, broken the heart of my mother, and to-day I feel that I am lost. Oh, you people, tell me, will Jesus take me as I am and ease me of this load?" Like a little child groping his way, he submitted to be told, and voicing his request found peace.

. . . . . .

She was from the Pacific Coast, and like a true white-ribboner found her way to the hall. There was a little quiver in her voice, but through it all a ring of triumph, as if she, with eye of faith, saw at the meeting of "the ways." Great tears rolled down her handsome face—happy, joyous tears, brimming over love's chalice, because her heart was full.

She was fair to look upon, and her testimony ran this wise: "It's worth a journey from the Pacific Coast to sit here this hour in this glorious presence."

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—I am sure you will be glad to receive a brief account of a meeting held yesterday, about which there was a threefold interest apart from the actual proceedings. In the first place it was held in the great Metropolitan Tabernacle, so long associated with the name and labors of the late C. H. Spurgeon; in the second, it was in some sort of the nature of a farewell to Miss Frances Willard on the very eve of her departure for America, and, in the third, though belated in point of time, the meeting was really the final gathering of the International series connected with the World's W. C. T. U. Convention. In point of fact the meeting was projected to be held in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle in July, but circumstances prevented, particularly the unexpected occurrence of a parliamentary general election in that month. Little, if anything, however, was lost in the delay, for though held in the afternoon, the audience went far towards filling the great auditorium, and in other respects left nothing to be desired. Miss Helen Hood was in charge of the arrangements, and had the gratification of seeing them crowned with success.

The first words spoken before the meeting was formally opened were words of welcome and of introduction, spoken by the Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who occupies the place so long filled by his father, and who spoke of Miss Willard as really needing no introduction to an English audience, her world-wide work, to which he referred in appreciative terms, having been her best and most fitting introduction. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith read and briefly expounded the Crusade Psalm, and led the meeting in prayer. Then Mrs. Ormiston Chant, called on by Miss Willard, briefly addressed the meeting, surrounded by a dozen colored boys from South Carolina, whose cause she pleaded in a few earnest words, explaining that they had been brought to this country with a view to raising money for the Orphanage at Charlestown, to which they belonged, but that it had been found by their conductor that English law prevented young children being employed in public for money-raising. This, however, need not, Mrs. Chant said, prevent the exercise by the audience of "sweet charity," and it had been arranged that after the boys had sung one or two pieces, a collection should be taken for their benefit. This was subsequently done, and about £20 contributed.

Miss Willard in the course of her address mentioned the deep impression made upon her by reading, many years ago, a sermon by the late C. H. Spurgeon printed in a newspaper, and also spoke of a subsequent visit to the Tabernacle, when, at the age of twenty-seven, she came as a tourist to the mother country. Mr. Spurgeon invited visitors to join in the communion, and asked those who wished to do so to obtain a ticket from him in the vestry. As a Methodist, who had not been immersed, she went in to see the great preacher in fear and trembling, and told him the state of the case. She had a vivid recollection of his hearty grasp of the hand, and of his words, "Come along, my sister, we are glad to have you." She little thought then that she would ever stand in the place where the great preacher had stood, or address a meeting in that building, but it was to be, nearly thirty years later. In burning words she went on to urge the claims of the temperance movement, to the active support of the women of England, remarking that though temperance is not everything, yet everything is in temperance work.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman followed with a vigorous and amusing address. She described the advanced position reached by the temperance movement in America, and said that it had all been brought about by agitation and talk, and the women must go on agitating and talking if the good they wanted to see was to be accomplished. Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown spoke briefly in support of the claims of the Industrial Farm Home scheme for inebriate women, of which she has recently become the secretary; Mrs. Eva McLaren, vice-president of the B. W. T. A., referred to Miss Willard's departure, and expressed on the part of the British women an earnest desire for her speedy return; and Madame Antoinette Sterling, without whom no woman's temperance meeting would be complete, spoke a few impassioned words, and also sung two of her pieces, which, as always, were keenly appreciated. The last speaker was Mr. J. H. Raper, vice-president of the United Kingdom Alliance, who called upon the meeting to give a show of hands to wish Miss Willard a successful voyage and an early return, and this was done with much enthusiasm. The meeting was appropriately brought to a close by a brief prayer and the benediction by the veteran Rev. James Spurgeon, brother, and long the co-pastor of the former minister of the Tabernacle.

There were a number of English friends present at Waterloo station this morning to wish "bon voyage" to Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, on their departure by the boat train to Southampton. They were accompanied to Southampton by Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and Mrs. Willard Poole.

REUNION OF PIONEERS AND FRIENDS OF WOMAN'S PROGRESS.

Editors The Union Signal:—Believing that the progress made by women in the last half century along religious, philanthropic, intellectual, political and industrial lines may be still further promoted by a more general acknowledgment of their efforts and successes, it has been decided to hold in New York city a gathering whose object shall be to give deserved recognition of past achievement, and stimulation and encouragement to future endeavor.

As an appropriate occasion for such a celebration, November 12, the eightieth birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, has been chosen. Her half century of pioneer work for the advancement of women makes her name a natural inspiration for such an occasion and her life an appropriate object of the congratulation and homage of the women of the world.

The celebration will take place under the auspices of the National Council of Women of the United States which is composed of twenty national organizations with an aggregate membership of seven hundred thousand women. All affiliated societies, organizations outside the Council, and interested individuals are hereby cordially invited to unite with the Council in grateful recognition of the debt which the women of the present owe to the pioneers of the past.

From their supreme interest in the enfranchisement of woman, the ideas and influence of Mrs. Stanton and her great co-worker, Miss Anthony, have permeated all fields of progress, until these leaders have become the natural center of that group of pioneers in education and philanthropy, in the professions and the industries, whom we bring together on this occasion. We hope to show to the younger generation, not alone the work that has been wrought by and for women, but the world's great women workers who by struggle and sacrifice have hastened this new day of truer freedom and nobler development which we rejoice they have lived to see.

The highest success of the plan for the reunion demands the cordial sympathy and practical coöperation of individuals and organizations interested in any phase of woman's work. The desire to coöperate may be expressed by the following methods:

1. Invitation.—By the acceptance of the invitation which is hereby most cordially extended to your society to be present in as large a body as possible.

2. Platform.—By the acceptance on the part of the president and one delegate from each organization of seats upon the platform.

3. General Committee.—By the selection of the names of three members to represent each organization upon the general committee.

4. Patrons.—By permission to place the society's name upon the patron list as expressive of the sympathy of the organization with the objects of the occasion. It is desired to make the patron list as widely representative as possible, welcoming to it not only organizations, but the names of men or women prominently interested in any one of the lines of progress whose pioneers will participate in the celebration. The use of an organization's name does not exclude the names of members as individuals, which will be added to the list as suggested by each organization. The reception of the name implies, in every instance, the consent of the member.

5. Pioneers.—As above stated, it is the intent of the plan to give due recognition and honor to all phases of woman's work. The list of pioneers already includes many honored names, but additional names of founders or earliest workers in any line of effort will be gratefully received. All such early workers will have their places upon the platform in the groups representing their own fields of progress.

6. Boxes and Seats.—Boxes and seats may be secured by writing to Miss Kate Bond, chairman of the general committee, 230 West Fifty-ninth St., New York. Members of any organization may secure adjoining boxes, which they may, if they desire, decorate with their own colors, emblems, etc. Any society having headquarters in or near New York city, deciding upon decoration, should forward three additional names to be placed upon the committee for decoration. Organizations at a distance should forward their decorations and wishes concerning them to the same committee.

7. Contributions.—Contributions will be gratefully received from societies or from individuals sufficiently interested to aid in defraying the expenses of the occasion.

8. Responses.—Any or all responses to the points of the above invitation may be sent to Miss Kate Bond, chairman of the general committee, 230 West Fifty-ninth St., New York city. The necessity for an early response needs no emphasis, and promptness is especially necessary to secure boxes and seats. Mary Lowe Dickinson,

MICHIGAN'S CLAIM TO PRIORITY IN THE "DISPENSARY PLAN."

Dear Union Signal:—Governor (now senator) Tillmann's swift ascent into the rarefied regions of national distinction, together with the general interest and discussion provoked by the "Gothenburg system" or "dispensary plan," may lend interest to the claim that neither the Scandinavians nor the Carolinians are the originators of the public sale plan, but that liquor was first dispensed by the authorized agents of government in Michigan under the French. Mr. Junius E. Beal of the Ann Arbor Courier, has written as follows in support of Michigan's claim to priority in the trial of "state control" of the sale of liquor:

"When Monsieur Cadillac, who settled Detroit in 1701, was having one of his periodical disturbances with the Hurons, the Ottawas, the Iroquois and a few of the others, he noticed that French 'fire water' was too irritating for the uninitiated reds, so he devised the dispensary plan that Governor Tillmann has arrogantly appropriated. We have the documentary evidence to substantiate this and here it is, in the words of Monsieur Aigrement who was sent by the French government to inspect the work of Cadillac, and who sent the following report of the commandant to the king. This is a translation of the report: 'In order to prevent the disturbance which would arise from the excessive use of brandy, M. La Mothe Cadillac causes it all to be put in the storehouse and to be sold to each in his turn at the rate of twenty francs a quart. Those who will have it, French as well as Indians, are obliged to go to the storehouse to drink and each can obtain at one time only the twenty-fourth part of a quart. It is certain that the savages cannot become intoxicated on that quantity. The price is high, and as they can only get the brandy each in his turn, it sometimes happens that the savages are obliged to return home without a taste of this beverage, and they seem ready to kill themselves in their disappointment.'" ## LOUISVILLE SURPRISED.

Editor Union Signal:—With a great deal of personal pride and pleasure, I have learned of the exceptionally small quantity of intoxicants consumed at the recent national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Louisville, Ky. It seems to me this is something which should be the occasion of thankfulness to Almighty God on the part of our W. C. T. unions and of every Christian.

The great work the union is doing is telling everywhere, and may we not hope for a final triumph soon of temperance over the saloon?

I quote the following for your readers from the National Tribune of this city, a leading G. A. R. paper, from whose excellent editor, Mr. John McElroy, who wields a facile pen, we would expect just such ringing words as these:

"Two things greatly astonished the Louisvillians. One was that the superintendent of the city water works reported that the consumption of water during the national encampment increased one million five hundred thousand gallons a day. The other was that everybody who went into extra arrangements for selling enormous quantities beer and other liquors lost money. The business of the regular saloons was not perceptibly increased by the presence of two hundred thousand strangers, and so far as liquor-selling was concerned the encampment was a flat failure. . . . Outside of a religious gathering there cannot be found men who drink less per capita than those who attend national encampments. A recognition of this fact will save much money to gentlemen who are inclined to invest money in extraordinary preparations for liquor selling at future national encampments. The regular saloons can take care of all the business that comes without any trouble and have time to spare."

The article entire speaks volumes in defence of the old soldier in relation to the liquor traffic.

(Mrs.) Annie C. Gotwald.

Dear Sisters:—Our recent column on our duties to treasurers has called forth some queries as to how to raise funds aside from the regular dues, and I am glad to quote in return some suggestions that are helpful and practical.

A SUPERINTENDENTS' FUND.

"Our local superintendents organized themselves into a board to raise funds for their own department work, as well as to devise methods of extending their work and reporting it to the union and the public. We elected a chairman, secretary and treasurer. Our first plan was to hold a bazaar, afternoon and evening, a week before Christmas. We displayed for sale useful and fancy articles—not at fancy prices—including a variety of supplies from the W. T. P. A. A table of refreshments completed our outfit. By this we cleared a sufficient sum, which, apportioned among the departments, carried on our work for two years. During the last year, each of the superintendents secured a lecturer or gave a children's entertainment. For instance, the superintendent of the juvenile department planned an entertainment by the Loyal Temperance Legion, charging a small admission fee and turning over the proceeds to the treasurer of the board."

The following will commend itself to our housewives who are mistresses of the culinary art: "We have held what we call a 'Saturday market,'—a sale of cooked food on Saturday afternoons. We are extremely fortunate in having the free use of a large window for this purpose in the heart of the city on the main street. Aside from the neat little sum netted on each afternoon, we have been the means of doing many a tired mother a good turn these hot days by giving her an opportunity to buy at a moderate cost, home-made bread, cakes and cookies. One week's proceeds were used to provide our public school-teachers with a subscription to Mrs. Mary H. Hunt's Monthly Advices; another to help our state missionary fund, etc."

The department of press work is often a bugbear to the unaccustomed, and a local worker has outlined the situation and given some words of advice that are very timely. She says:

"We fail so much as local unions in not reporting our meetings, even our public meetings, when our best workers speak for us. Sometimes we have advertised our lecturer tolerably well, and a newspaper man is present. He is one of the 'green hands' very likely, and does not know much, if anything, about our aims and methods. He does the best he can, but he would do better if you were to greet him with a few cordial words, see that he has a good seat and an introduction to the speaker as soon as the meeting adjourns, or before the address, if possible. Suppose the young man isn't there? The secretary of your union, or some one in her place, ought to be. Go to the night editor's office soon as meeting is over, if it is a morning paper. If an evening journal or a weekly, next morning early will do, but do not put it off longer. Editors want fresh news. Suppose you are not a ready writer? Then don't take notes, but go to the editor with your tongue: 'Good evening! You didn't hear our Mrs. E——? So sorry. She addressed us on the subject of —— ——. She is very prepossessing, and her arguments were strong. Yes, she's from California. Been about a month in the state. I suppose ten thousand people have heard her in this state. She's the guest of Mrs. B——, leaves to-morrow for six weeks' work in ——. Hope you can give her a brief notice. Perhaps on another occasion you can be with us. Good night!' He will. He will tell it all. He would have been there if he had thought you 'were doing anything, anyhow,' but all you had done was to send him a dry three line 'ad' to the effect that Mrs. E—— would 'speak under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. at Vanishing Corner Chapel to-morrow evening.'"

Editors and reporters are "just people" after all, and the awe with which they are looked upon by many is a mere matter of tradition. Journalists are news-getters and news-givers, and if you meet the conditions—promptness, plainness, brevity, accuracy—they will serve you and your cause well.

Yours in our common weal,

Mother Experience.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive anything of the Lord.—James 1:5, 6, 7.

Tnere has been a great revival lately in individual gifts to the Temple. This is a source of much joy. The letters which accompany these gifts are especially comforting and helpful. The appeal for personal gifts of a hundred dollars has not been in vain; they are starting Templeward. There are at least ten thousand women in our ranks who could with but slight self-denial send a hundred dollars. Think of it! It would aggregate $1,000,000. Let those who read these lines and are able to give the above amount remember that they are numbered in the ten thousand. Sisters, what will you say in that day when He asks you why you did not aid in paying for this House Beautiful? What does the Temple stand for?

"What stands it for—this building wrought of tears.
Of hopes and aspirations? Ah, it means
The voicing forth of every high ideal;
The living out of every hope inlined
By the All-brooding Mind. It means the sure
Opening of prison doors to all who're bound;
The healing of sad eyes now blind in sin.
It means the reign of righteousness and truth—
Truth in the inner parts and outer forms;
Truth in the laws which govern; men who rule;
It means the laying down of selfish lives
In glad surrender for the life of all."

Mrs. Chloe Ann Hawley, Medina, O., sends a check for $120, which was accompanied by a beautiful letter. One of God's hidden ones in the state of New York sends a check for $100. We trust the name will yet be sent, for it ought to be recorded in our Westminster. Mr. W. H. Hausen, Franklin Grove, Ill., sends $100. This we think is but the first droppings of a larger gift from this true and staunch temperance brother. Mrs. Lola Wood Rusk, whose health is quite delicate, is sojourning among the beautiful Catskills. She desired to aid the Temple and used her fine talents by giving two parlor readings for its benefit. The sum netted was $27, which she sent September 5. Two weeks later she sent a check for $11. In the letter which accompanied it she said: "When I wrote last I did not think I would be able to give another reading, as my health is so poor, but after reading my last Union Signal I could not feel at ease until I had made one more effort to help you, so I persuaded Mr. Rusk to assist me and together we gave an entertainment at Squirrel Inn, on the 16th; the inclosed $11 is the proceeds, would that it were $1100." Oh, for an army of such women as Mrs. Rusk!

The Rev. Geo. G. Hudson and wife are missionaries in Osaka, Japan. Almost every year since the Temple project was started, this devoted couple have sent a gift to the Temple. They have returned this summer for a visit among their home friends at Lincoln, Ill.; but their hands have not been idle—they have filled four Wheels. A dear young girl of fifteen, Elfreda H. Hatch, Escondido, Cal., has filled sixteen Wheels. She writes: "I will not send for any more Wheels now, as school begins next Monday. I have traveled a good many miles to get these dimes, and it has been a pleasure to me to know that I have tried to help the cause this vacation by helping you."

Mrs. H. M. Terry sends $15 on the pledge of the Greenport, N. Y., union. Eleven dollars and ten cents has been received from Mrs. H. A. Carlton, which completes the $100 pledge of the W. C. T. U. of Geauga county, Ohio.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Waynesburg, Pa., sends, through Miss Lucy G. Hoge, $31.35, which completes their hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. Margaret A. Lownes, of Solebury, Bucks county, Pa., is making an effort to raise $100 to place the name of their beloved county president, Mrs. Cynthia S. Holcomb, who has served them faithfully for ten years, on their state tablet in Willard Hall; $5 has been received from Bucks county for this purpose through Mrs. Lownes. Mrs. Lydia M. Chase sends $24 as a first installment on a hundred dollar pledge of the Wallace W. C. T. U., Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. M. H. Wells, Wellsville, Pa., sends $25 which completes the pledge of a hundred dollars to place the name of Dr. Wm. Hunter on a tablet in Willard Hall. The Norwich, N. Y., union, through Mrs. C. E. Merriman, sends $22.40 as a first installment on a pledge of a hundred dollars.

THE RESERVES.

BY MARY C. JOHNSON.

[Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, in her last annual report says there are at present sixteen million school children in this country under temperance instruction. These are the reserves of the grand temperance movement sweeping through the land.]

We are coming, we are coming,
Full sixteen million strong;
We are coming, we are coming,
To help the world along.
We will usher in the day
When the Right shall have full sway
And the Wrong shall pass away
For God shall reign.

Chorus.—Yes, we are coming
We sound no retreat,
Hear you the tramp
Of thirty million feet!
See you our standard
So proudly unfurled,
Inscribed with the motto
"Temperance for the world!"

Long our nation groaned in anguish,
Once the freest 'neath the sun,
Long our starry flag was tarnished
By the blighting curse of rum.
But the right must have full sway
And the wrong must pass away
In that glad and glorious day,
When God shall reign.

We have heard the wail of anguish,
From a million hearts and homes;
We have listened to the heartbreaks—
Have heard the cries and moans,
We have seen the sad tears flow
From this awful, nameless woe,
And this wrong we'll overthrow,
For God shall reign.

There's a strength within our army,
The strength of truth and love,
There are brains untouched by poison
Taught to think God's thoughts above.
There's the trusty heart and hand
Pledged for God and native land—
Sure to win a victory grand—

CIDER.

A True Sketch.

BY LILLIAN L. TROTT.

"I shall probably join you before the year is out; I have my hands and heart full, now; Rob has come back to me, you know," with a quiver of the lower lip. "I'll give you the money to-day, though; you'll need it at once. And I'll give you such other help as I can, and when the Lord's own time comes you may enroll me as a member. He knows, as no one else can, not even you, Jennie, how truly my sympathies are with such a movement."

Jennie did not answer. How could she? Years ago, when she and Alma were girlish confidants, she and Rob were lovers. It seemed but yesterday that vows were plighted and good-byes were said and Rob went off to the city.

"Are you feeling better?" she asked, to change a subject painful to both. Her friend was a comely woman still, but the lines on her forehead showed that the sister, rather than the forsaken sweetheart, had suffered when Rob found disgrace instead of the fame he went to seek.

"No. How can my health improve with such a weight here?" placing her hand over her heart. "Doctor says my liver's out of order: I wish it were only that."

"What do you take?"

"Oh, he prescribed, of course; his drugs do not affect me at all, and at last he told me to drink all the sweet cider I could."

Jennie looked quickly away, but Alma caught her horrified expression.

"I didn't like the idea of it at first," she explained; "he insisted, however. As we make it ourselves, though, for vinegar, I can get it perfectly sweet."

A few more words and Jennie was gone, saying at parting, "I do hope Rob will be himself again."

"We hope and fear," Alma answered, "he and husband and I. We will make a man of him if such a thing be possible."

As the gate clicked behind her Rob stepped from the arbor.

"She chose the better part," he said, gazing after her up the road toward the country seat where home and husband awaited her.

"Yes, it was better not to pine for you. You've spoiled one woman's life."

From the bitterness of her heart she spoke, and Rob groaned.

"It was your fall that first led her to think of these things," she added; "she appeared to feel it almost as much as I, then she recovered herself, and determined not to let it blight her future. People thought she forgot you when she married Randall, but I know. Prompting her temperance work, there is always the thought of you and the man you might have been."

"Little sister!" There were times when the man in him aroused and looked out of Rob's eyes, seeing his sister as others saw her, and the sorrow he had brought into her youth.

"Is Rob out there?" a tremulous hand pushed back the blind and a faltering voice questioned fearfully, anxiously.

"He's all right, father," the younger man spoke. Father and daughter cared for him as for an infant, and he was abashed.

"I will do better, Al," he said suddenly. "I do mean to, this time."

"You have always meant to," sadly.

"I know it, I know it! I haven't the push when I'm where it is. But I'll stay away from it, away here in the country I'll bury myself out of the reach of the sight and sound and smell of the accursed temptation."

He did stay. All through the autumn days he busied himself on the farm, communing with nature and with nature's God. His aged parent rejoiced in this unspoken sign of returning manhood. Surely only the good could find pleasure in the society of nature. A return to the simple friends of his boyhood must mean redemption. Even Alma did not realize the frailty of the man and the strength of the foe with whom he struggled. She saw only the stern eyes, the rigid lines around the mouth, and felt that he would fight to win.

Alma's health was improving. The cider, or Rob's deportment, or both, raised her spirits, deepened her color, and lent a charm to existence. As winter drew on she kept her "medicine" on the sideboard. Once Jennie ventured to expostulate. "Don't be fanatical," was the response, "no one was ever harmed by sweet cider."

"How long does it stay sweet?" retorted her friend. "At no distant day you will rue the time when you tempted your brother. He is bringing all the power of that weak will of his to resist the desire that may outbattle him in the end. If he gives up and goes back to the city and his old ways it will be your fault. You keep those fumes before him daily, and if he gratifies his craving you will have yourself to thank for it."

Alma was not angry. She never was with Jennie, but she did not remove the cider. Even when Joe, the boy-of-all-work, took too much of an evening, and reeled off to bed her conscience remained passive. But in the spring, when the barrels were taken from the cellar and Rob and Joe each drank of the dregs till legs and heads alike were affected, then she thought of Jennie and her "whims."

"It's no use," Rob said after that, and left the country for the haunts of old.

"Save my one boy; I can't rest in my grave till he's brought back to the fold," was her father's dying charge.

She has made it the mission of her life to fulfill that charge. How she succeeds time will tell. In the slums of the wickedest of cities a man has his being. In a far distant country home his sister names him in her prayers. There is no cider in that home now.

THE IMAGINATIVE WORLD OF CHILDHOOD

BY FANNY C. PARDEE.

The imagination is a faculty of the mind which disciples of Froebel deem of greatest importance in their work in the kindergarten and is worthy of much thought from mothers regarding their own children. The old ideas of pedagogic excellence held that its passive qualities were all that were necessary in childhood, but by the philosophy of Froebel we learn wiser methods and see the necessity of cultivating it actively, realizing how it may be a factor in enlarging and quickening the mind. We readily see that all cannot be poets, painters or musicians in the highest degree. Such gifts are exceedingly rare. Yet as teachers and mothers we may rejoice to see even a small expression from within, which had no existence in actual reality before it came from our own child.

Froebel grasps this inner expression and desires to use its active qualities for the child's true development. Hence his desire that the child should experience the truisms of life through his imaginative play in the kindergarten.

We who have arrived at a period of responsibility look back at many experiences of our own childhood of only passive good which yet could have been made the means of active good, and which through the lack of proper interpretation by our parents or teachers at that time were not deemed susceptible of any philosophic bearing and thus not utilized. We would not lend one word of depreciation to the devoted mothers of thirty years ago. The evidence of their ability will be hard to improve upon, yet in the order of mental evolution the mothers of to-day bear to childhood a greater opportunity and a more just interpretation.

The seven years of formative impressions, rightly constructed thought, through lines of continuity in the kindegarten, will find a child at the end of the kindergarten course mentally able to stand alone, applying intuitively the impressions received in imaginative play to the real experiences of life. Thus he stands upon its threshold self-contained, for he knows how to think and act for himself. The houses of blocks which he has made in the kindergarten he sees as real houses and homes, the works of man. His soul is impressed with their proportions of completeness or lack of it. The outlines of their external harmonies blend in his imagination with a distant landscape of shadowy trees and distant hill, and fills his soul. He is yet only a little boy, but says: "Mamma, that is just right for a picture." And thus through habits of creative (active) imagination he has been prepared for a life of joyous and active achievement. It has opened his eyes to the continual processes of nature; the lessons upon beasts, birds, fishes, rocks and minerals have opened the way to active research in botany, zoology and mineralogy, which to many of us did not open until we were quite mature children, learning of these wonders first in our maturer text books. And then the beginnings of true literature which have been opened to him in the kindergarten! The devoted kindergartner is constantly bringing before him from all sources gems which her quick perception finds need of, as each special season or day requires.

What, then, are we to expect of this generation of kindergarten children? Perhaps they may have already answered us to some small degree themselves, prophetically.

One little kindergarten boy says as he plays by the hour with lead soldiers and stone blocks, building forts and armies, at the same time wearing his own soldier hat and singing patriotic songs, "Mamma, I think I shall be a soldier and as near like George Washington as I can, from the time he was a little boy till when he was a man."

And dear little kindergarten Kate says, "None of us [meaning sister and brother] liked to put cold water on our faces in the morning. Why, we all cried when we got washed, but now we make the little bucket with our hands and sing:

"'Up, up my little bucket comes From out the deep, dark well.
'Tis full and running over,
And what it holds, who'll tell?'

"And then we dash the pail full right over our faces, and rub till the roses come."

Shall we not then expect better citizens from worthy examples set forth, better health from better physical habits taught, and more soul life lifted up perpetually to the Giver of all?

Cannot, then, the imaginations of childhood mean much for the truisms of life for which Froebel desired to prepare the child in the kindergarten?

Pittsburg, Pa.

We speak in sadness of short joy and long sorrow. It is not true. A real joy never ends. A true summer never flies away to leave us sad. A really good time lasts forever. That which you have rightly enjoyed is a joy forever. The sunsets never fade in the morning. The glory of the sea and sky are enduring, for they cannot perish. We go on gathering the riches of earth as a preparation for the pure things beyond. The summer is a flash of God's love. The late summer days, our "Indian summer," are tokens of His forbearing mercy. Winters are not burials, but wholesale training times. The resurrection is a glorious springtime. And heaven is the growth eternal of every good!—Rollin A. Sawyer, D. D.

WHO LIKES THE RAIN?

"I," said the duck, "I call it fun,
For I have my little red rubbers on;
They make a cunning, three-toed track
In the soft, cool mud. Quack, quack!"

"I," cried the dandelion, "I;
My roots are thirsty, my buds are dry."
And she lifted her little yellow head
Out of her green and grassy bed.

"I hope 'twill pour! I hope 'twill pour!"
Croaked the tree toad at his gray bark door;
"For with a broad leaf for a roof
I am perfectly weatherproof."

Sang the brook: "I laugh at every drop,
And wish they never need to stop,
Till a big river I grew to be,
And could find my way to the sea."

SIGNING THE PLEDGE.

BY MRS. FRANCES SEABURY.

There was a W. C. T. U. organized in Luptonville, after which the members at once looked around for some work which they thought would do the most good.

As there were many children in the village, they decided that "juvenile work" should be one department for their union to take up, so they organized a Loyal Temperance Legion.

I am sorry to say that the minister's wife was opposed to it.

Why?

It took a good while to find out just the reason, but at last it was revealed that the minister had intended to organize a society among the children under the auspices of the church, but had not because the L. T. L. was in the field.

The superintendent of the L. T. L. invited him to assist in the Legion, but he found his time "so limited" that he asked to be excused.

Some people were so blind as not to be able to see how it would take any more time to assist in the Legion than it would to have worked in a society that he contemplated organizing, but it is not our purpose to deal with "fine points," so we leave that for some one else to figure out.

When the L. T. L. was started, of course the first thing to be presented was the pledge-card, and many boys and girls signed it; but there was one boy who would not "sign away his liberty" to drink cider. Carl Hammond was his name. His mother was a strong temperance woman and wanted Carl to sign the pledge, but as he was reluctant she did not press the matter.

Carl was always quoting his Uncle Ralph, and he made cider, and Carl said:

"I don't see any harm in drinking cider as long as Uncle Ralph makes it. Of course if it was wrong he would not make it, and I expect to take many more good drinks through a straw."

Mamma replied:

"The fact that Uncle Ralph makes it does not lessen the sin of drinking it."

Uncle Ralph lived a mile from the village, and Carl thought he would go up there on Saturday afternoon and see what was going on.

To his delight he found all the men picking up apples for cider making. Carl noticed that all the half rotten ones were thrown in a pile with wormy ones, so he asked Uncle Ralph what those were for.

"They are for cider; they are not good to use in any other way, so we make cider of them."

"Are you joking, Uncle Ralph? You certainly do not use all those apples for cider."

"Yes; I do use them for cider."

"And the wormy ones too?"

"Yes. What is the odds? No one thinks about it, and a half rotten apple is more juicy than a sound one; and I can sell sound ones, but cannot sell the half rotten ones until they are made up into cider."

Carl asked:

"Do you think that is just right, Uncle Ralph?"

"Yes, right enough. Everybody makes cider in the same way, and you do not taste the rotten apples when you drink it."

"No, but I would not eat rotten apples, and I do not want cider that is made that way."

"Then you won't drink much cider."

Carl did not say any more, but made up his mind to let Uncle Ralph's cider alone, and as he was going home he said to himself:

"I don't wonder those W. C. T. U. women are after the boys if they know how filthy cider is, and I suppose they do, for people say they are finding out everything."

Still Carl would not sign the pledge, for he did not believe that cider would intoxicate, and so he thought he should always drink clean cider.

A month and more rolled around and Uncle Ralph invited Carl and his friend Hugh up one Saturday afternoon to take some cider.

"Now, boys, just help yourselves," said Uncle Ralph, "and when you are tired of the glass just use the straws. Drink all you want, for this is sweet cider."

"When does it get to be sour cider?" asked Hugh.

"Oh, I don't know; by spring, maybe."

Carl tried to enjoy the cider, but whenever he raised the glass to his lips he imagined he saw a rotten apple floating on the cider, and it had a tendency to weaken his appetite. He thought if he tried the straw he might forget about the apples; but no, he could not forget; and, too, there came a vision of crushed worms, so he gave up the cider.

He had been so taken up with his own efforts to drink the cider that he had not noticed Hugh's success in that direction, and in fact had forgotten all about him until he heard him exclaim:

"How my head aches! Let us go to the house!"

Aunt Grace brought a pillow and made Hugh as comfortable as possible on the couch, but he was quite a sick boy.

When Uncle Ralph came to the house Aunt Grace told him about Hugh, and she said:

"I don't think you did right to let the boys have that cider, especially Hugh. You know his father likes drink only too well, and Hugh is now drunk. Who is to blame?"

Uncle Ralph said nothing, but went outdoors and Carl slipped out where Aunt Grace was and asked,

"Is there alcohol in that cider, Aunt Grace?"

"Yes."

"When does it form?"

"Very soon after it is made it begins to ferment, and fermentation continues until it becomes what we call hard cider; and you see it does not take long for it to ferment sufficiently to intoxicate; but your uncle calls it sweet cider still."

"Look here, Aunt Grace, I have two pledge-cards in my pocket. I would not sign one before, but now I am ready to sign, and Uncle Ralph must too. He has done harm enough."

When Uncle Ralph came in Carl handed him the card, which he read. Then Carl handed him a pen, saying,

"Sign there, won't you please?"

And he signed.

As for Hugh, he got over the effects of so-called sweet cider, and the first thing he said when he realized the condition he had been in was:

"I shall join the Loyal Temperance Legion, and shall be only too glad to pledge myself not to drink wine, beer nor cider."—Youth's Temperance Banner.

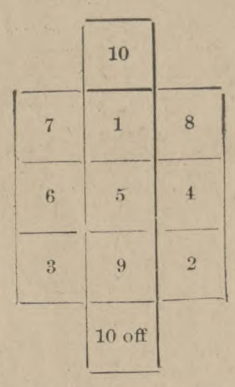
Dear Boys and Girls:—I want to describe to you a game played on the Atlantic ships which will, perhaps, be new to you as it was to me. It is called "Shuffleboard." A certain space on the deck is marked off by chalk, in eleven squares which are numbered from one to ten, as in the diagram below, one of the squares being marked "10 off:"



The game is a jolly one, and takes but a little practice before one can play it. It is played with a sort of wooden spade, the handle of which is quite long and the spade part small. There are eight round, wooden blocks about six inches across and two inches thick. Either two, four, six or eight people can play, divided into two sides, and the score is generally two hundred. Placing a block on the deck about twenty feet from the chalk diagram, the player puts the edge of his spade against the curved side of the block and pushes it away from him. His aim is to give the block a shove strong enough to land it on one of the squares (the highest one of course!) and to avoid the "ten off." A sudden lurch of the ship, however, will often send the block on the very spot to which the player didn't want it to go! This, of course, amuses the onlookers very much.

Succeeding players try to knock their opponents' pieces off the squares and place their own instead. This game gives good exercise and can be played on any smooth surface, I should think, but of course, nowhere with as much novelty as on shipboard. I am wondering if there is not some Cozy Cornerer bright enough to adapt it to home uses. If so, be sure to let the Circle know about it.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The stir and bustle of convention preparation is in the air, the wheels of our machinery are revolving in its interests, superintendents' reports, programs, convention literature, are demanding extra force and requiring unwavering attention. Closely allied are the railroad arrangements, and we repeat again in reply to inquiries which still come: The reduced rates upon the certificate plan are available to ALL PERSONS wishing to go to Baltimore within the prescribed limit of time. It is believed the large number of delegates will be greatly augmented by visitors who are desirous not only of attending the annual convention, but of embracing the opportunity to visit Baltimore and Washington at the most delightful season of the year.

The question is often asked: By which route will the National officers and delegates go from Chicago? We answer: The National officers will go via Pennsylvania lines, as well as many of the delegates. This route has two excellent trains leaving Chicago, one at 10:30 in the morning, and arriving at Baltimore 12:20 the following day, the time between Chicago and Baltimore being about twenty-three hours. This train gives about one-half the mountain view by daylight. The next, and by far the most desirable train, leaves at 3 P. M., goes over the mountains by daylight, and arrives at Baltimore at 6:15 the following day. Parties of eighteen going on the same train can have a special Pullman palace car from Chicago to Baltimore.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad offers nearly the same inducements as the Pennsylvania lines—beautiful scenery and through trains which leave Chicago nearly the same hours, viz.: 10:15 in the morning, reaching Baltimore following afternoon at 1:05; a train leaving Chicago at 3:00 P. M., due in Baltimore at 6:05 the next day. Some of the delegates will go by this route also.

A third road is the Chesapeake & Ohio. This has a train leaving Chicago at 12 o'clock, noon, arriving at Baltimore at 4:54 the following day, and although this route is not quite so direct, and takes a few hours longer time, it has as charming scenery as either of the others, and will be also attractive to the delegates.

The price from Chicago to Baltimore by all these roads is $23.35 round trip, by the certificate plan. The trains of the Pennsylvania lines depart from Chicago Union Passenger Station on Canal street, between Adams and Madison. Those entering the city by Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, Chicago & Alton, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, will find this convenient, as baggage will not have to be carried across the city.

The trains of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad leave from the Grand Central Passenger Station, corner of Harrison street and Fifth avenue. Those arriving by Wisconsin Central and Chicago & Great Western, will find this line convenient, as those roads enter also at this station.

WOMAN IN THE CHURCH.

The Western Christian Advocate gives an editorial review of an article by Rev. W. H. Sweet, on the "woman question," received, it says, too late for publication. The editorial styles it "one of the best which we have yet seen." We believe this from the extracts given and only regret that the article could not have been published in full. Some of the facts given by way of calming the fears of those who think women will crowd men out of the General Conference are very significant. The Western Christian Advocate thus summarizes them: "Though she is eligible to the superintendency of our Sunday-school and has the majority in most Sunday-school societies, she rarely aspires to be superintendent. For twenty-five years she has been eligible to civil office in Wyoming, and yet is not an office holder, save in educational work and then only in rare cases. In Kansas there are one hundred and four county superintendents, only twenty of whom are women, and yet sixty-four and one-half per cent of the teachers are women. It is the womanly, wifely, motherly instinct that ever tends and ever will tend to make her, as a class, a keeper of home, the leader of a quiet and unobtrusive life. Now and then, one like Deborah will be thrust out to perform a special work, but these exceptional cases will be justified by the results."

After showing that many barriers have been removed to woman's work and that the result has been uniformly beneficial not only to the work in which she has engaged but also "to her advantage as wife and mother," Mr. Sweet advocates the removal of all man-made barriers in order that women may be free to follow providential indications, in these words:

"Do we know that the limit has yet been reached? May it not be possible there are other barriers in the way that need to be broken down? Shall the church ever know to what extent God may use women till all barriers are removed, and He shall be permitted to have His way as He shall manifest it in His providences, and to the judgment and consciences of His people? If women have exhibited skill in the organization and management of societies for which they did not at first even have the sanction of the church, and which have since been carried on with its approval, are we certain that her advice would be of no benefit in the councils of the brethren, or that she and they might not profitably confer, not only as to her societies, but with reference to other interests of the church?"

In another article on general conference and woman's societies, the same writer takes the ground that the church does not foster these societies as their merits and work justify. He then proceeds to give facts which would warrant a much stronger statement:

"Have these women's societies received the recognition they deserve? While at the Epworth League conference a few weeks ago, I asked several preachers from different conferences: 'Where are the headquarters of the Woman's Home and Woman's Foreign Missionary societies, and who are the officers of each?' Some could not answer any part of the question. Some knew who were the officers some time ago, but were not certain who they are now. No one could answer the question in full. And the persons asked were as intelligent and as well posted as preachers in general. Think of it!—Methodist Episcopal missionary societies, that raise and disburse more than five hundred thousand dollars annually for the support of Methodist Episcopal missions; and yet many Methodist preachers do not know where the headquarters are located, or who the officers are, and the General Conference has either overlooked the matter, or else considered it either not becoming, or not worth while, to authorize the printing of the names of the officers of these societies in the Appendix of the Discipline.

"How are we related in this work anyhow? Are we men lords over God's heritage, and all our sisters mere serving-women, who are to be kept in the background, and not introduced to company? It would seem so, if we look at the array of names of men who are published as officers and members of different boards, and not a single woman's name given, when the two women's societies raise and disburse more money for the Church than three of the others. Are they excluded from publication simply because they are women?"

But more unjust and foolish still is the plan pursued by the parent missionary society with regard to collections made by the woman's society. As is known to all intelligent Methodists, the woman's societies are not allowed to raise their funds by collection at any regular church service, in any promiscuous gathering, in any Sunday-school, etc., for fear of interfering with the regular church collections. As Mr. Sweet says, the women are simply gleaners, and have never objected to this position, but the gleaners are not fairly treated. On the contrary, any church which should favor its gleaners would run a risk of being discriminated against in a way that would severely try the average minister. This is the case as given by Mr. Sweet. Suppose that two charges were exactly alike in their membership, the amount of salary paid and amounts paid to the various benevolences, with the one exception, that one paid more for the woman's missionary society than did the other. In case neither of them gave its full apportionment to the parent missionary society, the apportionment of the one which gave the lesser amount to the woman's society could, on representation of the presiding elder that the amount was too great for its ability, be reduced; that of the other could not. Hence, though the two charges might continue to give the same absolute amount to the parent society, the one would be rated in the report as a church in the first class which raised its full apportionment, while the other would be ranked in the third or fourth class as having failed so to raise it.

As we happen to know, it is a matter of pride with the Methodist minister to come up to his annual conference and report that he has raised his full apportionment in all the benevolences and especially in the missionary collection. In fact, his success in so doing may have a decided effect upon the character of the appointments he receives. And—there is a great deal of human nature in ministers, even Methodist ministers, just as there is in other "folks."

Such facts as the above show that women have worked patiently and faithfully for the church under a sort of encouragement which would have driven some of our male critics out of the church long ago. In the name of all women, of whatever denomination, we express our appreciation of the noble brothers of whom Dr. Moore, Dr. Hamilton and Mr. Sweet are representatives, who are brave enough to take a stand against such injustice and who have determined that in the Methodist church the absurdity of two-thirds of the membership being distinguished against shall cease.

WHAT IS THE HIGHEST SERVICE?

Women often consider foolish little pursuits of greater importance than the tremendous things which are within their united power to do. It is needless to say that we of the W. C. T. U. do not grasp all the possibilities of our organization, we do not read and study enough, although connection with the order is universally a source of more or less mental growth. It is a school for the study of social problems, reformatory measures, home science, educational work of many kinds. Besides, there is the reflex action of all this thought and work and study upon the homes that make the nation; all this bearing upon the great central national problem of what to do with the liquor traffic.

Any one, by planning, can find time for the Lord's work; yet right here is a point which needs light. One day, while crossing a bridge on her way to a meeting, the president of a local union counted twenty-four men standing on the banks and in the stream, fishing; up to that hour the catch averaged perhaps one fish to every three men. But the women who had felt that they could leave their work did not constitute a quorum at the meeting.

There is a reform measure which should be introduced in scores of homes; there should be a little more hired labor—a Godsend to some poor woman—applied at certain points for the express purpose of relieving tension and letting souls loose for a season of refreshing. "And pay out money we might save?" emphatically, yes! It is anything but praiseworthy to save every penny possible. A woman has no right to bind, confine and cramp herself, physically, morally or intellectually, and consequently her moulding influence on the character of her household, from an exaggerated sense of economic duty, carried to no such extent by her partner in life's journey. Henry Ward Beecher said he did not believe in an eight hour man with a fourteen hour wife.

It frequently becomes desirable for a woman to help out the family income through some resource of her own—dress-making perhaps, or music lessons. If the work presses, she will, nine times out of ten, see her duty in the opportunity for extra earnings, at the expense of all philanthropic effort, and devote to it time every whit as sacred to the Lord as is the Sabbath day, thinking that she does well thereby. A woman has no right to withhold her reasonable service in those lines in which our Lord permits us to assist Him. No Christian woman is exempt—least of all in favor of such self-seeking.

"What is your idea of a heroine?" is the question in one of those "confession albums" supposed to reflect a mental photograph of the contributor, to which the would-be clever wife of a college professor once appended the reply, "An educated American woman who does her own housework." Editors copied the crisp little item; uncounted husbands have read it aloud with a "that's the sort of talk" kind of expression, and a good many women have plumed themselves on being heroines of that pattern.

Amidst the general enthusiasm a few readers have doubtless felt spirit moved to condition their approval. The educated woman upon whom the necessity of doing this has been laid, who lives in the spirit of George Herbert's lines:

"A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as by God's laws
Makes that and the action fine," who cheerfully sets herself to give to her housekeeping the impress of her own bright individuality—who consecrates her best gifts upon this humble altar—is not only a heroine but a saint! But that the woman whose circumstances do not demand the sacrifice should choose to devote precious time and strength to such toil as coarse hands can do as well scarcely calls for applause, and there are women who think much of themselves on account of showing so little sense as that!

A woman who cannot endure to have a thing done a little less perfectly than she would do it herself, who fritters away time in foolish elaboration of detail, who embroiders the family life with fripperies of food or raiment at the expense of her soul's growth, her mental polishing, the broadening of her outlook, the softening of her heart and stretching out of her hands to the world's pitiful need to which she might bring sovereign balm, is in no sense a heroine.

It is not enough even to have a heart and hand tender and quick to relieve present suffering. Such deeds are truly the beautiful fragrant blossoming of a Christian life, but there is work besides this being brought in line to march with the ages; there are influences to be set at work, which will expand in geometric progression toward infinity.

Unhindered, the powers of darkness march thus, too. Among the descendants of one neglected girl has been counted hundreds of cases of crime and disgrace—a thing to appreciably affect the destiny of a world. Consider what it would have meant to sweeten the waters of that bitter fountain. Consider that in coming years there may be those physically cursed or languishing in prisons through our sins of omission. Who knows but that the reproachful words, "sick and in prison and ye visited me not," may be addressed to us, because far, far back we failed to do some preventive work, to teach the ignorant boy or check the wayward girl whose sins—long after our time—have descended upon these in disease or crime? Only God can know what is prevented, but He does know. He, the giver of our time and talents, cannot with impunity be denied their service.

THE BREWERS' REPRESENTATIVE AT THE TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

At the request of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, Mr. Joseph Malin, of London, replied to the statements of Mr. Thomann, champion of the American brewers, at the recent International Temperance Congress, Basle, Switzerland. Mr. Thomann had attended the two previous congresses, and presented papers ostensibly in the interests of temperance, and saw fit to object to Mr. Malin's charge that he appeared under false colors. Mr. Malin thus states the facts with regard to Mr. Thomann's relation to the liquor traffic, thereby disclosing the motive for his presence at the congresses:

"With regard to the Zurich Congress, I may say he was, I think, the only American gentleman present; that the fact that he was the salaried officer of the United States Brewers' Association was not announced in the published enrollment list; that he had his name down to read papers professedly in the interests of temperance; that in his first address he discredited the advanced temperance propaganda of the United States, and said he represented the reasonable and right-thinking people of the United States, although he advocated the popularization of beer-drinking as a remedy for intemperance. It was then that, in replying to him, I disclosed the fact that he in no way represented or spoke the sentiments of temperance people in the United States, but that he was the salaried manager of the United States Brewers' Publication Bureau, and the author of many pamphlets and volumes I then produced, and which were all written for, and published by, the American brewers. In doing so I quoted from one of the volumes Herr Thomann's admission that these were confessedly published in the interests of the brewing trade. It appears that before last congress at The Hague, Herr Thomann had become president of the German Press Club of New York, and that they credentialed him as their representative to the congress. This enabled him, as a representative, to send an essay to the congress discrediting the liquor-prohibition laws of the state of Maine. I never doubted or denied his credential, but I discounted its value by indicating his real position, and said he was still the salaried employé of the Brewers' Association, who had just made him an additional grant of money for his prolific writings in the interests of their trade. This fact he is unable to deny."

The line of argument commonly adopted by the liquor interest against prohibition is well illustrated by the brewers' representative when he attempts to show that a prohibitory state does not compare favorably with a license state in increase of population. Says Mr. Malin: "He shows that from the year 1880 to 1890 prohibitory Maine only increased two per cent in population, while Massachusetts, under license, increased over twenty-five per cent. Yet he knows that Massachusetts has for many years had a local option law under which, of the three hundred and forty-nine local government areas covering the state, between two hundred and fifty and three hundred prohibit the common sale of intoxicants. Herr Thomann knows this but conceals it, and cites its prosperous population as illustrating a prosperous license state."

Mr. Thomann, of course, like all liquorites, makes the most of the fact that prohibition has been defeated in many states. Mr. Malin explains that "sometimes the so-called defeats of temperance voters only mean that some states, in which each locality has a power of prohibition, and others which have enacted state prohibition, have been polled on the further question of embodying it in the constitution, and they have failed to give such two-third majority. Such failure, however, leaves unimpaired the state or local prohibitory law which had already existed," and points to the rapidly growing sentiment in favor of local option. "The legislatures," he says, "of a majority of the states of the American Union have enacted that the people of the different districts may, by vote, extinguish the common sale of intoxicating drinks—a law as stringent as the most advanced British temperance reformers have desired to see enacted in their own country. The electors (which comprise all males twenty-one years of age and upwards) have in hundreds of the towns and counties of these American states thus enacted local prohibition, although these states are not classed as prohibitory states."

Referring to the seven states which have enacted and retain a prohibitory law, Mr. Malin calls attention to the fact that "during the past year the enemies of prohibition in Maine introduced into the state legislature a bill to again take a state plebiscite with a view to repeal prohibition; but the legislature rejected it by 114 votes to 14. This shows how Maine itself values its prohibitory law."

In conclusion he thus replies to Herr Thomann's statement that a Canadian commission has reported adversely to prohibition:

"It is well known that during the past year a plebiscite has been taken throughout Canada for prohibition, and that a large majority have voted for absolute prohibition. The question has been the subject of a resolution in the Canadian Parliament this year, and a majority have affirmed the principle, though such legislation is not to be provided till further preliminaries have been undertaken. But ever since the year 1878 the Canada Temperance Act has accorded to each city and county the local option to prohibit, and, amidst many variations, a number of cities and counties thus prohibit it by local popular vote."

How vigorously the liquor men fight prohibition! And that, too, in face of their constantly reiterated declaration that it does not prohibit. They evidently watch very keenly the movements of the prohibition forces, and their tactics are subtle and audacious as is seen by their applying a modicum of temperance veneer to one of their number and sending him to temperance congresses to represent "reasonable and right thinking" people of America! Prohibitionists may learn many things from their opponents, and one is ever to be on the alert for opportunities to get in a good stroke for their cause.

NATIONAL PURITY CONGRESS.

The demand for a thoughtful and intelligent consideration of the social problems involved in the purity movement, emphasizes the importance of the congress to be held in Baltimore under the auspices of the American Purity Alliance, October 14, 15 and 16.

The existence of licensed and state regulated vice in European countries, which is practical slavery for a victimized class of women and of untold degradation to men—is, with foreign travel and foreign immigration, a constant menace to purity in America. Bills prepared for our own legislatures in several states to legalize vice by "licensing," "localizing" or "districting" it, and municipal taxation and toleration amounting to regulation in many of our cities, make the need urgent for increased watchfulness and intelligence, that the evil-disposed of both sexes may be restrained, and that the obligation of chastity, and the importance of an equal standard of morality for both men and women may be more effectively inculcated.

The papers and addresses of the congress will cover various phases of the question. All churches, philanthropic associations, and social purity, White Cross, Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, and other organizations in sympathy with the work, are invited to send five or more delegates, and to forward their names and addresses to Mrs. Naomi Lawton Davis, United Charities Building, New York, at once. Special railway and hotel rates have been secured.

"So many gods, so many creeds—
So many paths that wind and wind
While just the art of being kind
Is all the sad world needs."

Every great evolution of a class, no matter how beneficent that evolution may be, involves excesses that hinder its progress and afflict its friends. The latest proof of this is a bull fight in San Sebastian, Spain, in which young women, attired in the costume "made and provided" for such occasions, acted the part of matadores—inciting the poor brutes to action and giving them the final blow.

White ribbon women distinctly disavow any banding together of women as malcontents or hostiles toward the correlated other half of the human race. Brute force, to them, means custom as opposed to reason, prejudice as the antagonist to fair play, and precedent as the foe of common sense. It was a beautiful saying of the earlier Methodists, when they avowed a holy life, "I feel nothing contrary to love." But the widening march of Christianity has given a wonderfully practical sense to such words, and we actually mean here to-day that whatever in custom or law is contrary to that love of one's neighbor which would give to him or her all the rights and privileges that one's self enjoys, is but a relic of brute force, and is to be cast out as evil. And because woman in our most civilized nation is still so related to the law that the father can will away an unborn child, and that a girl of seven or ten years old is held to be the equal partner in a crime where another and a stronger is principal; because she is in so many ways hampered and harmed by laws and customs pertaining to the past, we reach out hands of help, especially to her, that she may overtake the swift marching procession of progress, for its sake, that it may not slacken its speed on her account as much as for hers that she be not left behind. We thus represent the human rather than the woman question, and our voices unite to do that which the president of the New York Woman's Club beautifully said in a late letter to the club of Bombay: "Tell them the world was made for woman too."

The publishers of Farm Machinery, a St. Louis implement trade paper, have published a symposium on the custom of "treating in trade," in which I am glad to note that almost without exception, the experience of business men who contributed to the symposium is that "treat-bought trade" is unsatisfactory and unreliable.

It has been well said "The Woman's Temple is not too fine a building for the world's memorial of the greatest issue that has ever been known. It is not a state nor even a national, but the world's memorial."

In England one often sees at the railway stations a trustworthy looking dog, of mature age, with a collection box strapped on his neck in which funds may be deposited by the public for various excellent charities—children's hospitals, children's country week, and so forth. It is also a custom for ladies of refinement to sit in the railway stations, and even at street corners, with boxes asking for contributions to the hospitals; this is done on days appointed for the purpose. These practical, and among Americans, unusual methods may well be considered, and possibly the W. C. T. U. has something to learn from them. The practical British mind is also evinced by the numerous placards put up in railway waiting rooms, and the collection boxes that one finds there almost invariably, and sometimes at the ticket windows. There is much more literature placed in these waiting rooms by charitable organizations than with us, and great pains are taken to inform young girls coming from the country concerning safe places to which they can go while seeking for work. There are also notices in the street cars, placed there by the Humanitarian League, in the interest of the horses, which read as follows: "Passengers are respectfully requested not to stop the cars unnecessarily, as starting again is a severe strain on the horses." I wish that the magic of the printed word were more generally appreciated by white ribbon women, then would our arsenal of weapons in the Woman's Temperance publishing house be more liberally utilized by the rank and file.

On Duty.

OUR MISSIONARIES IN ICELAND.

As I am as far north as I shall ever get, unless I join the Norwegian expedition to the North Pole, perhaps something from this part of the world will interest THE UNION SIGNAL readers.

As is generally known, I came here in the hopes of complete restoration to health and strength and as a special correspondent for a home paper, not expecting to do much work along temperance lines. My friend, Ruth Shaffner, gave up her summer's trip to Switzerland to come with me, and Captain Pratt's daughter, of Carlisle, also came along to help in the good cause.

We started from the north of Scotland on a small steamer, and after a week of misery at sea, we were accorded a very warm welcome by the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Iceland. A World's worker had never visited their shores before and it seemed the moment to lend a hand in helping to create and strengthen temperance sentiment. To this end a ten days' mission was held at the capital, Reykjavik, and the gatherings were far beyond our highest expectations. Night after night the hall was thronged, many being unable to enter. When the meetings for women were held it was necessary to make the admission by ticket to prevent crowding. The meetings were kept up and the interest increased. Some of the most influential people of the city were nightly attendants. Among them the governor's wife, the speaker of the lower house of the Althing, the Bishop of Iceland and the local preacher. The voice of woman was never heard before in prayer in public, and the great blessing that attended the large gatherings will be recorded only in eternity.

While in the capital we were the guests of the Grand Lodge of Iceland. They extended every possible hospitality and aided greatly in the formation of a W. C. T. U., all the officers joining. At the close of the mission a local union was formed of 210 members; after this a national W. C. T. U. for Iceland and the Faroe Islands was started, with Miss Olavia Johannsdotlir as National president. Miss Olavia, as she is generally called, is a most energetic woman and stands as the one solitary "new woman" of Iceland, full of new methods and ideas. She will in the coming years, lead a mighty host of women in this northern land.

From the capital we rode out to many places to hold meetings. Travel is very difficult. The only means of getting about is by pony, often over very bad roads and dangerous places. In the near vicinity of the capital the roads are excellent, but beyond there is often only a bridle path.

On one occasion we traveled forty miles over difficult roads, and held a meeting the same evening, and visiting another point, we traveled over the lava bed all day, reaching our destination an hour before the meeting, and started back early the next day.

The Good Templars of Iceland are a very strong body, and have accomplished a great work in the island. At the time of our visit to the capital the Althing, the legislative body, was sitting, and several temperance measures were before the house. At the present time the Local Option Bill is in the hands of the committee, which in a few days will report. This bill was backed by a petition signed by one-fifth of the female population of the island. The magnificent work of the Good Templars has been recognized by the Althing, and an appropriation of eight hundred kroners was made for the further extension of their work. A portion of this was used in printing and circulating temperance literature among the farmers, and in publishing a monthly temperance paper. A prohibitory measure is before the House, asking that in all time to come the manufacture of liquor in the island be prevented. This is a great, statesmanlike measure, before the vested interest of the brewer becomes a political factor in the country. As yet there has never been a brewery or a distillery established on the island, and in all the temperance work the workers have never had the greatest of all obstacles to meet—the powerful influence of the brewer.

The speaker and a large portion of the members of the Althing are strongly in favor of this measure, and it will probably pass at this sitting. As the country is under the rule of Denmark, which largely controls the commercial interests, they are powerless to enact measures prohibiting the importation of intoxicants, but the amount consumed per capita is less than in any other country of the world. The temperance sentiment is so strong that the members of the Good Templars Order hold the balance of power in elections.

There is a strong sentiment abroad in favor of giving additional advantages to women, and strange as it may seem, they already have more civil rights and privileges than the women of some lands which claim for themselves to be ahead in all progressive movements. A bill has just passed the Upper and Lower Houses and is probably on board this steamer with us to be signed by the King of Denmark, making women eligible to election on county and parish boards. There is little hope that the bill will receive the signature of the King, for that would place the women of Iceland a step in advance of the women of Denmark.

The Lutheran church is established throughout the island, and is the state church. In the northern capital we took the regular service of the pastor, it being the first time a woman has ever preached in Iceland.

At the capital, Reykjavik, the hospitality of the people was unbounded, and when we were about to leave, the temperance members of the Althing, including the speaker, gave a large banquet. Covers were laid for sixty, and the leading, influential people of the city were present. This took place in the Temperance Hall. It is the only hall in the city. Every nook and corner was draped with flags, banners and bunting, and flowers were woven into all sorts of fantastic shapes. In this northern latitude, where flowers can only be brought to perfection by the greatest care, every one must have sacrificed her pet plant and choicest bloom to contribute to the holiday attire of the hall. In the center of the stage was a draped desk, on which two candles on brass sticks helped to lighten up the scene.

When we had formed a line the band played a march, and a member of the Althing, the Bishop of Iceland and I led the way. The tables were most beautifully laid. Each napkin contained a buttonhole bouquet, and around each of our plates forget-me-nots and pansies formed a semi-circle. The most striking feature of the gathering was the unique dress of the women. The dress itself is black, and relieved only by a bright apron and tie, and the plaits of soft hair, with the queer little caps, made a picture worthy of a painter's brush.

Among the toasts proposed was one to the W. W. C. T. U., which was ably responded to by Miss Shaffner. The Bishop proposed one to the Grand Lodge of Iceland, the auditor to the ministers of Iceland, one-fifth of whom are total abstainers, and the last toast was to "Our native land." After three hours at the table we went to the lower hall where the proceedings were most informal, the band played, a number of the young people sang the national songs, and finally the speaker went to the platform and made a speech, followed by the ministers, editors, poets and different officials, and thus closed one of the most unique gatherings that I have ever attended.

When the local W. C. T. U. was formed the president and officers planned a picnic for us. Instead of going by pony back as is the usual custom, we crossed the bay to a small island about one hour's ride from the main land. This island is an old, historical spot full of interest. The spacious house has stood for nearly one hundred years, having been built as the residence for the governor, and an old church completes the large buildings on the island, there being beside only stables and small buildings attached to the farm. The ladies served coffee to us on the lawn in front of the house. While we were enjoying the repast the rain began to fall and the farmer kindly invited us to the house. We assembled in the drawing-room where we joined in singing. And here also the ladies spread the long table for dinner, at the close of which we joined in wishing great success to the work newly undertaken in the island. This I thought I could foresee as I looked into the earnest faces of the noble women before me who made up the membership of the young society.

It is a pretty custom of these people when guests are leaving to form an escort and accompany them some miles on their way. When the moment of our departure came, friends to the number of twenty-five mounted on the little Icelandic ponies gathered on the green in front of the government house to be photographed and then escorted us on our way. About fifteen miles from the city they gathered about us and sang their national hymn to the tune of "America," after which three cheers were given to the American visitors. In reply we gave three lusty cheers for the friends of Iceland and started on our long journey for the north.

The journey from the South to the North country is by no means an easy one, and in taking it one must be prepared to put up with more or less discomfort. In the interior everything must be brought on pony back, often over mountains and through rivers from the sea. This makes it absolutely impossible for the farmers of limited means to obtain the real comforts of life. But such as they have they freely give to travelers. Of all people in the world I would say there are none who can outdo the Icelanders in hospitality, and while we suffered more or less discomforts for lack of accommodations, for there are no hotels in the whole journey, we felt the spirit in which the best on the farm was given us, and this in a measure compensated for the lack of comforts. The distances between the farms are often twelve hours long, and twelve hours in the saddle, through rivers, across marshes and over mountains, requires an unusual amount of strength. But after the first week the pleasure of riding begins, and the healthful exercise, pure air and bright sunshine are sure to bring renewed vigor.

We reached the northern capital, Akureyri, after thirty days, all told, in the saddle, thirteen days being spent in the trip from Reykjavik to Akureyri.

In a few days we hope to land safely in Scotland when, to my great regret, Miss Shaffner and Miss Pratt must leave me and proceed to their homes. I shall return to Eastnor Castle for a time; beyond that I have no plans.

Yours in the cause,

JESSIE A. ACKERMANN,
World's Missionary for W. C. T. U.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

MRS. ADDIE NORTHAM FIELDS recently spoke for the third time before the Sunday-school of nearly five hundred members at Uxbridge, near London. Mrs. Fields brings sound sense and thorough experience to her work, and is winning her way among the local auxiliaries of the white-ribbon movement in Great Britain. She has been appointed superintendent pro tem of the department of Loyal Temperance Legion work in the British Women's Temperance Association, and the following resolution has been adopted:

"That the Loyal Temperance Legion work adopted at the last annual Council be recognized as an integral part of our Association, and carried forward with all possible earnestness."

MRS. J. K. BARNEY, of Rhode Island, U. S. A., who has already done much effective work for the National B. W. T. A., is expected in England about the end of the present month; she is engaged to hold missions here during the coming winter. Mrs. Barney is superintendent of prison and police work for the World's W. C. T. U., and has an extensive knowledge of prison work through the experience she has gained during many years of work in this direction. In Concord, Mass., U. S. A., there is a reformatory which has over a thousand inmates, young men from sixteen to thirty years of age. They have a weekly issue called Our Paper, and nearly all the work is done by the prisoners.

The following extract will be of interest because the incident is connected with Mrs. Barney's visit to the prison: "Last Sunday will long be remembered among us as the Sunday the lady preached in the chapel. The lady was Mrs. Barney. The Rev. Mr. Batt introduced her and she opened her talk with Scripture quotations, the cry of the sinner in darkness and the reassuring answer of Christ. It was immediately seen that she had the attention of the audience, not its mere curiosity, but real interest, and if a man moved incautiously in his seat during the service, he received a frown from his neighbor. The lady emphasized the importance of God's help in any great work and especially in the temperance cause. Her whole talk was a grand appeal to each man present, and when she spoke of the empty chair at home, of the love of our dear ones, she was paving the way to our inner hearts. Mrs. Barney has done more good in her short visit than we can imagine. She has the way of breaking into one's heart and convincing, not by arguments, nor do we know how, but it is done."

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

THE TEMPERANCE AND PURITY WORKER IN POLITICS.

The latest from this city of the angels is that the fair sex—too pure to mix in politics—recently descended from their high pedestal, from which (to continue the figure not the fact) they had been watching the struggle between the powers of good and evil, and entered the arena as participants.

It came about thus: Some months ago the Ministerial Association of Los Angeles passed resolutions condemning the "social evil," especially the part so prominently displayed in the eighth ward, and requested the city council to enforce the laws against the same. The eyes of many were thus turned thitherward, and, sad to say, the feet of too many young men. Soon, by order of the council, the rows of one story brick residences (cribs they are now called) which had nightly attracted the passengers on the passing trains, were hid from view by a high board fence—fence No. 1. That was the result after repeated appeals from the ministers, and the subject had been tossed back and forth between the city council and the police commission. The Los Angeles Herald about this time gave its editorial influence in favor of purity and law enforcement.

Another place was found near the city hall where the same vice was boldly practiced in the rear of a saloon, and the council ordered No. 2 fence erected. Literally, the thoughts of our good citizens are very much "on the fence." Then the council ordered fence No. 1 down, but the police commission said, what went up could not come down, as the fence was on private property and had been leased to a bill posting company; so, at present writing, both fences stand.

Nor is that all. Messrs. Shaffer, who own the eighth ward property, leased the same to Mr. Bauer, who naturally applied for and received a license for a saloon behind fence No. 1. One hundred of these two-room cribs at sixty dollars per month, and the revenue of a saloon in the midst is not a small income for one man, especially when protected by city authority.

Such was the state of affairs when the white-ribboners demonstrated their interest in the matter. Fifty members gathered at Temperance Temple on the morning of the 16th inst., (the opening day of the public schools when mothers are so very busy) and after an earnest prayer service, walked two by two to the city hall, two and a half blocks distant. There our number was increased to sixty. The tobacco smoke in the council chamber had almost disappeared when we entered and filled the space allowed guests.

When opportunity was given, Mrs. Mary A. Kenney, county vice-president, introduced Mrs. Mary J. Saxton, superintendent of purity, who presented the resolutions which had been adopted at a called meeting of the city unions. She prefaced them with an explanation brief, but given in a forceful and dignified manner. The other speakers were Mrs. Mary E. Teats, National evangelist of purity, Miss Amanda Way, of Kansas, Miss Emma Harriman, Mrs. Letchworth and Miss Stickney. The resolutions protested against the prison dens and the terrible slavery of the women inmates known as prostitutes, and asked the enforcement of the law respecting such places; also asked that no more saloon licenses be granted; they thanked the council for what they had tried to do, and promised the support of the W. C. T. U. in the enforcement of the laws; also heartily indorsed the city Ministerial union for its efforts to reform the "social evil."

Councilman Kingery responded with the statement that the council was always glad to be in good company, and that they had taken a very decided stand for reform, and moved that the resolutions be accepted and filed, which was done. The papers reported the affair quite fully, but made no editorial comments thereon.

A bit of cheering news comes from San Diego, where the young ladies of the Zlac Rowing Club christened their new boat by using carbonized mineral water, which "will fizz quite as well as champagne." The editorial of the San Diego Sun says: "The new woman in all these matters, wherein she is beginning to take an active part, is breaking away from many traditions little else than stupid, and certainly misleading. All honor to the Zlacs."

The annual school of methods at Long Beach in August was certainly equal to, if it did not excel, as some thought, any previously held. Many of the well-known prominent workers were absent, but the new ones rallied nobly, and took a deep interest in the discussions. The second day's program was given to juvenile work; really, from the cradle to middle life were the interests of the child discussed, and largely from an experimental standpoint.

Very successful was the Demorest contest given the first evening by the state superintendent, Miss Nina C. Cuthbert, and in which eight young girls took part. The second evening was a symposium on "Woman's Place in the Home, the Church and the State," and addresses were made by Mrs. Elmira T. Stephens, Mrs. Della Leach and Rev. McLain.

A W. C. T. U. catechism, conducted by the state president, Mrs. Button, disseminated much information regarding our work by questions and answers. The last evening was given to "A Woman's Council" on the suffrage question, and a very valuable paper on "Woman Before the Law" was given by Mrs. Smith, of Pomona.

Mrs. Mary E. Teats has been with us for a few weeks and everywhere she has spoken has aroused thought upon the important subject of purity, and wonderfully blessed many by her instruction. She held a number of mothers' meetings and spoke in the churches. Being obliged, as well as delighted, to attend the state convention in (northern) California, she went to Santa Barbara where she spoke on Saturday to women only, on Sunday afternoon to men only, and addressed a mixed audience in the evening. She expects to return to us in October when our unions will be in better working order after the summer vacation.

While our eastern friends have suffered from such intense heat, we have enjoyed a summer so cool that winter underwear has not been uncomfortable, and not until the last of September did the heat seem oppressive.

From Santa Ana comes the cry of the saloon-keeper against the law of no-license, and Pasadena has arisen in her righteous wrath and says the laws shall be enforced; therefore druggists and restaurant keepers —Americans and Chinese—are in the toils, and giving an account of the deeds done on the quiet.

One fact is publicly prominent—the hunger the people now have for the gospel. In Los Angeles it is said that twenty open air meetings are held every Sunday, and the crowds that compose the audiences respectfully wait and attentively listen to truths not always couched in oratorical phrases. All honor to the Holy Spirit that pleads with men and women to accept salvation.

VIRGINIA.

YEARLY INGATHERING.

The morning of September 17 beheld representative white-ribboners in different parts of the state leaving their homes and loved ones to go up to the annual W. C. T. U. convention at Charlottesville, there to look back over the doings of the past year and to devise plans for this reform that the homes may be protected from the demon of drink.

In Charlottesville a warm reception was accorded us in a double sense of the word. The scorching heat of the September sun and the warm wave coming as it did so close on the heels of the very cold wave really made some of the delegates sick. But the Charlottesville union, led by that capable woman, Mrs. Wm. C. Payne, had made every arrangement possible for the comfort and pleasure of their guests. Committees were at each railroad station—delegates sent in hacks to the hospitable homes opened to them, and at noon each day a bountiful lunch was served in the basement of the church for those entertained at a distance. The beautiful mountains, the university and Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, were added charms.

Monticello is on a mountain about two miles from Charlottesville. The morning after the convention closed some of the delegates availed themselves of the privilege of visiting this historic place. The majestic residence, the beauty of the grounds and scenery, the quaint "negro quarters," Mr. Jefferson's office, the underground passage way through which Mr. Jefferson escaped when the "Britishers were after him," (so said the negro guide) interested all.

As to the convention itself, it was preceded by the usual prayer and consecration meeting on Tuesday evening, September 17. The sessions were held in the Baptist church, which we were told was the largest church in Charlottesville. The pastor, as well as other ministers of the place, attended many of the business sessions, and followed out the Pauline injunction to "help those women" whenever opportunity offered.

Soon after the convention was called to order, a gavel, belonging to the Charlottesville union and made from wood of the Crusade church, was put into the hands of our state president, Mrs. R. H. Jones, to assist her in maintaining order.

Cordial addresses of welcome were given on behalf of the churches by Rev. W. A. Roush, who seemed proud to tell us that his birthplace and that of the W. C. T. U. are one, Hillsboro; on behalf of the city by the mayor, and on behalf of the W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Wm. C. Payne.

An able response was made by Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson, president of Richmond district W. C. T. U. The annual sermon was preached on Wednesday night by Dr. J. J. Lafferty.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, of Missouri, was in attendance, and held helpful conferences with the Y's. On Thursday evening, Y evening, Miss Hudgins, of the Richmond Y, read an excellent essay, entitled, "Why Should a Young Woman Sign a Total Abstinence Pledge?" Another Richmond Y, Miss Bright, recited "The Bridal Wine Cup."

The address of the evening was made by Miss Carter. Of this address the Daily Progress said: "Whatever views may be personally held by our readers on the question which the fair speaker championed, it must be admitted that she was apt, original and effective in answering the opposition often brought against woman's work in the church and reform efforts."

The reports from the various departments showed advance all along the line. One hundred and eighty dollars has been sent the Temple. Two hundred and ten Demorest medal contests held during the year; more copies of proceedings of last annual meeting sold—and an increase in membership—if not the five hundred desired. The report of the business manager of The Virginia Call, the state paper, showed the paper not only to be self-supporting, but with a balance on hand of thirty-five dollars at the beginning of the year, September 1.

The election of officers resulted in the reëlection of the four general officers, Mrs. R. H. Jones, of Norfolk, president; Mrs. M. P. Fristoe, of Riverton, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, of Lincoln, recording secretary, and Mrs. Jennie McCoy, of Riverton, treasurer. Mrs. J. Tyler Jobson, of Richmond, was elected secretary of the Y Branch.

One of the most pleasing features of the convention was the contest for the Demorest grand gold medal, on Friday night. All did well and received merited applause, but as in all other contests only one could be the winner. The judges decided in favor of Miss Bright, of the Richmond Y, and to her belongs the honor of winning the first grand gold medal in Virginia.

The report of Mrs. J. W. Newton, state organizer, was enthusiastically received and she was unanimously elected for another year.

Each evening the exercises were enlivened by excellent music furnished by a special choir.

It was decided to meet next year, the second week in October, at Luray.

The closing of the convention was much solemnized by tender, loving words from our superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. M. B. Lee, of Richmond, a sister who, as she herself expresses it, is living on "borrowed time."

And so ended the thirteenth annual convention of Virginia W. C. T. U., having had sixty-four officers and delegates in attendance.

TENNESSEE.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Tennessee W. C. T. U. met in Winchester, September 18, 19 and 20. There was a smaller attendance of delegates than usual, but many of the best workers in the state were present, and the occasion was one of delightful interchange of thought and full of the hopeful inspiration that enables us to dare all things, hope all things, and endure all things, that success may come.

We met in the beautiful new Methodist church, whose pastor, Rev. J. M. Jordan, is in full sympathy with our work, and a brother-in-law greatly to be desired, and whose wife is an earnest, faithful working member of the W. C. T. U.

The reports of superintendents of departments showed that much good work had been done in the twenty-two departments of work taken up by our state. Where so much has been done, it is difficult to enter into particulars. The most important work of the year has been the passage of the scientific temperance instruction bill, which has already been reported in these columns. Mrs. Holman's bill, making seduction under promise of marriage a felony, failing of passage through the last legislature, the convention unanimously decided to continue the work until we shall have secured the law.

The report of the superintendent of police matron showed that as yet the only city in our state that has secured the appointment of a police matron is Knoxville, though the other cities are striving faithfully to this end. Memphis petitioned the city council for a police matron through all the various women's clubs in the city, numbering in the aggregate about four thousand women, but their request was not granted. And a pointer in our president's annual address was to this effect: "Do you suppose if those four thousand Memphis women had had the ballot, that those men would have dared refuse their request?" I am very sure they would not.

The kindergarten work in Knoxville is flourishing nicely. Much work along this line has also been done in Nashville.

The juvenile work occupies a large part of the time of several of our best unions, though we all regret with our superintendent that there are so many "childless unions" in our state. Our franchise superintendent is faithful and untiring in her work. Through her, the Maryville union offered two prizes for the best and second best essays on the enfranchisement of woman. The offer only being known a short time before convention, but one or two essays were sent in. So the offer was continued another year, and the essays will be read at our state convention next year. It is hoped that all will consider this offer. Write to Mrs. Mary McTeer, of Maryville, for particulars.

Space does not permit an extended report of the work of the various departments. But much good has been done along many lines.

Mrs. Mary B. Abernethy of Memphis, long our efficient state treasurer, has been appointed our state organizer also. Every union in the state should send for her, for she will do them good. Her terms are within the compass of the poorest union. Write her for particulars. She desires that those wanting her should arrange for her, if possible, before the coldest weather is on us.

The first night of convention we were greeted with words of welcome from Professors Clark and Bledsoe of the Winchester Normal School, by Mr. Banks of the Winchester bar, and by Mrs. T. J. Gamis of the Winchester W. C. T. U. These were happily responded to by Miss Susie Hoyt of McMinnville, in such a delightfully practical manner as to win the hearts of all her hearers.

The second night we had the president's annual address, which was replete with practical suggestions for lines of work for another year, and was altogether one of the most delightful addresses I have ever heard. The third night she delivered another of her stirring lectures.

At the election of officers, Mrs. Meriwether was reëlected president, Mrs. Margaret J. Gardiner, of Nashville, was elected general vice-president, Mrs. Emily M. Settle, of Nashville, corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. A. Gibson, of Athens, recording secretary, Mrs. Mary B. Abernethy, of Memphis, treasurer. Mrs. Holman is continued in the purity department, Mrs. Gardiner in the press department, Mrs. Settle in the legislative department, Mrs. Lewis in the evangelistic and Sunday-school work, Mrs. McTeer in the franchise department. There are others whose names I do not now recall. Invitations were extended to the convention to meet next year in Nashville, by the Nashville Chamber of Commerce, by the Mayor and City Council, by the Board of Public Works, by the Tennessee Centennial Commission, by the Woman's Board of Managers of the Tennessee Centennial Commission, and by the East and Central Nashville unions. Such pressing invitations could not be overlooked, so we meet next year in that city.

An effort will be made to have the minutes out this year sooner than usual. Among the resolutions passed was one denouncing mob law, one urging our members to work for a law making seduction under promise of marriage a felony, one declaring for the ballot for women, and one, "That each one decide that, let others do as they may, she will do her own individual duty, keep up her own individual enthusiasm, and take for her motto, 'each one win one.'"

Before closing I would like to say that an enthusiastic union has been organized at Doyle Station under the auspices of the McMinnville W. C. T. U., by Mrs. Lide Meriwether; president, Miss Minnie Johnston; corresponding secretary, Miss Jennie Austin. The McMinnville union has been doing faithful work along several lines. Among other things they arranged for a franchise lecture by Mrs. Meriwether, as well as the lecture which resulted in the organization of this union. This union is holding a successful series of mothers' meetings, and has done faithful work in the purity department. Knoxville, and some other unions have also sent in good reports of faithful work done along many lines.

News in a Nutshell.

Gold medal contests are frequently reported from district and county conventions. Northumberland county, Pa., at Elysburg, September 19 and 20, held an interesting contest.

In twenty-first annual convention the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. elected Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, a well qualified writer and worker, to the post of District president. Mrs. S. D. La Fetra and Mrs. Jennie Bartlett were elected delegates to the National Convention.

At a county convention held in Plymouth county, Massachusetts, under the auspices of the Y's, in the town of Rockland, a Crusade church gavel was purchased by the Y's and presented to the county with an exceedingly appropriate speech by Miss Helen Burgess of the Y.

At its recent meeting, the Lafayette, Ind., W. C. T. U. held an interesting session and listened to a talk by one of their number, Mrs. H. B. Pierce. She was a member of the World's tour and gave a graphic account of the great London gatherings and subsequent journeyings on the continent.

Miss Mary McDowell, now resident head of the Chicago University settlement near the stockyards, Chicago, asks that any readers of The Union Signal who are in need of help on farm or in country homes, will please communicate with her. Address University Settlement, 4655 Gross Ave., Chicago.

The W. C. T. U. of Independence, Iowa, one of the largest seceding unions, has returned to the white ribbon movement, having voted unanimously to do so at a recent meeting, and from all we can hear "still there are more to follow." They will be affectionately welcomed and we hope to hear from many.

Lordstown, O., royally entertained the twentieth annual gathering of Trumbull county, September 18 and 19, Mrs. M. H. Pierce, presiding. Miss C. S. Burnett, state organizer, assisted greatly in the sessions. Reports were good. The gold medal contest drew a crowded attendance showing the high interest of the community in temperance work.

Miss Charlotte Maxwell, of the St. Botolph Gymnasium, Boston, was the traveling companion of Miss Willard and Miss Gordon on their voyage. Miss Maxwell has been with them and Lady Henry Somerset since last May and has done them all untold good by her instruction in the theory and practice of hygiene as related to scientific exercise. Miss Maxwell teaches Ling's famous system of Swedish gymnastics, and is an accomplished specialist in that and in medical massage.

There was a cheerful and intelligent little band of thirty, besides several visitors and workers in the temperance cause through the six sessions of Kansas sixth district convention, September 11 and 12, reporting what had been done and laying plans for the future. Enthusiasm and interest were shown in every department of the work. The state president, Mrs. L. B. Smith, of Ottawa, occupied one evening with a learned and impressive address on the "American Boy."

Compelled to go south soon after landing from her trip abroad, Miss Belle Kearney, National Y organizer, finds it impossible to return to the north this year as she had planned.

A most creditable and successful venture was that of the Plymouth, Mich., white-ribboners who issued a journal called The Fair Messenger, during the recent fair. There were three issues, each of which was filled with local news items, articles on the W. C. T. U., by good local writers and a large space reserved for business advertisements. Altogether this is a rich and productive way of exploiting our chosen cause, needing but good business management and application to make it successful, anywhere. Mrs. Nettie H. Pelham will give desired information.

The Riverside county W. C. T. U., at the funeral of the late Dr. James M. Sudduth, September 24, lined the grave with the beautiful California pepper tree branches and strewed the mound with roses. They rejoiced to do honor in this way to one of nature's true noblemen, and a brother of the W. C. T. U. Miss Margaret Sudduth and Dr. W. X. Sudduth arrived at their home in time to attend the last sad rites in laying away the body which had encased their father's glorified spirit. The Illinois W. C. T. U. in annual session at Quincy, October 3, sent a telegram of condolence to the bereaved family.

Mrs. Susan Swift Steele who passed away recently at her home in Auburndale, Mass., was one of the charter members of the W. C. T. U., the first ten, who organized the National at Chautauqua in 1874. At the first convention in Cleveland, she was a prominent figure, and later at Baltimore in 1879 was urged to accept the nomination for National president. This she declined, supporting the election of Miss Willard. Mrs. Steele was the leader of many crusades and prayer-meetings in Appleton, Wis., where she resided when the Crusade fire reached the Badger state. She often went before the mayor and council to push the enforcement of the law and into many a saloon to hold prayer-meetings. She was state president from the beginning until 1879. After leaving Wisconsin she declined the nomination for state president of Massachusetts, saying with much wisdom that it was better to leave off public work too early than too late. Her interest never diminished, however, and she entered heartily into the work of the Auburndale W. C. T. U., never once absent from its sessions, and often leading the prayer-meeting at the state headquarters in Boston. Her crossing over was sudden, swift and painless. One writes, "Her life was full of beneficent activities and has affected a multitude of other lives for good. Its going out was so blessed for her. She lay down in peace and comfort. She slept and awoke and was in heaven!"

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

A grand consecration meeting, preparatory to the National Convention, will be held Thursday evening, October 17, in Baltimore. The National superintendent will preside, and prominent ladies in the city, and from our National Union will participate. A testimony meeting will be a feature of the evening. Announcement as to place and hour will be made later. Delegates who arrive Thursday, will inquire of Baltimore ladies the place of this meeting. Let all attend to receive a blessing and be a means of blessing to others.

Elizabeth W. Greenwood,
World's and Nat. Evangelistic Supt.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The latest advices from Baltimore state that the National headquarters this year will be at Music Hall, in a room provided especially for the purpose, and not, as heretofore, in some city hotel. Please bear in mind the name and address of the chairman of the entertainment committee, Mrs. Lewis Dill, Ninth St. and North Ave., Baltimore, Md., and send to her at once the names of delegates appointed and all ex-officio members who will be in attendance upon the Convention.

One state president asks: "Will you please state in The Union Signal when and where the state songs are to be used?" It was Miss Willard's thought, and the suggestion has been acted upon, that these songs should form the closing exercises of the Convention on Wednesday evening; that each state delegation shall rise, the president repeating the motto for the state, and then the delegation unite in singing. Please bear in mind the thought that the songs must not be too lengthy. One, at the outside two verses, is all there will be time for.

The first meeting of the executive committee will be held in the room provided, at 9:30 a. m., October 17. At the same hour the board of superintendents will meet in another room. Will the board of organizers meet me for a few minutes at two o'clock on the afternoon of the 17th? I cannot now announce the room, as the plan of the hall has not yet been given me. The Maryland sisters have been more than hurried in Convention preparations, owing to the fact that the days come so near vacation days and that their own state convention is but just over. Everything is moving on grandly, however, and we shall have without doubt a most inspiring gathering. The meetings of the superintendents in their various departments will be announced upon the program, so far as known. Others will be announced from the platform and on the bulletin, and there will be a blank page provided in the program in which to write down these announcements.

I am asked to announce that the reserved seat tickets which are sold in Music Hall do not hold good for Monday and Tuesday evenings, demonstration and benefit nights. There will not be an admission fee for Monday evening, but the seats will be open to all, and first come will be first served. Whether or not there will be an admission fee on Tuesday evening I am not prepared to announce, as all the details for that evening will be in the hands of the successful state presidents. They will, without doubt, arrange a meeting as soon as they reach Baltimore and all necessary announcements can be made from the platform and the bulletin. Saturday afternoon will be left open for committee meetings and I wish especially to meet the board of organizers at four o'clock on that afternoon, the room to be hereafter announced.

Two exceedingly pleasant features of the Convention will be the presence of Miss Helen Potter, the world-renowned impersonator, and Miss Eva Shontz, who is our white-ribbon orator par excellence. Both will speak on demonstration night, and probably on benefit night.

It is good to know that Miss Willard has arrived in safety, and that she is hard at work with brain and pen, planning for our National feast. She will go to the Pennsylvania convention immediately preceding the National, as Pennsylvania has the high honor of increasing its membership this year by fully two thousand. Three cheers for the Keystone state.

It has been pleasant, even in these busy days, to welcome some of our sisters. Mrs. M. J. Borden, of New Mexico, stopped for a moment on her way East, and Mrs. Grubb, of Missouri, has been in Chicago leading Willard Hall meetings, and filling several other engagements for a day or two past. She spoke in Willard Hall with great acceptability and those who listened to her hope very earnestly that she may return and organize the foreign work in Chicago. Surely no place needs her more.

A GREAT COUGH REMEDY.

Perhaps you may think that Scott's Emulsion is only useful to fatten babies, to round up the angles and make comely and attractive, lean and angular women, and fill out the hollow cheeks and stop the wasting of the consumptive, and enrich and vitalize the blood of the scrofulous and anæmic persons. It will do all this—but it will do more. It will cure a

"Helen," said Mr. Whykins, "what's the difference between a woman and an umbrella?"

"The difference," she answered serenely, "is that a man isn't afraid to take an umbrella with him wherever he goes, and that he doesn't try to conceal the fact that it's above him when the real emergency arrives. That's the principal difference, Henry."

A goat sent by rail from Chicago to Boston was tagged by the owner, "Please pass the butter." The festive animal was consigned to the president of a popular secret society.

An Irish newspaper says: "So long as Ireland was silent under her wrongs England was deaf to her cries."

"Garland" Stoves and Ranges are no higher in price than the worthless imitations. Ask to see them.

"They say it is electricity," said Pat, as he stopped before the incandescent street light; "but I dhon't see how it is they make the hairpin burn in the botthle."

It was a great event for Daisy when her little sister was born. Her delight was unbounded. At the same time she felt a great increase of age and dignity, and announced to her mamma that she no longer wished to be called Daisy but by her own name—Isabel.

"We called you Daisy when you were the baby," said mamma, "because you were so fair and sweet that you reminded us of a daisy. Can you not think of some pretty flower that your little sister resembles?"

Daisy meditated for some time and then gravely replied:

"I think we might call her Currant."

Bray: My dear fellow—two umbrellas! What on earth is that for?

Jay: Why in case I leave one anywhere.

An accidental hitting of the keynote of a familiar phrase caused a little tot to make this funny break: Her mother in hearing her say her prayers, told her to ask the Lord to make her a good girl. "Dear Dod," said the little thing, "pleath try and make me a good girl—and if at firth you don't succeed, try, try again," she unexpectedly added.

The minister was visiting good old Mrs. Black and she was treating him to a first-class meal. Several cats entered the room. "What a lot of them!" said the minister, "do they all belong to you?" "No, no," replied the good old lady, "but many a time I say that all the hungry brutes of the parish come to me seeking a meal of meat," and then she blushed and nearly fainted, and spent an hour in explaining the unfortunate remark.

The youngest member of the family had witnessed a hailstorm for the first time. A few days later a shower of rain began to fall during dinner. The same youngster tried hard to get her mother's attention, which she did finally by patting her upon the cheek and exclaiming: "Stop talking. I want to listen, and see if it is raining hard water."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Home Hints.

Green Corn Pancakes:—One pint green corn, grated, one teacup of flour, one-half a teacup of milk, a little melted butter, salt and pepper to your taste. Fry in lard.

Lemon Cake:—One pound of flour, one pound of sugar, three-fourths pound of butter, seven eggs, rind of two lemons, grated, being careful to get only yellow part of the skin, juice of one lemon; add the lemon last.

In a written description of a fine modern house just built occur these words: "And they didn't forget that the servants might enjoy a fine room, for they have provided them with a room as large as their own, with plenty of light, a large closet, toilet and bath." These good people, who thus apply the Golden Rule, have done much toward solving for themselves "the vexed problem."

Stuffed Peppers:—Get large ball peppers. Cut around the stem with a penknife, remove it, and take out all the seeds. Wash the peppers in cold water. Fill with the following mixture: Two quarts of finely chopped cabbage, a cupful of white mustard seed, three tablespoonsful of celery seed, two tablespoonsful of salt, half a cup of grated horseradish. Replace the piece cut out, tie with coarse thread, pack in a jar and cover with cold vinegar.

The New York Sun, many years ago, obtained from an eminent doctor a prescription for the prevention and cure of cholera. No one who has this by him and takes it in time will ever have the cholera. It is also an excellent remedy for ordinary summer complaints, diarrhea, colic, etc. Take equal parts of tincture of cayenne pepper, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose fifteen to thirty drops in a little cold water, according to age and violence of symptoms, repeated every fifteen or twenty minutes until relief is obtained. Cut this recipe out and paste it in your collection of home remedies, or better yet, have a bottle of it prepared and keep in the house. Its prompt use may save some beloved life. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge carried this preparation with her for years.

A selected oyster or clam shell, carefully cleaned, the halves joined and glued together so that they lie wide open, makes a very pretty pin or jewel tray. A coat or two of liquid gold or silver will add to the pleasing effect, if either of these finishes are used for other articles on the toilet table. To make a more complete receptacle for jewelry, line one shell with a bit of plush or velvet, and fit a small cushion of the same into the other half for stick pins.

A sauce pan of boiling water placed in the oven where bread and rolls are baking, will by the steam, make the crust smooth and tender. A very small dish of cold water placed in an oven which proves too hot for your baking, will moderate the temperature and prevent too rapid browning. When baking open and close the oven door as gently as possible. A sudden jar often causes heavy cake or bread.

German toast.—Cut white bread in rather thick, smooth slices. Beat two eggs until light, add one pint of milk, a little salt, beating thoroughly. Grease a hot griddle with butter. Dip the bread in the egg and milk. Fry on both sides until a delicate brown.

Just about now very many will be looking over the supply of winter hat trimmings to see what can be used, and so reduce the millinery bill. Perhaps a lot of straightened out ostrich plumes and tips may look so hopeless as to tempt one to throw them away. It is always worth while to try renovating them. First, give them a thorough dusting. Have a teakettle full of boiling water, shake the feathers vigorously through the escaping steam, being careful that they do not get too damp. This restores brilliancy if the color has become dull. When perfectly dry take a silver fruit knife, and beginning with the feathers nearest the quill, take a small bunch between thumb and finger and draw gently over the blade of the knife until they curl as closely as desired. Follow this process up each side of the tip. Take a very coarse comb, comb out carefully and you have your plume as good as ever. If after each wearing you subject your feathers to a little heat it will preserve their freshness and beauty.

OCTOBER BIBLE READING

is written by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, which is saying enough to insure a wide circulation among unions, the writer being well-known and well-loved by white-ribboners from the beginning. The subject is

Requisites for Workers,

and like all Mrs. Henry's Bible expositions is replete with spiritual food, and the inspiration which strengthens aspiration and results in more faithful service for the Master. It reveals in every word the clear vision of one who walks closely with God and will come as a message of practical uplift to every worker. It is a most timely reading and might be used most helpfully in connection with our National Day of Prayer, October 3.

October Responsive Reading,

by Mrs. Mary T. Lovell, National superintendent of the mercy department, is a presentation of practical methods for carrying on the work of this department in local unions. It answers the question, How are Bands of Mercy in line with temperance work, suggests the best way to conduct them, outlines a program for meetings, gives information concerning supplies, in fact, the reading is a most practical help and will doubtless result in giving added impetus to the work of the mercy department throughout the country. We hope it will be very generally used by local unions.

The time for the fall conventions approaches, when state and district unions will be preparing for the musical part of their programs. For good and appropriate music send a two-cent stamp to the W. T. P. A. and obtain its complete list of temperance and prohibition music.

Reduced Rates Account Meeting

NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

BALTIMORE, MD. October 18 to 23.

For the convention above named, a rate of one fare and a third, on the certificate plan, for the round trip, has been authorized.

Tickets will be sold over the PENNSYLVANIA LINES, good going as early as three days before the convention convenes; good to return any time up to three days after it adjourns.

The reputation of the PENNSYLVANIA LINES is so well known that it is superfluous to say anything in its favor further than that it is the shortest route from Chicago to Baltimore, and furnishes unequaled advantages for a comfortable and enjoyable journey.

They have four trains daily from Chicago to Baltimore, leaving the Union Passenger Station, corner Canal and Adams streets, as follows:

10:30 A. M., 3:00 P. M., 5:30 P. M., and 11:30 P. M.

Arrive at Baltimore: 12:20 P. M., noon, 6:15 P. M., 4:20 P. M. and 6:20 A. M., respectively.

Pullman sleeping and dining cars on all trains.

A large number of delegates have already signified their intention to go over the PENNSYLVANIA LINES, and have reserved sleeping-car accommodations.

It is probable that a special sleeping-car will be set apart for the exclusive use of delegates, to run through to Baltimore on one of the above trains, to be named hereafter.

Sleeping-car accommodations will be reserved on application to Ticket Agents of PENNSYLVANIA LINES, 248 Clark Street, or Union Passenger Station, corner Canal and Adams Streets, Chicago.

Any further information desired will be cheerfully furnished by

H. R. DERING, A. G. P. A.,
248 Clark Street, Chicago.

The best trains for Baltimore are those leaving in the afternoon which pass through the beautiful mountain scenery by daylight. Enthuse your neighbor and bring as many visitors as possible to Convention.

RAILROAD RATES

TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION,

Baltimore, Md., October 18-23, 1895.

The committee on transportation had hoped, yea, had dared to believe, that this year they might secure the much to be desired concession of one fare for the round trip, not upon the ground of numbers, but of the increasing importance and influence of these yearly conventions. Correspondence, personal interviews have availed naught; the maximum of attendance is the only point of consideration; the fiat of the secretary of the Trunk Line Association, in whose jurisdiction the Convention is to be held, has gone forth, and the lowest possible rate is one and one-third fare upon the certificate plan.

Railroad Associations.

The railroad associations which have already granted the one and one-third rate, are the Trunk Line, Central Traffic and Southern Passenger Association. The Western Lines Passenger Associations and New England Passenger Committees have the matter under consideration, and it is believed will grant the concession, so that a uniform rate upon the certificate plan will doubtless be secured in all territory covered by the various associations.

The Certificate Plan.

The certificate plan makes necessary the obtaining a certificate from the agent of whom the ticket to Baltimore is purchased, which certificate must be duly signed and stamped by him, indorsed at the meeting in Baltimore by Caroline F. Grow, and viséd by special agent of the association at that point.

Owing to the meeting of the National Purity Association to be held the same week in Baltimore, the tickets will cover the dates from October 14–23, and may be purchased THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) prior to October 14. Certificates will not be honored unless presented within THREE DAYS (Sunday excepted) after the adjournment of the meeting.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. In such a case the ticket agent can inform a delegate of the nearest important station where they can be obtained, a local ticket should be purchased to such station, and through ticket and certificate there obtained.

Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

Tickets are available for continuous fare only, and no refund of fare will be made on account of any person failing to obtain a certificate.

It would be well for delegates to give ticket agents such timely notice of their intentions that through tickets and certificates may be ready when required.

Those wishing to avail themselves of the concessions should be present at the offices for certificates and tickets at least thirty minutes before the departure of train. As members arrive their certificates should be deposited with me, so as to be ready for special agent upon his arrival.

Put up in 1 oz. and 2½ oz. jars. Price, 25c. and 50c. each.

SEE WHAT THEY SAY:

I have used your flavoring powders in my home for several months, and I find them excellent in flavor, and economical because of their concentrated strength—in fact, the perfection of flavorings. Every good W. C. T. U. woman will hail the advent of a non-alcoholic flavoring to take the place of the extracts that we know contain alcohol. Your flavorings are so daintily put up that they need only to be known to come into general use.

HELEN M. BARKER.

I feel that too much can hardly be said in favor of your flavoring powders. Their strength and delicacy of flavor, as well as the absence of all injurious substances makes them a great accessory in the realm of "pure food"; while their freedom from the poison of alcohol makes them a valuable ally to the cause of temperance. Personally, I feel deeply grateful to you for your work, and am sure the W. C. T. U. as a whole has only to know of these flavorings to adopt them enthusiastically.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

It gives me pleasure to speak a word of commendation for your flavoring powders. They are superior to anything I have ever used in the way of a flavoring extract, besides being free from the pernicious flavor of alcohol, in which all extracts are steeped.

Sincerely yours,

MATILDA B. CARSE.

I have used the flavoring powders with great satisfaction. I am confident there is a saving of fifty per cent over the liquid extracts. Besides, the genuine delicate aroma and flavor of each article is much better preserved.

Yours,

ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D.,
Author of "Tokology."

I have tested the "Consolidated Flavoring Powders," and find them satisfactory and have no hesitation in recommending them to others.

Very sincerely yours,

MARY M. HOBBS,
Member Board of Trustees National Temperance Hospital.

I have received the flavoring powders, and am delighted with them. Everyone thinks they are fine.

MRS. R. H. JONES,
President Virginia W. C. T. U.

Your exquisite flavoring powders are the best I have ever seen.

HENRIETTA L. MONROE,
President Ohio W. C. T. U.

Your flavoring powders are perfectly delightful, and I will never use any other so long as I can get them. Will also show and recommend them to my housekeeping friends, and do all in my power to increase their use in this community.

LIDE MERIWETHER,
President Tennessee W. C. T. U.

I have used your flavoring powders, and like them very much. They ought to be used in preference to the liquid extracts. I believe they are better in every way.

MARY READ GOODALE,
President Louisiana W. C. T. U.

I am very glad to send you—unsolicited—a statement regarding your flavoring powders. I have tested them most carefully and am very much pleased with them. Every white-ribboner, every mother who desires to place the best food before her children, will hail with joy a flavoring that does not contain alcohol. I hope they will be on sale in every town.

Your flavorings are so much more convenient for use that those who "do not see any harm in using extracts that contain alcohol" will prefer them.

Cordially,

VIE H. CAMPBELL,
President Wisconsin W. C. T. U.

It gives me great pleasure to recommend the Consolidated Flavoring Powders, because they do not contain alcohol, and because I have found them, after using, superior to other flavoring powders or extracts, both in quality and strength. Women can find pleasant and profitable employment in handling these flavoring powders, and at the same time advance the cause of temperance and prohibition in aiding to bring in non-alcoholic cookery.

L. B. SMITH,
President Kansas W. C. T. U.

I have used your goods and prefer them to any other flavorings. Enclosed find an order.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. B. LAYTHE SCOVELL,
Editor Minnesota White Ribboner.

We find the extracts truly delicious, fresh and strong. For home-made candies they ought to be the best in the market. One trial will be all the proof necessary.

Our ice cream for dinner, and cake, were added proof of the delicacy and richness of your flavoring powders.

Yours sincerely,

MARY C. UPHAM.

The Flavoring Powders of the Consolidated Perfume Company of Chicago, Ill., have been thoroughly tested now for some months. They are pronounced by our household and our neighbors as the best they have ever used. They are superior in flavor, beautiful in appearance, and economical in use.

The Victorian Alliance of Australia has a Picture and Lantern Mission, instituted in May, 1891, for the purpose of disseminating temperance truths. This mission is carried on by voluntary workers, who ask only a collection when the lantern is used to defray necessary expense.

The Church of the Open Bible, organized in Cleveland, O., about a year ago, is the first prohibition church in that city. It has no creed or form but a simple statement of faith in God and Christ, the total abstinence pledge, and a political prohibition pledge. Non-residents who desire to affiliate with this church can do so by addressing Rev. Wm. H. Guy, pastor, 59 Rosewood avenue, Cleveland.

At the close of the sessions of the Palmyra, Mo., Presbytery, September 19, 1895, the chairman of its committee on temperance, Rev. T. H. There could be no stronger indication of the value set upon home interests and the development of every phase of home life on the part of the members of the National Council of Women of the United States than the fact that among the cabinet positions, including religion, education, art and literature, philanthropy and moral reform, is one whose object is solely to consider the province and the interests of the home. Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, the woman at the head of this department, well known as she is for her work in lines touching the general welfare of women, is none the less known as mistress of the lovely home whose hospitable doors are always open to the world's workers, and as a most perfect mother to the little household group that is growing up therein.

There were stirring times in London temperance circles at the celebration of the twenty-seventh anniversary of Good Templary in England on September 15, 16 and 17, the Metropolitan Templar Federation making the arrangements. On the Sunday a large number of gospel temperance meetings were held in the various parks. On Monday a special session of the Grand Lodge of England was held in the library of the Memorial Hall, attended by nearly all the Grand Lodge officers and other Grand Lodge officers from India, Australia, etc., the Metropolitan Executives and several hundred Grand Lodge members. A public demonstration followed in the Great Hall, when Mr. W. S. Caine presided and spoke, together with Councillor Malins, G. C. T.; Mr. Guy Hayler, G. Co.; Dr. F. R. Lees, P. G. C. T.; and Mr. J. H. Raper; solos being sung by Miss Winifred Parker, and choruses by the Wilmington Jubilee Choir of colored singers. Mr. Caine, in opening, remarked that there now existed in the United Kingdom about four thousand adult and junior branches of the order, with about two hundred thousand members, and the order existed in one hundred countries and states, having a total of over half a million members in twelve thousand branches, meeting weekly. On the Tuesday a special thanksgiving service was held for the order in St. Paul's Cathedral, to which the members went in procession from the Thames Embankment. Canon Hull, of Northampton, preached the temperance sermon.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

St. Louis has organized a Civic Federation.

Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, has been conquered by the French.

A tidal wave destroyed a portion of LaPaz, a city of lower California, last week.

Father Mathew day was observed Thursday, October 10, by followers in many places.

The Illinois grand jury has convicted only one of several indicted corrupt state legislators.

The Woman's National Council concluded its week of meetings at the Atlanta Exposition, Saturday.

Seven hundred Armenians are reported missing, killed or wounded as the result of the recent riot in Constantinople.

A dispatch from Yokohama announces an uprising in Corea during which the queen is reported to have been murdered.

Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs in session at Peoria, has decided to unite on a plan for the improvement of the public schools.

The old Liberty Bell, on its arrival in Atlanta last week, was welcomed by a large concourse of people who listened to eloquent patriotic addresses by the mayor of Philadelphia and the governor of Georgia.

At the Congregational Triennial Council in Syracuse, N. Y., Friday, a plan was proposed to relieve the heavy burden of debt on the six missionary institutions by pledging each church member to give one cent a day.

MOST cheering news of increase in membership comes from our National treasurer. Her annual report shows the amount of dues received for the eleven months of the present year to be greater than that received for the thirteen months of last year. It will be remembered that the annual Convention of '94 was later and that of '95 is earlier than usual. Mrs. Barker says that another month's time would have greatly augmented the receipts of the current year from this source.

EIGHT states have increased their membership this year by five hundred or more, viz., Pennsylvania, New York, Louisiana, Maine, Iowa, Connecticut, Oregon and California. The presidents of these states will arrange the program for Benefit Night at the Convention, October 22.

THE temperance resolutions passed by the General Association of Congregational churches of Minnesota "especially commends as worthy of careful consideration the effort to secure local option by counties." That is, they would have people—men people—vote as to whether the national crime (the legalizing of drunkard-making) shall be committed in their respective communities. We hope to hear that the National Council of this church, which is now holding its triennial meeting in Syracuse, has taken more advanced ground—the true, Christian temperance ground of total prohibition.

---

A GLANCE over the program of the National Convention reveals a most tempting bill of fare. The cover is in itself a promise of the good things contained therein. The front page gives graceful recognition of the fact that our National anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," began its patriotic career in the "Monumental city," the design being the American flag surmounted by a bar of the music. Upon the back is a new contribution to W. C. T. U. hymnology, "The White Ribbon Star Spangled Banner," by Kate Lunden, that gifted Swedish woman who writes inspired English. The words will be given in a later issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, and we hope it may become the grand rallying song of our organization.

THE Iowa convention, which closed a three days' session Friday evening, October 11, was one of the most successful ever held in that state. One hundred and eighteen delegates were present, and the harmony which prevails among the workers was indicated by the fact that all the old officers were reëlected. The report of the treasurer showed a good balance on hand, and those of other officers were most encouraging. The presence of two National organizers lent additional inspiration to the meeting, a National evangelist, Mrs. A. M. Palmer, whom Iowa is fortunate enough to call her own, contributed to the uplift of the occasion, and ex-Gov. St. John delivered one of his stirring addresses. It was decided to start a W. C. T. U. paper at once, with Mrs. L. D. Carhart as editor and business manager. The marked onward movement of the work in Iowa is largely due to the masterly leadership of its president, Mrs. Marion H. Dunham reinforced by a corps of faithful workers. In the face of many difficulties they have been unswerving in their loyalty to the white-ribbon cause, and their faith in God, supplemented by hard work, is bearing much fruit.

ONCE more we have to record the promotion of a comrade. Our National superintendent of the department of the Relation of Temperance to Capital and Labor, Mrs. Sarah G. V. Emery, of Lansing, Mich., passed away on the morning of October 10. Her illness had been a lingering and painful one, and the call to "come up higher" was welcomed as a happy release from the worn out tabernacle of the flesh. Mrs. Emery was one of those tireless workers whose name has echoed throughout the land. As early as 1868, when reform movements were in their infancy, she began writing upon temperance and suffrage. In 1880 she became interested in financial reform, and since that time that subject was her specialty. Her published works, "Seven Financial Conspiracies" and "Imperialism in America," have had a phenomenal sale, and the Corner-Stone, an eight-page monthly, started in 1893, already has a circulation in nearly every state and territory. For the sake of those who are left, and for the sake of the work she loved so well, we mourn the departure of this friend and white-ribbon leader, but we rejoice with her in the joy which is now hers.

To our great regret Mrs. Mary A. Livermore will not be able to be with us at the Baltimore Convention as we hoped. She writes: "I must leave for home October 17 You know the whole state is up and at work over the 'Referendum' which gives women a chance to vote at the state election, November 5. There were twenty-one meetings in towns and cities in our neighborhood last night. I spoke every night last week, every night this week and every afternoon except two,—I, a woman almost seventy-four years old! I am to attend a great mass-meeting October 18, and a still bigger one in my own town, over which I am to preside, October 19."

AT the closing meeting of the Convention, Wednesday night, October 23, each state delegation, as its name is called, will rise, give its motto and unite in singing a song especially composed for the occasion. Many of these songs have been set to music belonging in a special manner to the respective states. For instance, "Suwanee River," for Florida, and "My Old Kentucky Home," for Kentucky. Indiana will sing to the tune of "Annie Laurie," Kansas to that of "John Brown," Minnesota to the grand old tune, "Zion," and North Carolina will give "The Old North State." Illinois has chosen the music given to it Columbian Exposition year — "Baby Mine," with the refrain "Illinois." This unique and inspiring feature of the twenty-second National Convention will, we hope, become a regular part of future programs.

THE prospects of the admission of women to the General Conference of the M. E. Church brighten daily, and we have this testimony from our English coadjutors as to the same great controversy there: "Like every other form of slavery, sex slavery dies hard, and in its final struggles assumes many a pious alias, but those who have realized the essential characteristics of Christianity cannot acquiesce in a decision which, on a living issue, formally reduces the gospel to the level of Mohammedanism and Hinduism. Resolutions will be proposed in the May synods of next year, urging the conference to remove the ban which it has placed upon women." This was defeated by only eighteen majority in the Wesleyan Conference; at least it was shelved till it comes up again through legislation by the synods. If wide-spread agitation continues this justice to women need not be long deferred, but at present the law in force is that "no chairman of any synod shall receive the nomination of a woman representative until the conference shall have determined by legislative action to admit women as representatives, and until such new legislation has been submitted for approval to the district synods."

IT seems certain as we go to press that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons performance will take place on Arkansas soil. The sporting element of Hot Springs, headed by its mayor and city attorney, have, they believe, made all the necessary arrangements for the fight in that city. Governor Clarke expresses himself as personally opposed to slugging matches, but believes the state will "have to put up with" this one. The worst feature about it, to him, appears to be not the brutality of such exhibitions, per se, but the fact that the pugilists "come to them after being run out by the Mexicans and Indians." It must not be taken for granted, however, that Hot Springs represents the state in this matter. The leading Democratic newspaper of Arkansas says that the governor, in intimating that the legislature, if called together, would not stop the fight, shows he knows nothing of the temper of the people. "If given an opportunity," it declares, "the Arkansas assembly would beat the record of the Texas legislature by at least thirty minutes," and it further says that the city council of Hot Springs ought to impeach those officials who have conspired to violate laws which they have sworn to enforce—a sentiment we fully indorse.

OCTOBER RECKONING.

BY MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

Studying out the problem
O'er which nations blunder,
With a strength of purpose
Ages cannot sunder,
Are the Union soldiers;
While, in crimson raiment,
Ripe October offers
Earth her gold in payment.
Gold for all the green leaves,
Fruit and grain attendant;
Gold for power existing
And for bloom resplendent;

Settlement of nature
With no marked delay.
Time and progress pause not
In their onward way.
Pattern we, and reckon
March of volunteers;
Summing up the service
As in other years;
Gathering in Convention
For a grand review,
Golden fruit we offer
And our vows renew.

RECLAIMED.

BY SUSANNA B. B. MERRIFIELD.

"If I had known all this I could not have married you. Oh, why did I do it!" was the despairing cry of a young wife.

"You did know it. You knew I liked wine and you never said one word against it before we were married. You can't put a bridle on me. I'm my own master yet, and shall be for some time, I fancy!" angrily retorted the husband. He slammed the outside door and went down the steps. He had gone, perhaps not to return till daylight.

Margery Brooks was a cherished niece, her parents having died some years before. Her two aunts had lavished everything upon her. She was loved and sought by all who knew her. She met Henry Morris in Paris. He had just come into possession of a large property so there was no drawback to his enjoyment of the gay capital. Careless and happy, agreeable, fine looking and more than all, most devoted to her, it was plain from the beginning that Margery had met with the ideal of her young dreams. In a few months after her return these two young persons united their destinies and went to their luxurious home under the most auspicious circumstances.

The conversation just recorded occurred two years after that time, and as one may know this could not have been the first reproach. Gradually the breach had widened and husband and wife had come to open dispute. His Sundays were passed now on the bay with his shooting club and the evenings were rarely spent at home. He often returned towards morning flushed, talkative and unsteady of step. That morning as her husband closed the door the unhappy woman threw herself upon a sofa in despair.

"Oh, we are so far apart, and it is only two years since we could not live without each other! I want to love him. Can my love be dead? I have no influence over him. What can I do? How can I reclaim him? He is mine. I will save him, but how?" It was a long, desperate day, but at last a faint gleam of light shone in upon her darkness. She said aloud, "I must be taught; I am so helpless!"

Mrs. Morris calmed herself by a strong effort and made her way to the church where she had been married. Dr. Borden had just begun his sermon as she entered. She slipped quietly into a seat and was soon lost in the associations of the place. It was Dr. Borden who had pronounced them husband and wife, and she remembered how sweet his voice had sounded to her then.

A deep silence in the church brought her to herself. The preacher paused, and leaning over the desk, with folded hands, said, "My friends, charity suffereth long and is kind. God is the all-good. He cannot give us anything that is not good. He is the all-love. Talk with Him. Put away human reasoning and live in His love. Are you not one with Him? Talk with God. Would you continue to beg of your earthly father if he offered you all that he had, and told you it was yours? Would you not rather take and use? Every one of you is God's dear child. Have you a burden? Talk with God. Are you weak? Tell it to Him. Let His love into your hearts, oh, my friends! I must repeat—let His love in!"

These were words of life to the tempest-tossed wife. She went back to her lonely room and it was morning before the conflict was stilled.

"If I am God's child and may reflect Him as Dr. Borden said, then I may have love and strength. Yes, strength to bear with and reclaim my husband. Can I act this God-part and not self? Will I?"

It was late when she awakened. Her husband had not come. She made her usual toilet and went down to breakfast. A note lay on her plate. The contents ran thus: "I am going down the bay for shooting, I don't know when I shall get back. HENRY."

A week passed. Henry had not come. On the last evening of the second week she sat alone in her own parlor up stairs. She heard a step at the outside door, then a moment later someone trying to turn the key. Knowing too well what it meant, she ran down the stairs and opened the door, her heart beating so loudly she thought she could not speak. In reality there was no need of a word from her for her dread was sadly realized.

She helped her husband up the stairs, and while she was attending to the comforts he needed he was utterly unconscious that any one was about him, and was soon asleep.

Then it was time for the inner voice to speak, falteringly at first, it is true. "Think of the erring one as a child of God," did not Dr. Borden say so, "and the good within him will respond to love."

Placing a pitcher of water and a glass beside him, his slippers and dressing gown on a chair near the bed, she went into the adjoining room and closed the door.

When the clock on the mantel was pointing to the morning hours, the husband awoke. He drank greedily of the water and then lay back and thought. He had a dim, stupid recollection of what had happened the evening before, and a certain feeling of contrition took possession of him. He would find his wife, and if she reproached him he could defend himself, he felt sure of that.

Putting on his dressing gown and slippers, he opened the parlor door. In the dim light he saw her leaning back in her study chair, her face upturned and pale as marble, her eyes closed. Her lips moved. He had to listen, for he could not move one step beyond.

"Father, we are both Thy children," she prayed. "Give me grace to forgive him. Oh, if Thou lovest me, I can love him with Thy blessed love." A silence, and then,—"Thou knowest it all. I am so helpless, but I lay it down before Thee; Thou hast compassion and love."

He heard no more, but closing the door as softly as he had opened it he went back to his room.

"Beast, brute that I am, not fit to live!" he cried aloud. "And this is what I have brought upon her! What did I promise when I made her my wife? I have not fulfilled one condition, not one!" he moaned.

Thoroughly aroused now, penitent and stricken, he knelt by the bed and buried his face in his hands.

An hour passed, and another. New thoughts were battling for place in that man's mind. He saw now that he had starved his wife for the love she had wanted; that he had made her suffer cruelly. What a vision her prayer had opened to him!

"How can I repair this wrong?" he questioned over and over. "Ah, there is another part to us all. I have a soul, and God can make me free." He knelt a long time, and when he rose he said quietly, "I will go to her now."

He walked with a firm step, as a man who had come to his right estate at last, and opened her door. A look of glad surprise overspread the face of the young wife, and she rose to meet him. Taking her hand and tenderly pressing a kiss to her forehead, he tried to speak, but words failed. It was a sacred silence, for spirit was answering to spirit in renewed vows of love and fidelity; it was the true marriage at last.

ANOTHER VIEW OF IT.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"What I want," said a voice from the back of the room into which the twilight was creeping, "is another committee; a committee for the suppression of the 'Woman's Column' in our newspapers."

"My dear Mrs. Talbot," said the chairman, "you always say something that we want to hear, but this is really—"

"Very objectionable, I know, if you take just the sound of it, but I have been thinking till I really can't keep still any longer, and as this is the new committee on household economics and we are through with all the detail business and the plans for the club year, I don't see why I shouldn't mention something that is calculated to send anybody's plans to the four winds; that is, if they follow directions. Listen to me and give me your very bottom sentiments as to this latest thing. You know you do not need to go home for at least fifteen minutes, and this is vital."

"It always is," laughed the chairman, "but we will undertake the time if you will do the talking. Who would advertise our work if we did suppress according to your demand just now?"

"Partial suppression, I ought to have said," and the speaker drew her chair a little nearer the crackling wood fire on the broad hearth, and looked about the circle of five who met her dancing eyes with an answering twinkle. They had served together on many committees; each knew the working fibre of all the rest, but none of them were ever quite prepared for what might come from this most distinctive little lady known as "the explosive member."

"What it all seems to me," she went on, taking a newspaper clipping from her pocket book, "is the suppression of the kitchen, that is, the flat kitchen. It seems that this particular editor of this rather more than usually insane column has been giving her views on light housekeeping. She is the same one who last winter advised all women who do their own work and dislike being caught in working dress, to dress fully in the morning in their usual afternoon rig and then put on over it a large loose wrapper to be flung off whenever the bell rings. The loss of nervous force in having to do work under such conditions she said nothing about. Now she comes to the front with directions for securing a boudoir or small snuggery during the intervals of getting meals, and this is how she does it.

"The kitchen in question is a tiny one in a small flat occupied by three people. It has the usual set tubs, two of them at the longest side of the room, next to them sink, then range, and a small gas stove. Over the tubs is a window, and another at the end of the room beyond the stove. By the window is the iron door opening into the dumb waiter shaft. On the opposite side is a table and a wire safe, with various other kitchen appurtenances. In short, as is the case in flats, every foot of space is utilized. Luckily for her purposes, the refrigerator and the little store closet over it are built in the passage way. Now hear what she says: 'Screens and draperies are the clever woman's way out of all difficulties. All you need is a light, wooden frame made to fit the top of your sink. The tubs can be draped in a moment with a long portiére of such color as you may choose, and some material of the same shade must be employed in making a covering for the sink which gives you at once a standard for a bust or what you choose, while the top of the tubs can receive books or what you will. A screen will perfectly conceal the stoves and the boiler can have a slip cover of harmonious or contrasting color, as desired. For the other things suitable covers can be made. When the morning meal is over, it will be a simple matter to transform the little room at once into a pleasant study or boudoir, and I should advise having the articles used in this way near at hand, to save steps.'

"That last touch is the crowning outrage," said the speaker, after a moment in which she clinched a small fist as if prepared for immediate battle. "Having arranged for an amount of work that, multiplied by three hundred and sixty-five, will mean days of toting assorted sizes of bric-a-brac back and forth, she sees the need of a gleam of common sense at some point, and so adds her hint as to saving time. It is not a joke, for I know the woman. It is only one more proof of the absolute density of perception in the type of woman who can write this stuff and the type who take it seriously. Do you suppose there is a man alive, doing the kind of work a kitchen means, from the chef in a buffet car to one on any great steamer, who would not count the man a lunatic who talked to him about draping his sink or screening his range?

"That is one phase. There is another that means a far worse state of things. The kitchen is the home of smells. They may be clean ones and in a well-kept kitchen they are, but dinners leave their trace, and so do washing and the other cleaning processes. The kitchen needs every ray of sunshine, every breath of air that can reach it, and here we have an organized attempt to shut out both. Everything that should be opened is covered, and the fabrics used must soon simply reek with exhalations. That means microbes and always more microbes; a microbe factory in your own set tubs. It is what our English friends would call 'nahsty,' and they would be right. And it is all in one of our best weeklies! Doesn't the managing editor know any better?"

The chairman laughed but she also sighed. "I have been a newspaper woman myself," she said, "and I grieve to say that something new is the demand so much more often than something rational that I do not doubt this managing editor thought this particular screed a find. Never mind, my dear. As a committee we frown upon it, and you must protest wherever you find that anybody has meditated even for a minute upon the plan as a possibility."

"There is more of somewhat the same order in the pocketbook," said the explosive member, "but I spare you. But I am going to send out a circular letter imploring all women to read with reservations and to sift to the bottom any directions anywhere in 'woman's columns' of all orders. It is high time that common sense came uppermost."

"Send it to The Union Signal," said the chairman, and here it is.

THE VOICES OF THE CHURCH.*

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

[Excerpts from a speech delivered before the Genesee Conference of the M. E. Church, at Rochester, N. Y., October 5, 1895.]

I am to speak about the liquor traffic. It is not worth while unless I speak straight.

The cheap unwritten homiletics that would preach gospel temperance in such a way as to please everybody, by construction, was not taught in my seminary. Woe unto a reformer when all men speak well of him!

I must speak plainly about politics. "Eternal vigilance is the price" of not despising a Christian man whose opinions are fuzzy about the great reform. I would never think of asserting that a man ought necessarily to agree with me, but every man who has a word to say about this thing ought to be "dead square" with himself.

The all-important fact in a discourse—the very heart of eloquence—is the man who speaks; and if it is not cowardly or dishonest, it is at any rate inartistic and illogical for him to withhold his own exact position from the argument. And therefore, for rhetorical and other reasons, I confide to you that I am a member, in fairly good standing, of the National Prohibition Party—and I hold the opinion that no man need feel called upon to apologize for that. If I should be so happy as to be remembered in future years as a part of this tremendous struggle, I should like the record to begin with the words, "He was a third party Prohibitionist," for in the cool, clear judgment of history that will mean that I chose the right side when it was apparently the weaker.

But I am at variance with my own party's evident tendency to sacrifice power for speed, at the foot of a long grade, by the substitution of larger "drivers" for our engine, for in my judgment "the fire box" is the vital part of the equipment at present. It will be much better in the long run, for us to be "faithful over a few things," than "shifty" in many. Fusions of rivals, and unions of reformers upon a schedule of disagreements, more or less loosely held, do not impress me hopefully.

I must speak plainly about religion; that ideal of loyalty to the church which demands servility to her faults is out of sight to me. I will serve her like a man conscious of a divine birthright of his own, or not at all. My call to the ministry was not according to the established usage, but it was very plain and I have heard it every day for seven years and more; gracious, inspired, peremptory: "Lift up your voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions and the House of Jacob their sins."

The trumpet is not such a fine instrument as a harp, but it is more reliable. One could hardly command a cavalry company in manœuvers of any importance, by a violin, it needs so much tuning, and is so sensitive to the weather. And standing here between the lines upon the battlefield, under fire of both friend and foe, I breathe the rough but reverent prayer, "God put me to your mouth and blow."

. . . . . .

Business integrity requires one to be as good as his word, that is all; the law, the stock exchange, the street,—even the gambling house professes that ideal, and of course it is not the highest, but if the church were suddenly to rise to it, it would convulse the planet.

But what does she say? That is the question, and strangely enough that is the precise difficulty that perplexes the "world and the flesh," but not the devil. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself for the battle?"

The church is the truest thing in this world and most potential in wealth, position and equipment, but she is relatively the feeblest thing in the world, not intrinsically, but because she speaks so many languages. It is the same distemper that befell Noah's sons upon the plains of Shinar. The church seems to have become infatuated with the idea that she is in the world simply to build herself—to "gather out the elect," as I have heard some call it. She never learned that from Jesus. He sent her not to the elect but to the defeated.

Ecclesiasticism, sectism, and leaderism, have repeated the folly of Babel and said, "Go to, let us make brick . . . . and build us . . . a tower whose top shall reach to heaven," and in these days the visible church consists mainly of architecture, huge tents and tremendous crowds to the glory of the machine, mainly, and God has let confusion come into the brick business, and is teaching us that He despises a steeple that is a mere fire escape, and He is teaching us that upon no brick and slime salvation shall men be saved, but that upon "stepping stones of their dead selves" they shall mount up by personal faith, to grapple Heaven and bring it down, by government, next door to everybody.

Thrice has He rescued us from brick making and brick worshiping. He went Himself to Babel; He sent Moses to Egypt; the third time Jesus came and told a woman—who told everybody that "God is a spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," and that the time had begun to come when neither in this mountain—or that—nor in Jerusalem only, shall men worship the Father, but when "the whole earth shall be filled with His glory as waters cover the sea;" when "the highways shall rejoice and blossom as the rose;" when there shall be "springs in the desert." The Woman's Christian Temperance Unions are fulfilling that prophecy with barrels of ice water and fountains on the streets, and I believe that a converted whisky barrel doing duty as an iced water fountain in the name of Jesus, reaches farther toward Heaven than a church steeple full of iced theology.

I have been listening to the voices of the church. The professing church, the printing church, the preaching church, the polling church, the presidential-candidate church, and as I vainly try to find the meaning of the magpious chatter, I should lose heart of hope but that I have seen my own children, evolving from dumb, insensible jaundice, smile at colic, cry at caresses, nickname their little thoughts, coin impossible words, stutter their incomprehensible desires, until at last they spoke clear, sweet, true, pure English.

I was at the General Conference when the master singers in clear, strong recitative spoke the splendid theme, "The liquor traffic can never be legalized without sin," and I strained my eyes watching the music, to hear the glorious fugue unfolded at the polls, but the same autumn Clinton B. Fisk, the noblest layman of us all, struck up the Methodist Marseillaise at the federal election and his own church hissed him to his grave and encored the ribald demagogues who danced that day before King Alcohol and his harlot parties.

I listened to the religious press and the most was silence. It was garrulous about easy indisputable things, but dumb to the difficult lines where the people needed leading. The Christian editor—scholar, moulder of public opinion, stifled his mighty voice and from the infamous pillory of partisan prejudice ventriloquized—spoke from the stomach—that no reader of his paper could tell to which party he belonged. This at a time when every party in the land, but one, avouched by word and deed that patriotism ought to permit saloons—for money, and that one had its foundations laid in blood and tears of millions for whom Christ died, by the clean hands of two hundred and seventy thousand praying men who sought nothing but the grace of God for those about to die and the help of man for the imperiled homes of the republic and the generations coming on.

I think a secular Sunday newspaper may do far less dishonor to the Lord of the Sabbath and may be far less pernicious in its influence than its religious contemporary that goes to press on one of God's week days with tacit ratification of the party policy that insures saloons. And I say that a religious paper that is not clear, out and out against the saloon in both its editorial and its news, is an unfit sheet for any home whose head calls himself a Prohibitionist. But I heard the Kingdom, the Advance, the Pennsylvania Methodist and many humble members of the chorus "sing out" like God's morning birds before the dawn, and bared my head to the religious free press.

I listened to the pulpit and the sound swept and rolled along like the noise of many waters, but at the stroke of the midnight that ushered in the national election day, it ran down a whining diminuendo like an organ when the diffident and lowly pump suffers mishap. But after the mortifying disappointment of the moment, I could hear ringing up from valley to height and from height to high heaven, long bugle calls from white lipped men who blew the breath of God in triumph through the church and through the world.

I heard the fine invective of the religious teachers and leaders as they enlarged upon the wickedness of license and argued to a demonstration that the liquor traffic ought to die, and that Christian citizenship meant clean citizenship, and then and there ran up a flag of truce to the dirtiest saloon politics that ever stained the escutcheon of a Christian land, and went whimpering down the postern stair of party cowardice and landed at the apologetic finis, "but I am not a party Prohibitionist," when to be anything else then, meant that on a pinch he would rather be wrong than be unpopular.

A prohibitionist "but" is like any other disjunctive conjunction, a concern to qualify, weaken, destroy anything positive, and when you hear a man wind up an attack upon the saloon with a "but" you may know that he is afraid of something and self-ordained to fail.

I heard the Congregational convention of Massachusetts sing a doxology over the Norwegian system of selling liquor, and some of its ministers pleaded with the general court for leave to incorporate a good grogshop, but while they hung over the little still-born cadaver vainly trying to produce artificial respiration in the stringy coagulum that had no spine or legs or lungs, it evaporated and left them looking at their stained and empty hands, and they will in some day of better counsel rejoice that it was so, for if you could cast the drink devil out of its chosen demoniac into a herd of preachers feeding thereabout, they would run "down a steep place and be choked."

I went to speak before the greatest convention of Christians ever held upon the planet, upon a topic given me unconsulted, by the officers in charge. At their request I forwarded the manuscript in advance—for the press, as I was notified—to be edited, as it transpired.

Arrived upon the scene, I was given to understand by the president that I had betrayed the society—I loved it better than my life, and now, would gladly die to make it win the victory that lies almost within its hand. I asked for particulars and got them—three. "You have said that my vote cannot be had for any man or any party that is not in the platform declared against the saloon." "You have attacked the Norwegian system." "You have made a 'third' party speech."

I had said that of him—I thought it true—I retracted; and now retract it. I had attacked the Norwegian saloon upon exactly the same basis as any other. I had not made a third party speech. (It has been printed verbatim in a little pamphlet under the title "Church Resolutions versus Saloon Resolution." Please get it and see if I speak truly.)

Shall a man forswear himself because some obnoxious party has declared for righteousness? Shall a soldier skulk in the swamp because there is an unpopular party upon the high ground? Is it partisan to assert the same truth that but one party espouses? Then when the Presbyterian General Assembly said, "No political party has a right to expect, nor ought it to receive, the support of Christian men so long as it stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself on record in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon," it made a third party speech, or a fool speech, or told a lie.

This is not criticism but narrative, and the fact I seek to bring out in strong relief is that the church has so many voices.

The peril of leadership is that the leader is in danger of being diverted from the line of simple straightaway righteousness, and to feel himself charged with a large responsibility of policy. In such a case, as the society grows, he shrinks, and becomes a mere twitterer of lackadaisical platitudes which he calls "spiritual." I thank God so devoutly that I am not the head policy expert of anything, but only a plain stumbling follower of Jesus.

I went to the greatest consecration meeting that I ever saw. I knew the leader to be an advocate of the Norwegian system of liquor selling, and many distinguished people sat about the platform with badges. I knew them all. If the meeting had taken the single line of Christ and the saloon, and if it had begun, as such meetings often do begin, by permitting whoever would to make requests for prayer, and if every platform dignitary had responded, the united prayer would have resembled a crazy quilt. One would have said, "Pray that we may secure the Norwegian system of liquor selling in Massachusetts." Another, "Pray that God will bless the mulct liquor law of Iowa." "Pray that the Haskell bill may not embarrass the Ohio legislature." "Pray that the third party may fail at every election." "Pray that the church may be closed against the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." "Pray that all the churches may use alcoholic wine at the Lord's supper."

I went to the polls and stood beside the ballot box, the transmitter of the telephone of law, and heard sixteen bishops speak to the central exchange at the capitol.

Two said, "Down with the saloon." Two spoke so low I could not hear. Two sighed and said nothing. Ten said, "Down with the Democrats."

But I do not for a moment despair upon hearing this chaotic babble. All the signs are reassuring. In the still midnight of many a discouragement I have knelt and put my ear to the ground and heard the children of the Loyal Temperance Legion singing, "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go." I have heard Mary Hunt pleading with legislatures to have the schools teach that alcohol is poison, and every state but two does teach that now. The school house is in this race and it cannot fail. I hear, as noon creeps around the world, five hundred thousand women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union praying. "God of the drunkard's mother, wife, child; God of the widow and the orphan; God of the stricken home, the isolated heart, the devastated hope, curse the saloon, curl up in thy hot wrath the law that protects the drink; make the rain poison, and the sunlight vitrol, to every grain that would grow for the distillery and brewery."

I hear the tramp of two hundred and seventy thousand voting Prohibitionists, going to the polls to protest against the saloon, and the Prohibition party shows above the mud of spoils politics like the spine of a new continent in the physical geography of reform. I hear our church's mighty voice saying: "The liquor traffic can never be licensed without sin;" and the whole church with practical unanimity thunders like Sinai: "No political party has a right to expect or ought to receive the support of Christian men so long as it stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself on record in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon."

That admits of no interpretation, it shuts the Republican party to you and me. It abolishes the Democratic party as a Christian man's instrument of sovereignty. It makes the Populist party ineligible for our support. It denies our support to any silent candidate or any coward.

Does it drive you into the Prohibition party? Yes, I think so, provided it shall restate itself to fit our common conscience. It has no right and it would be a most short-sighted policy to compel you to adopt views at variance with your education and your religion in order that you may be true to your church in this.

For my part I want to join a party—or make one—that will simply affirm the church's position as to the importance and order of reforms, leaving the lesser questions that are inextricably interwoven with this greatest one—to wait a little, while we deal with the only great political question which is ripe to be gathered into the granary of law—and let the Christian voters of this land stand up once and be counted upon the bare question of conscience. That is the short cut to power and to all reforms.

Unite on such platform, build a church upon a float and draw it through the land with the rallying cry, "The Church for Christ," and we can pile up a million of conscience votes in 1896; and when we can show a million true blue, "all the year round," Christian votes, the saloon will have to go; the Sabbath will be respected; the law will be obeyed.

So, "strong in the Lord," true to the church, loyal to the whole country, tolerant of each other, while intolerant of each other's discords, with settled truth, we will wait and work for the day when in prayer, profession, pulpit, and print, and at the polls we may realize in our testimony—the word of Jesus: "Let your communications be yea, yea, and nay, nay."

PROHIBITORY OF BRUTISH EXHIBITIONS.

BY JOSIAH LEEDS.

When the man Reardon was killed a few months ago by his opponent of the prize ring, the notorious Fitz Simmons, in a glove contest, or, more correctly, a slugging match, at Syracuse, N. Y., that educational monthly, The Chautauquan, in a pertinent article upon "Schools of Brutality," called urgently upon the state legislatures to "make haste to find the lines between athletics and brutality, and to legislate effectively against the latter," asking also whether the press "may not owe the public some loyal service in this matter of brutal sports?"

The announced determination of the above named Fitz Simmons and the equally notorious Corbett, to engage in a prize fight upon the soil of Texas, notwithstanding the protests of its governor and of the self-respecting people of the state, resulted in the calling together of the legislature by proclamation of the governor and the enactment of a specially stringent law, immediately operative against such brutal "sports." The term "pugilistic" encounter is therein defined as "any voluntary fight or personal encounter by blows, by means of the fist or otherwise, whether with or without gloves, between two men for money." The penalty is made imprisonment for a term of not less than two nor more than five years.

It may be remembered that very soon after the breaking up of the winter circus slugging matches by the Philadelphia authorities early this year, a bill was introduced into the Pennsylvania legislature by Senator Penrose, ostensibly "to prohibit prize fighting and to regulate boxing with gloves," which would have practically had the effect of legalizing the sport, while it reduced the penalty of one thousand dollars fine and two years imprisonment (as the law now stands) to one hundred dollars and three months respectively. Believing all public boxing, or fisticuff matches, of whatever kind, to be a reproach upon our civilization and religion, the writer of this drafted a general prohibitory bill soon after that of Senator Penrose was published, and submitted the same to the District Attorney of Philadelphia. His reply was that it was "perhaps too stringent; not for me, but to meet the average moral sense of the community." He thought that the legislature was not prepared to pass it, nor the community to sustain it, and so "when that which may be conceded to be the wisest measure is unattainable, it is the duty of the reformer to secure that which may be less valuable, but which constitutes progress toward his ideal."

Toward this ideal the legislature of the Lone Star state has made progress. It may be said literally to have handled the difficult subject "without gloves," for it is somewhat of a novelty in the domain of anti-prize fighting legislation to prohibit all such contests, "whether with or without gloves." Similar was the clause in my own bill intended for the Pennsylvania legislature, and inasmuch as the W. C. T. U. at its National Convention at Cleveland last year adopted a resolution against all brutalizing games and sports, I think it may be of service to make record of the bill in question as measurably embodying the ideal to be reached. It will be noted that the non-wagering of money does not herein make permissible a "sport" which would allow a man made in the image of his Maker to batter the body and face of his fellowman for the public entertainment. I have altered the penalty to conform in part with the Texas law, which it is to be hoped has not been enacted for the present occasion of urgency, to be shortly repealed or rendered nugatory by mischievous amendments.

"An Act Prohibitory of Brutish Exhibitions.—Be it enacted, etc., That no public exhibition of the nature of a sparring, boxing, prize fighting or other fisticuff contest or match game between two or more persons, whether said persons for the purpose of such contest have their hands gloved or not gloved, whether money or other valuable consideration be bet or wagered upon said contest or not, and whether gate money or other entrance fee or consideration be charged or not, shall be permitted in any arena, upon the stage of any theater or other place of amusement, or before any athletic club or any other organization or pre-arranged gathering of people within this commonwealth, under a penalty of not more than one thousand dollars and imprisonment of not more than five years."

"Section 2.—All persons who shall assist or participate in any such contest or game as aforesaid, whether by betting or wagering upon the result, and whether in the presence of the principals or not, or who shall assist the principals in preparing for or carrying on their contests, or by being present for the purpose of witnessing the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both fined and imprisoned."

LADY SOMERSET AND THE WOMAN'S SIGNAL.

To the Readers of The Union Signal:—Owing to the fact that I am likely to be abroad during the next winter and that family duties must claim much of my attention, I have thought it wise to withdraw my name as active editor of the Woman's Signal and to take instead the post of corresponding editor. Miss Frances Willard will be associated with me in this position.

I regret to say that Miss Holdsworth's health obliges her to seek a warmer climate for the winter; and for this reason she has felt it necessary, greatly to our regret, to resign her position; but the pages of the Woman's Signal will still be brightened by contributions from her gifted pen.

Mrs. Florence Fenwick Miller whose work has won for her a high place among the women journalists of England, and who is in warm sympathy with the principles for which the Woman's Signal has stood from the beginning, has in the most gallant way stepped into the breach and made herself responsible for the carrying on of the paper. She will conduct it along the lines on which it has already won the confidence of progressive-minded women, and will, as I believe, add a home touch that will bring the paper into closer sympathy with that large circle of women who are not yet wholly with us, but whose good word and good will are of the first importance to the success of the reforms we have at heart.

The circulation of the paper has never been larger than in the last few weeks, and I have every confidence that the arrangement herein detailed will be favorably regarded by those who have its interests at heart. I have full confidence in the growing success of an enterprise which has been a source of great interest and satisfaction to me as all enterprises must in which we invest our best resources of work and worth, when those on whose behalf they have been undertaken give their appreciation and help.

Thanking you, my comrades, for your coöperation, I am, as always, yours in joyful service,

London. Isabel Somerset.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

In Memory.

Dear Union Signal:—God's appointments are often man's keenest disappointments. When I was granted a year's leave of absence from The Union Signal my heart rejoiced at the prospect of a reunion with my family, and my father was included in every plan for my long holiday. He had been out of health all summer, but not seriously so, and was improving rapidly during September. Only a week before his death he wrote me hopefully of his recovery, so the sudden summons home and the sad intelligence a few hours later, found me totally unprepared for such a bereavement. But the same Comforter that has spoken to countless aching hearts strengthened me for the hurried departure and the long journey over mountain and desert to this sunset land.

With joy unspeakable I found my dear mother sustained in her great sorrow and in sweet peace of spirit awaiting the arrival of her children. (My only brother, Dr. W. X. Suddath, accompanied me.) Another inexpressible comfort was the perfect preservation of my father's body and the beautiful natural expression of his countenance. Never have I seen death more majestic nor less forbidding. My heart bounded in gratitude to God for permitting me once more to look into my father's face, and for giving me a mother so resolute and true that she had not considered herself in the lonely five days' vigils.

Not a sign of mourning appeared as we entered the cozy home. Sunshine flooded the house and flowers abounded. The atmosphere spoke of a settled Calm and abiding Confidence. A holy joy pervaded even our bereaved hearts as the tender funeral services were said, and the beautiful, melodious and comforting words of "Lead, Kindly Light" and "Jerusalem, my Happy Home" were sung. The local W. C. T. U. sat around his casket as a bodyguard of honor.

The place of interment was Olivewood cemetery, Riverside, ten miles from our home, and a more beautiful spot for a "silent city" I have never seen. Tall pyramid trees of pine, olive, pepper and eucalyptus guard the lowly graves as trusty sentinels and add the wealth of their tropical beauty to the natural loveliness of the mountain slope.

My father loved this land of sunshine, fruit and flowers and it is fitting that his body should lie beneath its sod and his memory be cherished in the hearts of these generous Californians, who have rendered every possible aid to my mother, as well as extended every token of respect and honor to my noble father. He was loved in this community by men, women and children. Whoever needed his aid received it, generously, promptly and effectively. He was wholly unostentatious. He never did an act for show or mere formality. As one neighbor remarked, "Dr. Suddath never intruded himself upon any one, but when his presence or his substantial help were needed they were always on hand." His carriage and horses were to be seen at every funeral in this resort of invalids, whether he knew the deceased or not, and the sick have been given many a ride in it. No one more truly believed (in action) that "The best that any mortal hath

Is that which every mortal shares."

My father loved the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. To within a few hours of his death, he was interested in the daily news, and one day when my mother was reading to him of the trials of two atrocious murder cases on this coast, he requested her to cease, remarking, "I am ashamed of my sex. I do not want to live in this wicked world." Then a little later, with the same thought in his mind, he said, with emphasis, "Women are the best people, and the W. C. T. U. are the best women." My mother has been president of the Colton union for several years, and it was father's pleasure not only to drive her to the meetings, but to see how many of the members he could gather up on the way, and so generous was his nature that he was not content unless he returned them to their homes. He read The Union Signal regularly, and delighted in its principles. He espoused the cause of abolition early in life, though a Southerner by birth and education, and soon after the organization of the Prohibition party became its earnest advocate. As candidate for Prohibition mayor in our home town (Bloomington, Ill.) he put his modest, retiring nature to a supreme test, publicity being abhorrent to him, and polled a larger number of votes than any previous candidate on that ticket.

The Bible was not only his book of devotion, it was his volume of recreation. He would resort to it at all hours of the day, and when, coming in at noon tired from labor in his orange grove, he would frequently pass by the morning's mail and daily papers and pick up the Holy Book, and soon be absorbed in its pages. A favorite book-mark indicates the last chapter read, and its motto is so characteristic of his life impulse that I give it here, not because it is new to our readers but because it was so true of my glorified father:

"I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show or any good I can do any human being, let me do it now; let me not defer nor neglect it, for I will not pass this way again."

More like a Quaker than is common to those born out of that communion, my father seldom talked of his religious life, but his daily walk testified of the source of his strength, and no one who dealt with him could doubt that his life was quietly, persistently, God-centered. If ever a man entered upon immortality, it was he, and I know that his soul flitted joyously to its Maker.

From the depths of a tender, grateful heart I send greetings to The Union Signal readers and thank them profoundly for the precious words of cheer and sympathy which so many of them have sent me. I have been so richly remembered that it will hardly be possible to reply to every letter, but each one has been a source of comfort to me and re-read many times.

I shall carry out my plan to remain in California during the coming year, rejoicing that The Union Signal is in such good care as Mrs. Fry, Miss Stewart, Mrs. Chapin and Miss Melville will give it, reinforced by Miss Willard's presence in this country. From time to time I hope to give our readers an insight into the advance movements of this coast.

Margaret A. Sudduth.

SUGGESTIONS FROM OUR WORLD'S SECRETARY.

Dear Union Signal:—A letter which we have received from Chile, from Mrs. Ida A. T. Arms, has brought us good news in regard to our work in that country. We are now hoping to open out our white-ribbon work in Belgium and Ireland, and believe the day is coming when every country on the earth will, to some extent, at any rate, have evidence of our World's W. C. T. U.

Some of our B. W. T. Associations are just now blending practical work and pleasure in a most sensible way, by making summer picnic excursions for the day to neighborhoods where no B. W. T. A. exists. At such places they have an afternoon open air meeting and a procession, followed by a tea and evening meeting. Friends at the towns visited lend school rooms for their use. The procession arouses inquiry, the white ribbon arouses curiosity, and so with little trouble a good big evening meeting generally results. Our Forest Gate Branch started two associations by these means last summer.

In the course of an interesting conversation the other day with Mr. Daniel Matthews (the leader of the Malaga Mission, Victoria) he told me that he scarcely ever walked through the streets of any Australian town without seeing the white ribbon worn. He also told me numerous incidents showing the wonderful helpfulness of our little badge; how, many times, when he had arrived in a town feeling lonely and friendless he had made himself known to wearers of the badge; how they had frequently given him hospitality, and never, in a single instance, had a white-ribboner not given him practical help. Mr. Matthew's mission is among the Australian aborigines, and he finds that where the European, and especially the Englishman, has not made a settlement among the natives, there alcohol in any form is unknown,—and this civilization is advanced by enlightened Europeans, who carry with their civilization the awful curse of drink. Well may King Khama regard with fear the progress of the white man in prohibition Bechuanaland! I am making a special appeal wherever I go in England for our women to wear the white ribbon. Much good is lost to us by our badge being so little worn here. I constantly find that the badge gives me opportunities in most unexpected ways. God help all women the wide world over to join our ranks.

The World's officers suggest a scheme which we think will place the financial position of the World's W. C. T. U. on a more satisfactory basis. It is thought to be advisable that we have a World's W. C. T. U. agent in each of our affiliated countries whose duties it shall be to collect subscriptions and generally to push forward the work.

The United Kingdom Alliance agents cover the whole of England. We have one in almost every country who can always be relied on to give helpful information. I constantly appeal to them and they collect thousands of pounds a year in annual subscriptions of one shilling and upwards; in fact the key to the position is in collecting small sums—thousands of them. These agents of course each collect a great deal more than their own salaries. We should expect our World's W. C. T. U. agents to receive salaries conditionally on their collecting not less than certain fixed sums. Surely place could be found for an agent in the United States whose business it shall be to collect money for the World's W. C. T. U. I shall be glad to receive communications bearing on this suggestion from readers of The Union Signal.

Mrs. Holden Byles, a well known member of our National B. W. T. A. executive is now living at 140 North 33d street, Omaha, Neb. Mrs. Byles is a good speaker and has an attractive personality. She will be glad to make dates for addresses. The World's W. C. T. U. Minutes are now ready and I am hoping to receive large orders from America. Also I have photographs of the group of World's officers, one shilling each, and the Polyglot Petition also at one shilling each. Since the Minutes were published Mrs. Drysdale (of Liverpool) has accepted the superintendency of the World's department for household helpers. In England Mrs. Drysdale is well known as being one of our most devoted, generous and loyal workers. Her house is a general rendezvous for temperance friends. In fact, Mr. Drysdale has built a large sized hall attached to the dining-room for the use of the Liverpool B. W. T. A., and many delightful afternoon and evening meetings are held in this charming room.

Mrs. Amie Hicks has accepted the superintendency of our labor department. Her name is widely known as her championship of oppressed women has won her a deserved reputation, and we welcome Mrs. Hicks as a valuable addition to our World's W. C. T. U. ranks.

Miss Willard and Anna Gordon take with them our prayers and thousands of good wishes. I am, dear Union Signal,

Yours faithfully,

Agnes E. Slack,

Dear Sisters:—If I could prescribe a text book for your use for the next month or two, it would be Roberts' "Rules of Order," which is authorized for our use by the National. To this I would add Mrs. A. S. Benjamin's Parliamentary Card and her Responsive Reading of 1888.

Business cannot be dispatched with fairness and promptness without the use of parliamentary tactics. Of course, there is such a thing as making the "red tape" more prominent than the matter under consideration, but knowledge and tact on the part of the presiding officer may find the golden mean between undue formality and confusion arising from inattention to motions, amendments, etc.

There are laws governing the actions of deliberative bodies and their officers that ought to be read and known of all the members thereof, but it is possible to find in most local unions officers who are uncertain how to state a motion, what motions take precedence, the rules of voting and election, and there are many lay-members who never do more than "second the motion" or chime in on yeas or nays. These would be surprised to know how easily they may learn the intricacies—which, after all, are not such—of parliamentary procedure.

---

Someone asked Mother Experience in a recent letter what a union had better take up for a course of reading during the coming winter. For all who feel any shakiness on the matter in question I would suggest the little book aforementioned (you can purchase it through the W. T. P. A.) Follow up a careful study of the text by parliamentary drills. Mrs. Benjamin says in a recent leaflet, "Let two or three who are gifted in this direction plan for it. Let them secure the 'outsiders' who would gladly join such a class. It is easy to make the drill a success educationally and financially. This would open the way for persistent, effective work, and in most unions there would be at least one woman who would develop so much ability as to insure competent leadership thereafter."

---

Perhaps I cannot do better than to close our conference this week with some replies to

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES.

Question.—When for any reason the president of a local union cannot attend the county convention, can the vice-president fill her place as a delegate by reason of her office?

Answer.—This does not hold good in the executive meetings of the National. There, someone is appointed; it may be the vice-president or it may not. Our unions have not, in general, one vice-president, but several, and in that case one would necessarily have to be chosen.

Q.—Is a new member who pays her dues on that day, entitled to a vote in the election of officers by ballot for the coming year?

A.—She is certainly entitled to it, though by reason of unfamiliarity with the candidates, might feel herself disqualified to vote and be excused.

Q.—Has a county president the right to make or second a motion or to vote upon any question in the local unions of her county apart from the one of which she is a member?

A.—No.

Q.—When a state or National worker is traversing a county, but lecturing for local unions, who should preside at the various meetings, the county or local president?

A.—The president of the union under whose auspices the lecture is given is entitled to the chair. By courtesy only the county president may be tendered the position.

Q.—In making "the informal ballot the formal ballot" is it needful for the secretary to write the vote?

A—No. The motion, seconded and carried to make the vote formal, makes it so and that is all that is necessary. Any action on the part of the secretary is needless repetition.

Q.—What is the relation sustained by the county president to the executive committee of the local union?

A.—Mrs. A. S. Benjamin sends us this reply: "The county president does not sustain any relation to the executive committee of the local union—not any at all. When it comes to the executive committee of the county union (to which each local president belongs), she is, of course, chairman, unless the law requires and provides differently."

Yours in our blessed work,

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love.—Gal. 5:6.

Surely the love of Christ is a wonderful bond to bind hearts. It defies time and distance. I have just finished reading a letter full of sisterly love from one on the other side of the globe whom I have never seen. It warms and cheers my heart, Mrs. Harrison Lee Richmond, Victoria, Australia. She says: "I have read 'Temple Items' with an interest growing greater each day, and feel I really must have a brick in our grand building. I have been waiting, hoping that the day might come when I could send £20 to have our dear little colony's name in Willard Hall as Mrs. Evans did for our sister colony, South Australia. Owing to the great need of all branches of our work here that day seems away in the future, so I send, not what I wish, but what I can, £1 7s., with a heart full of love and sympathy for your great work." After giving an outline of her life and work (she is an officer in the Australian W. C. T. U.), she closes by saying: "I dare to hope that my gift may be like a ray from our warm southern sun, to the dear sister who so often meets the chill mists of indifference and apathy."

I am cheered by another loving message from Mrs. L. B. Bridgman, Umzumbe, Natal, South Africa. She writes: "How can you ever know the pride and pleasure which we in this part of the world feel in our magnificent Temple, if we never send our mite in token of our interest? I enclose £1, would that it were a thousand, but we are missionaries and that withering word, 'retrench,' ever sounding in our ears, seems to shrink and dwarf all our efforts and forbids us to be generous." And still another message of love comes from Miss H. Frances Parmelee, Mazebashi, Japan, enclosing some bits of bright Japanese silk to be sold for the Temple. She closes her letter by saying: "Please know that some of us watch your work and carry it in our hearts and pray that success will crown your herculean efforts, and I believe it will."

The Chelsea, Mass., W. C. T. U. has just returned fifty filled Wheels; besides they had just completed paying their $100 pledge, and, on the heels of that, Miss Percival sends for a hundred Wheels, and now she spins fifty of them back filled. The balance are soon to follow.

The mother of Mrs. A. E. Strong, the recording secretary of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., has been on a visit to her daughter this summer. In spite of her seventy-five years and a naturally diffident disposition, her love for the Temple has been such that she has got nine Wheels filled. An aged white-ribboner sends for a Wheel and a mite-box —Mrs. E. B. Douglas, Shoreham, Vt. She says: "I hope to be able to fill them soon, though past my threescore years and ten and very deaf. I think if blind people can do so much as you tell us about in your 'Items,' I certainly ought to do something for the House Beautiful, and I will try."

Miss Hattie F. Murphy, Chicago, sends a check for $100. She speaks in her letter of the delight it gives her of being able to pay the above amount, which she pledged some time ago for the Temple. Mr. J. R. B. Ransom sends $50, which completes his subscription of $100, for the purpose of placing the name of Mrs. Margette B. Ransom on the New York tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. J. P. Harris, Bellefonte, Pa., sends $25 for the Harold B. Harris tablet. A dear old saint, Mrs. E. G. Brayton, Fall River, Wis., aged eighty-two years, sent us a silk quilt she pieced to be sold for the Temple. Last week it was purchased by her daughter for $10. She is going to present it to Mrs. Brayton's great granddaughter. The quilt was very pretty, and beautifully made.

The Cobleskill, N. Y., union, sends $25 through Mrs. A. Lane, as a first instalment on a $100 pledge. Mrs. A. J. Clark sends a resolution passed at the Caledonia county, New York, W. C. T. U's annual meeting, pledging $100 to the Temple for the purpose of placing the name of one of their most loved and honored workers, Miss Laura Moore, on the New York tablet in Willard Hall. Through the efforts of Mrs. P. Patterson, the Salem county, New Jersey, W. C. T. U. has sent $25 on a pledge of $100 for the Temple.

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

REMINISCENCES OF THE CRUSADE IN KENTUCKY.

The enthusiasm of the temperance Crusade in Ohio was quickly carried into the neighboring states. Visitors to Cincinnati gave their time to the prayer circles which met in the different churches in place of the shopping and visiting they were accustomed to do. In the town of C—— the women gathered at this call of the pastors; officers were appointed, and the organization of a woman's prayer circle effected—the first united effort of Christian women since the war. The pledge recommended by the committee was the one adopted in Ohio, called the total abstinence pledge.

The discussion occasioned by this action showed how little real temperance sentiment prevailed in the community. One lady said, "I could not sign that pledge. My husband has wine every day for dinner, and would not touch a mince pie or pudding without brandy or wine sauce. Besides, what would a black cake be worth without brandy?"

Another said, "I have boarders, and must use wine in my pies and brandy in sauces and puddings." We asked her if she was not afraid of the influence of such food on her child. "Oh, no! she answered; "he does not know the difference, and is too young to be affected. Yet another said, "My mother always used liquor in cooking. It did not hurt my father and brothers. I am not afraid for my husband and boys; you cannot make things taste good without the liquor. I know they would miss it if I left it out, so I cannot sign that pledge."

One after another made a similar excuse, until scarcely a corporal's guard was left. "What shall we do?" said one and another of those remaining.

"Do!" said a braver sister. "Are we not stronger without these half-hearted friends? If women cannot give up the use of liquor in cooking, how can they expect men to abstain from drinking? We will do better work with a few real temperance workers than with a church full of compromisers."

But we went home very sorrowful.

The papers next morning gave an account of the split in the temperance ranks. The chagrin of the temperance people was only equalled by the exultation of the saloonkeepers. No more anxiety was felt by them about their business since the majority of the community was evidently "with" them. They opened wide their doors and took away their screens; their business was legal; their patrons must not be ashamed to buy, for the majority of the women justified them.

The small minority left in the work decided to test their strength by holding an election for local option. Many quiet, earnest men in all the walks of life aside from the ministry, thought there was more temperance sentiment than had come to the surface; and this might develop it. Faithful work was done. Overtures were made to the "seceders," in the hope that some votes might be gained through them, but it did not avail.

The day came, and the women held a prayer service in the Methodist church from nine o'clock till four in the afternoon. About three o'clock a minister of a prominent church, many of whose members were among the "seceders," and who did not believe that women should speak or pray in public, came in to the meeting very much excited and said, "You had better quit praying now and do some real work! The brewery wagons are going over the river to bring back voters. Meet them at the bridge with temperance ballots. Send wagons for men who failed to vote this morning before they went to work. You have just two hours before the poles close, and the votes are about evenly divided now. If we can keep out the Cincinnati men we will gain in two precincts."

A band was quickly started to the bridges where a scene was enacted which beggars description. The wagons came loaded with drunken men who shrieked "Hurrah for whisky!" "We will not be ruled by women!" "No local option for us!" "We'll have our beer in spite of the Methodists!" Load after load came over, voted, and then were taken back. In some precincts more votes were cast for liquor than there were men living in the precincts.

After the polls were closed and we turned homeward, heartsick and weary, we asked, "Where is the minister who sent us into such a storm?" Someone answered, "I saw him as we came down, playing croquet in the yard of one of our strongest opposers."

Our next move was to hold open-air meetings on Sunday afternoons, to which all classes were invited. These resulted in much good; many signed the pledge who had not been sober for years. Our hope was to secure their conversion, thus protecting them from the enticement of old habits and companions. One signer became a preacher of the gospel, moved west to a temperance state and was a successful minister.

A notorious drunkard, the terror of his neighborhood, signed the pledge, was converted and went to his mother's church with the intention of joining. There was a communion service that day. When the wine was poured out he rushed from the church and through the streets to his own room, where he had a terrible struggle with appetite. The wine was fermented and the fumes awoke the demon within. He was afterward directed to a church which used unfermented wine. He was a most exemplary Christian for years and died praising God for giving such a sinner a hope of heaven.

Many children signed the pledge who have become our most useful citizens and staunch Christians. Two lads of ten years of age, cousins, went home to tell their mothers they had signed the pledge. One mother took her boy in her arms, questioned him about the purport of his action, and when she found he was fully aware of the solemnity of the promise he had made, prayed with him, asking God to shield him from evils, and make him strong against temptation. The other mother said, "while he was a child she wanted him to keep his pledge, but when he came to manhood, she hoped he would have strength enough to take a glass of wine occasionally. If there was any class she despised it was those sanctimonious temperance people who turned their wine glasses down at a dinner or entertainment, as if they were so much better than their neighbors; she did not want her son to become one of those "fanatics."

Twenty years have passed, the fruit of each mother's teaching is apparent. The first young man is an officer of the Y. M. C. A., an elder in his church and a prominent business man in the community. The other rarely draws a sober breath.

Only a few of the little band remain who for three years waged the initial battle with the great evil. Occasionally they meet at the W. C. T. Union rooms and recount their experiences, but many have gone to their beautiful home, and those who remain are ready for the long journey.

COFFEE-ROOMS.

BY LADY HOPE.

[Lady Hope is Superintendent of the Department of Coffee and Reading-Rooms in the World's W. C. T. U.]

In a crowded room one Sunday afternoon I was reading to some of our Surrey people the matchless invitations of love and mercy, as they fell from our Saviour's lips. The people listened breathlessly, for it was simple and they could understand it. Presently I paused, and asked them this question:

"Why do you not come into the Kingdom of God? You press and crowd into this little room; why do you not come a step further? God is calling you. What is it that holds you back?"

Suddenly a voice was raised in answer from the middle of the room: "It is the drink that keeps us back!"

I was silent, but there was a general movement in the room. The women sobbed, the men bowed their heads.

The next morning on visiting some of the houses I was told that the evening was the time of temptation, and the source of all trouble in the homes!

"There" (at the public house), said one cottage mother, "the men are made welcome, and they feel at home after going a few times. Soon they spend their evenings at the 'White Swan,' the 'Red Lion,' or other houses of the kind. Then their money goes, they meet bad company, and learn to gamble away their earnings. Oh, if you were only to ask them to come to your room of a night instead of letting them go to those other places, I know they would be happy, and there they would be safe."

This resulted in a new effort on my part. I said to myself, "Why should I not open a common room where working men can spend their evenings? If they are accustomed to drink at those hours, let them have drinks of a wholesome kind, enticing and attractive, but not destructive to themselves, their homes and their happiness."

The little room that I used was not at all suitable for the purpose, and it was constantly being occupied with meetings and classes. But my father came to my aid. He had been building a room which he handed over to me, and another friend gave the requisite money for starting a small bar with coffee, tea, bread and butter, cakes, etc. I had no idea when I opened a room capable of seating about eighty or ninety men, how much too small it would prove in the first month of its occupation. From far and near the working men crowded to this place. Here they found books and papers of a useful kind. Periodicals with large print, short stories abundantly illustrated, and every variety suitable for the interest of working men. Added to these we had certain daily papers and weekly periodicals. Our room proved a great success. It was bright, airy, cheerful and well lighted, and very soon another room had to be built adjoining this one, the end wall broken down and the space doubled.

"Where are the roughs of the town?" people used to ask. The answer was, "You will find them in the town hall." There they were learning chess, draughts and other games, reading books of history, geography, and very often studying arithmetic. They never seemed tired of our four walls, and it was perfectly astonishing how men of every class and trade would blend their interests there and sit together side by side, talking over questions of the day and conversing pleasantly with each other.

Now the question is, can the temperance workers and their friends open rooms of this description or utilize the hundreds and thousands of empty rooms and halls that are to be found in our country?

Certainly the methods, which, through God's blessing, brought us success, were very simple ones. The rooms would be most crowded about eight o'clock. Around the various tables the men would be seated in their rough working clothes, some drinking coffee, tea or other harmless beverage, other having a hearty supper; some merely reading a book or skimming a paper. At this hour every game we had in the place would be in use, and wonderfully good tempered and pleasant the men were with each other.

There should be plenty of pictures and texts on the walls. Everything that is bright and attractive must be accumulated here according to the means that lies in our power. We must amuse, occupy and interest the men in every possible way. Photographs, sketches, a microscope, and many things that would be too insignificant to name will please them by the hour at the time. I had a stereoscope, which was an unfailing source of amusement.

Very often during the evenings my little harmonium would be in use, hymn books distributed and the men's voices would be heard joining heartily in sacred singing. Of course, they like joyful, bright hymns, with a good chorus, and prefer singing them to listening to a solo.

Sometimes in an adjoining room a temperance address would be given. Once a week, also, in the next room a Bible class was held, which was very largely attended. Every evening about nine o'clock two or three verses of Scripture were read, a few words spoken and a short prayer offered, the whole lasting not more than ten minutes.

"Do you make every man take the pledge?" I have often been met with this inquiry. The pledge is never mentioned unless for some special reason, or you should happen to be in conversation with a man who is tempted to drink. No rule can be laid down in such a matter as this. If it is said in the town, "You had better not go to the room, because you will be asked to sign the pledge," your work will be ruined, and the prospects of your coffee house will be destroyed. You ask men to come as you would ask your friends to spend an evening with you in your drawing-room. You provide nothing for their harm or injury, but supply a safeguard that will effectually keep them from the drink danger that meets them at every turn. At the same time, with tact and kindness, you use every means in your power to win them wholly over to the cause of right. But, remember, that the masses of your town are like wild birds. It requires a great deal of gentleness, love and skill to tame them, and draw them under the best influences within reach of that blessing from above, without which your efforts are really useless.

We want to make our rooms a success. We cannot be satisfied with the weary formula, that is too often heard, "Oh, there is a coffee house! but it does not succeed very well." On inquiry in such a case you will always find a cause for the failure, a worm at the root, a canker at the very heart of your project. You will always find, too, that one person must do the work (of course, with help, if necessary or available) but not a committee! Hundreds of coffee houses have succumbed under such patronage as this.

LESSONS FOR LIFE.

The school-room of life is before you,
Let me give you a lesson to heed:
Never forget
That the alphabet
Must be learned before you can read.
If you pass to the higher classes,
And skip the ones below,
Remember this:
You are likely to miss,
And down to the foot you'll go.

But when you've commenced your life-work,
And have found your proper sphere,
Pray do not fret
That you do not get
All the prizes. It would be queer
When somebody is the highest
If somebody wasn't below;
If it be you
Make no ado,
Peg on the best you know.

Don't whip yourself for blunders,
Nor dream of them at night;
From beginning to end,
On yourself depend
But work in the teacher's right,
And if you should be bothered,
In thinking what to say,
Look over the rule
He has given the school,
And write it out that way.

If the lessons of life grow harder
As you climb truth's rugged hill,
Nevertheless
There'll be a recess,
So keep on plodding still.
And though your mistakes are many,
Don't try to rub them out,
But cipher away
In a better way,
The answer will come, no doubt.

DUTY AND INCLINATION.

"Stay at home," said Inclination,
"Let the errand wait."
"Go at once," said Duty, sternly,
"Or you'll be too late."

"But it rains," said Inclination,
"And the wind is keen."
"Never mind all that," said Duty,
"Go and brave it, Jean."

Jean stepped out into the garden,
Looked up at the sky;
Clouded, shrouded, dreary, sunless,
Rain unceasingly.

"Stay," again said Inclination.
"Go," said Duty, "go."
Forth went Jean with no more waiting,
Or a selfish "No."

You will smile if now I tell you
That this quiet strife,
Duty conquering Inclination,
Strengthened all her life.

"A DAY AT ICHABOD CRANE'S SCHOOL" [WASHINGTON IRVING].

BY MABEL SUDDUTH.

In one of the Dutch valleys, in the state of New York, a worthy person of the name of Ichabod Crane sojourned for the purpose of instructing the children of the vicinity.

He was a native of Connecticut. Crane was tall, but very lank, with narrow shoulders, long arms and legs, large hands and feet, and his whole frame very loosely hung together.

His school-house was a low building of one room, rudely constructed of logs, and the windows were patched with leaves of old copy-books. This school-house stood in a rather lonely but pleasant situation, just at the foot of a woody hill, with a brook running close by.

The interior of this building is characteristic of primitive days. There are rude walls of roughly hewed logs, with the crevices filled with clay, and numerous small windows through which the sunlight peeps and sheds its rays upon busy pupils of all ages, seated upon high benches. Some of them are so young that their toes hardly touch the floor, while others have advanced to maturer years.

Ichabod sat on the lofty stool, where he watched all concerns of his little literary realm. In one hand he held a ferule, while in the other was a spelling-book, from which he was quizzing a row of scholars before him.

During the progress of one word down the class, a knock was heard at the door, and while Ichabod went to answer it, all the scholars learned how to spell the word. So when the teacher returned he was very much surprised to hear the word spelled correctly.

In a distant corner two little boys were very much occupied over some marbles which they had taken from their pockets. They were more intent on these than on their lessons, yet all the time keeping one eye fixed on Ichabod and having a book ready in which to seem interested should he glance in their direction.

It seemed that all the visitors that ever came to that school came that afternoon, for not very long after the first knock another one was heard.

This proved to be a more lengthy call, and after the scholars had done all the mischief they could think of, they tried to see who would think of some plan with which to have some fun.

The first response to this call was made by Hans Van Ripper, a boy about fifteen. He told the scholars of a trap-door which led to the cellar below. All agreed that to make use of this trap-door would be a good plan, so that when Ichabod came back all the scholars should be gone and that while he was wondering where they were they could all get out of the cellar by the steps that lead outside.

So all the scholars went down the steps into, what seemed to them, a deep, dark hole, with but one window. To this window all the pupils flocked for light and air.

Then they filed in a line up the steps which led outside. They waited there for about ten minutes before they heard Ichabod go into the school room.

You can imagine his surprise at seeing the room vacant. He at once began to wonder where all his scholars had gone. He then suspected that they had gotten out at one of the windows. So he thought he would go out and see; when he opened the door of the school-house what could have surprised him more than to see all his scholars coming up the cellar steps. When the pupils saw him they started on a run with Ichabod after them, waving his birch rod with vengeance. They made a circuit around the school house and those that were ahead started on their way home; but pity the younger ones who felt the birch rod on their backs when Ichabod gained upon them.

Ichabod at last grew tired of the race and gave up with the promise, delightful to all the boys' ears, that they would hear of this again from their fathers.

This ended a day in Ichabod's school and I am glad to say also ended the plan of Hans Van Ripper, for every boy did hear of it again from his father.

Dear Boys and Girls:—Such interesting letters have flown into our Cozy Corner this week! You will find some of them below. I think you will enjoy reading Pearle's full description of Magna Charta and what Mervin has to say about it too. Then there's the cousin from far off Australia who comes tapping at our door. Isn't it nice to know that the same good principles and thoughts are being taught to boys and girls in Loyal Temperance Legions the world around? Our circle extends about the globe. Lily is very welcome and will find herself at home in Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner. And if she should leave her home to travel at some future time, she will find that her little knot of white ribbon will bring her in friendly circles in every country of the globe.

Ben Leigh Smith, of Aurora, Ill., sends Cozy Corner a good anecdote from the Christian Leader which runs as follows:

"A liquor dealer in the town of Ayr, Scotland, had a particular brand of whisky which he wished to advertise.

"One day the circus was coming to town and to add interest to its performances and advertise his whisky, he offered a prize for the best answer to the question, Why his particular kind of whisky resembled a certain bridge across the water of Ayr?

"The show came, the answers to the liquor seller's question were handed in to be examined, and the successful competitor was announced. He proved to be a poor boy who perhaps knew from experience what he was speaking of. His answer to the question why that publican's whisky was like the bridge was: 'Because it leads to the poor house, the lunatic asylum and the cemetery.'

"The liquor dealer probably looked glum as he paid the prize money. He is not likely to propose any more prize conundrums to advertise his whisky at present. Perhaps some who have drank it will also halt and take another road."

Now let us have other good anecdotes from Cozy Cornerers.

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

ABOUT THE MAGNA CHARTA.

It is so long since I have been in the Corner that I am almost afraid you have forgotten me.

I have studied English History and perhaps I can tell something about the Magna Charta.

A great many years ago in England they had a very weak and poor ruler, John, brother of Richard Cœur de Leon.

At that time the nobles and king cared very little for the troubles of the commoners. And indeed they took no thought at all about them save when the king wanted to borrow money or get lands from them, and whenever he wanted these he generally took them at his royal pleasure and straightway forgot that a king ought to pay back what he owes.

By and by even John's nobles went against him and they and the commoners together drew up a bill of rights called the Magna Charta or great charter. It contained a great many things, but the chief were, that the king of England was not to take money when he pleased or to imprison people unless they had been convicted of crime. This charter from which a great deal of our constitution comes, John was made to sign at Runnymede in 1215.

In the many struggles between the king and the people there was always this charter to refer to, and though the kings broke their promises and the rules of the Magna Charta, still the poor commoners felt as if they had some guarantee of their rights.

I have read most of the books in the list published some time ago but my Shakespeare was the real one not the stories or expunged edition and I love him very much. I should like to hear from some of the cousins of my age, fifteen.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

In the last Union Signal, in the Cozy Corner you asked about the Magna Charta of England.

The tyranny of King John of England caused nobles and clergy under Langton's leadership to sign the Charter. The next year the barons forced him to sign it or to fight. King John signed it June 15, 1215. It gave all classes more power and lessened the power of the king, and secured the people's rights.

FROM AUSTRALIA.

I wish to become one of your nieces, though I am living very far from you. My mother is superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion. She read the account of the children's present of the fountain to the city of Chicago at our meeting, and often reads your letters to us. We have in our Loyal Temperance Legion boys and girls over sixty in number on our list. Mother's W. C. T. Union is going to have a Demorest medal contest in a fortnight.

OUR NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Before this meets the eye of some of our readers at a distance, our president will have called the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention to order with harmonious, rhythmical raps. The great audience in Baltimore will have heard the mystical seven of the gavel, a choice quotation from some beloved poet, and have felt the influence of the Pleiades; and will know that, in some sense at least, the time of safe navigation has come, as did the ancient mariners when Alcyone arose as the central point around which the universe of fixed stars were wont to revolve. But these women mariners over the tempestuous sea of reform are not thinking of Greek or Roman mythology. They are not calling upon Jupiter nor Juno nor the god of war. They are not depending even upon splendid leadership or the victories of the past—but an awful hush falls upon the soul of the throng and each remembers she is but dust, and that it is only the Divine One who can make the great organization of which she is a part "a sharp sword and a polished shaft" against the evils that bar Christ out of the world, and that she must depend on Him.

As thousands of sisters sit at home listening for news from the Convention, do they, too, hear the call to prayer? As the host go up to correct their charts and to mark out new ones for unexplored seas, singing, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me," is the still mightier host at home singing and praying, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot them?" If not, the charts for next year's campaign will be very imperfect.

The women at the Convention will not lack enthusiasm when the strong face of Neal Dow, framed in its aureola of snow-white hair, and moulded by the heroic soul within, shall shine upon them, and his words lift them up into a purer atmosphere of self-sacrifice; nor when they follow our beloved Petition into the far-off lands by the aid of a magic lantern, and view the stones of the streets, and the thresholds and doorways of palaces and parliaments across and through which it shall be borne, followed by the weary feet of those who journey the world around, knocking at each place of power and asking that the load of misery made by bad laws and bad usages may be lifted from the backs of wailing humanity; nor when their missionaries from South Africa, Ceylon, Syria and Armenia arraign the rum traffic stalking side by side with civilization and the open Bible, and wringing tears from such souls as King Khama's; nor when a vision of the hunted Armenian is opened to their gaze, writhing under the heel of the fiendish, absolute Turk, filled with unspeakable horrors and weltering in his own blood—a Christian calling to Christians and hearing no answer; nor when Miss Helen Potter by her wonderful impersonation brings to life again the most impassioned temperance orator the world has ever seen—John B. Gough; nor when the great Convention chorus shall lead them up the golden stairs and transport them in the swinging chariot of song; nor when the pageantry of states shall speak their mottoes and sing their songs and patriotism passes all its wonted bounds and mother-hearts cry out for this beloved land of ours, that it may be saved from impending doom; nor when the musical voice of a woman declares the unsearchable riches of Christ Jesus as she preaches the annual sermon—no, the whole long list of the program will stir them and please them, possibly as that of no other Convention has ever done, but what of that? It will be as nothing unless they have the fire from off the altar to purify their hearts, unify their plans, and weld together by the power of an endless love.

The W. C. T. U. is but in its beginning, yet to-day it is a great Saint Catherine wheel-window blazing upon the facade of the nineteenth century. Its foliations reach out to every civilized nation on the face of the globe—and upon its tracery throb, not the dismembered body of a Saint Catherine, but the throbbing hearts of near half a million women, set there in a sacrament of love for "God and Home and Every Land." Let but the sun of righteousness shine through it, making its tracery clear and sharp, and its colors pure and strong, and it shall continue to blaze high up over the portals of the new century pure with truth and soft with love, till "the light that lighteth the world" shall have reached all mankind and evil is no more. But let personal ambition shadow its glories, or unity and love be broken, and in time our great organization would stand like some dark cavernous window broken and jagged in an ancient ruined abbey where lie the buried hopes of the ages.

METHODS.

How can we best aid the unhappy masses? The devil-fish clutch of generations of the drink habit has brought them to their state of dolor.

Could we be instantly granted every reform we ask, while it would mean infinite alleviation and relief, the scars and twists and deformities of these sin-visited third and fourth generations could be but partially healed, smoothed and straightened. But our line of battle holds the hope of the ages—our snowy pennon catches the reflection of the earliest dawn. The working out of our plans reaches far out into the future; we are preparing fair conditions for a gloriously free generation to come. As we have tested one plan after another, our methods have come to differ materially from those of a few years ago, when the work was almost altogether reformatory. The veteran in the union lays plans for purely evangelistic effort, for the suffrage meeting, better teaching of scientific temperance, distribution of our literature, teaching home science in the mothers' meeting, securing those invaluable "early impressions" through Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legion, while the new member thinks we ought to use the money in the treasury to secure a "gospel temperance" speaker, and seek to repeat the inspiring scenes of past years with men and boys crowding up to take the pledge under cover of much shouting and singing.

While we may be faithfully using our strongest weapon—prayer, holding an occasional public meeting, circulating our literature as our means will allow, shaping and improving the household according to the measure of new light dawning upon us—in a word, sustaining our share of the great universal movement—she feels that nothing is being done because there is not some kind of hand-to-hand conflict with the saloon going on.

What have our great temperance revivals left behind them? Temptation not being removed, we have again and again seen our converts fall back, each recurring experiment seeming to shorten the time in which to look for the backsliding. Perhaps two or three stood, they are worth the time and work and money; but in the meantime the dramshops were making drunkards faster than we could save them. We must not neglect personal effort for the rescue of the individual, yet it is true that if we are to make any headway we must work for measures rather than men. In doing preventive, educational, legislative work we do gain ground. When we confine ourselves to reformatory methods we do some glorious things, but the devil of the dramshop works faster than we can. We must attack the source; raise the fallen as we can, but devote ourselves to untiring effort to annihilate the cause of the fall.

We want all our women to understand that the wisdom gained by experience calls for this change of methods. When we temperance women did nothing but persuade and pray after the Crusade had become an old story, we caused little agitation in the enemy's ranks. Liquor-sellers regarded us rather patronizingly. It pleased us and didn't hurt them any. It was rather a good thing for us to patch up the old wrecks for a fresh career of usefulness to them; but now, with our forty lines of work all bearing down on the same doomed center, the alarm is raised and they are warning one another to "beware the tireless efforts of a fanatical and unscrupulous foe"—"particularly the women Prohibitionists."

Sincere and clear-sighted temperance workers have long conceded that the thorough reformation of the drunkard can be only an occasional incident in carrying on the work, but in setting in motion these means and influences which begin to permeate society, and which tend slowly but surely toward drying up the fountain-head of the evil lies great and reasonable hope.

We are engaged in another phase of the same crusade Mother Thompson led off in Hillsboro. It was far easier to make that picturesque fight when one could see the power of the Lord being manifested right along than to faithfully stand guard and watch and instruct and prevent; but it is part of the same warfare, and a part which tries our metal and proves us good soldiers. Let us hold fast! Let us study together our duty as mothers and as citizens; work with the children; keep this great topic before the people from the platform and through the press; keep constantly in the voter's sight the accusation, Thou art the guilty man! Pray constantly for strength. Forces we scarcely dream of are at work; the glorious end will come.

THE MURDERED WOMAN.

It was suggested in a late editorial in The Advance that it might be well "to turn from the new woman to the murdered woman, and make her an object of earnest interest until her number diminishes, and her sisters are allowed to live out their days in peace and safety." If by the term "new woman," the mannish woman, the matadore woman, the pernicious woman of literature and of the stage is meant, as we have no doubt was the case, then we need not seek help from her for the murdered woman. But if by "new woman" is meant she who, for instance, receives her training at a coeducational institution, enters a profession, earns her own living, has opinions, is not a toy, and has heart culture as well as head culture, though she may wish to vote, or to be admitted to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, we need not turn from her. She may be happily married or hopelessly single, or devotedly single, but she is not likely to be "the Lady Macbeth of the church"—or of the world. She may be unhonored for a time, even by the good and the great, but she will not be "unhappy, semi-masculine, or a man-hater," but a lover of humanity, and we may hope much from her.

The world needs the "new woman" if by that term is meant the advanced woman, one who is trying to make the most of her own powers, and to help others to better conditions and higher attainments. Let us have the new woman and let us have her after the similitude of Him who went about doing good—after the similitude of a cultivated woman who calmly rode down the principal street of a large city in a patrol wagon with two policemen, the observed of all, because the exigencies of a case called for her to accompany an indigent old man, sick, feeble and a stranger in a strange land, to a hospital. What the world needs is applied Christianity. When we have more of it we will have fewer husbands who use knife, pistol, club or fist upon their wives. When we have more of it we will have less destruction of life, for the foolish gods will not be allowed to make men mad that they may destroy or be destroyed.

The advanced woman is she who is considering the human question, which necessarily includes the woman question. It is she who notes the number of women slain annually by drunken and brutal husbands and so called lovers. She may weep but she does something else. She seeks the causes of this domination of brute force over the physically weaker sex to such an extent that it is said on good authority that "during the two years 1893 and 1894 no fewer than two thousand wives were slain by their husbands, to say nothing of the many women who were butchered by jealous lovers, by men who had tired of their victims, or by brutes dominated by evil passions."

It is she who is studying the historic principles of liberty and is seeking to understand the processes of the evolution going on about her. She sees an approaching crisis in our civilization when one of three things must take place, either a centralization of power in the hands of the few, which is absolutism; or the triumph of personal independence, which is anarchy, or such an adjustment of rights as will continue and foster a willingness on the part of the individual to vest in the government his God-given right to protect himself.

All the pages of history are full of a conflict between these two principles, and from the groaning and grinding processes of the ages has come the most perfect organization of the social state which the world has ever seen, and accompanying it, and because of it, the most intense individualism. But the groaning and grinding process is not completed. Advanced men and women know that the balance is not perfectly adjusted, and that human rights are not well protected; that on the one hand personal liberty backed by wealth and its inherent power runs rampant and stabs and slays, while centralized power in the hands of nation, state or municipality, either allows itself to be defied by so-called personal liberty, or weakly succumbs to it, or openly allies itself to the enemy of society. In either case the result is the same.

Unless all the great statisticians of the world are mistaken or willfully misrepresent, the larger proportion of crime comes because of the drink habit. Unless our sci entific men are fools or knaves, unbalanced minds, frenzied fiends, red-handed, gloating murderers are made so and born so, because of the use of intoxicants. Is it only a "free fight" for the individual in this our high civilization? If so, the slaughter will go on. We might as well settle down to a quiet contemplation of the fact that "every day in the year an average of three helpless wives are shot to death, beaten to death, knifed, poisoned, strangled, or in some other way hurried out of this fair world by the men who promised to make life beautiful for them under their protecting arms and cherishing care," and to that other fact that "young women are in more danger from the young men with whom they associate as escorts, friends or admirers than from highwaymen, burglars and other professional outlaws." Witness the number of men on trial to-day for the killing of their wives, mistresses or sweethearts. Witness the fact that even among Hottentots, without intoxicants, in Southern Africa our W. C. T. U. missionary, Miss Palmer, knew she was safe and would be guarded from harm, even at the risk of the life of her attendant, while she shuddered with fear under the escort of civilized soldiers inflamed with liquor.

Until wrong ideas about the personal liberty of the few to destroy the many is corrected the slaughter of women will go on. So long as women are not tried by their peers and do not live under laws made by their peers, they will be discriminated against—to put it mildly. So long as the government under which they live does not lay its strong hand upon usages and practices which inflame the baser passions and make fiends of men, women will be the sufferers. So long as the principles of the gospel of love and righteousness and retribution are secondary the slaughter will go on, and will increase as the nation descends into alcoholic barbarism, fostered and perpetuated by the most glorious republic the world has ever seen, but which, alas, has blood upon its escutcheon. The advanced woman, as well as the thoughtful man, is pondering these things, and in her heart, if not with pen and voice, she cries out for applied Christianity in the home, the church and the government.

THE DISTRESSED ARMENIANS IN TURKEY.

The smouldering flames of discontent against the authorities of Turkey, who have delayed from week to week to adopt the scheme for reform in Armenia proposed by the representatives of the powers, have at last broken out in Constantinople. This new exhibition of riot, arrest and bloodshed intensifies the feeling of Christian people against the atrocities practiced by the Turk upon the poor Armenians—atrocities so dreadful that the worst must be withheld from public print. But pages of well authenticated deeds such as flaying alive, hacking to bits by piecemeal, boring out of eyes, torturing with red hot irons and pincers, gouging out of the stomach and filling the cavity with gunpowder soon to be ignited, the ravishing of hundreds of school girls by fiendish soldiers for days and their final slaughter,—these and other awful, unspeakable horrors, practiced upon a fleeing, naked and starving people by the Turks, ought to insure the enforcement of such measures by the Christian powers as would forever preclude the possibility of the recurrence of such deeds.

The following letter just received from the Duke of Westminster calls for contributions to aid Armenian fugitives, who are houseless wanderers living off of the scanty fare of poverty stricken friends, or dying from hunger:

To the Editors of THE UNION SIGNAL:

There is an additional distressing phase connected with the sufferings of the Armenians consequent on the losses they have sustained at the hands of the Turks, which calls for consideration and assistance from those who are ever ready to relieve distress in whatever part of the world.

Vice-Consul Shipley reports from Moush that "there is great distress, amounting in a great number of cases to abject destitution among the fugitives from Sasun," of which he and his colleagues have had many opportunities of convincing themselves from personal observation. Mr. Hallward, Her Majesty's vice-consul at Van, testifies that the need for relief is unquestionable; that there is an enormous amount of destitution, and that there will certainly be more before next winter.

This applies, we are assured, to the province of Bitlis, and to a large extent to Erzeroum, where there are survivors of the Sasun massacre—mostly women and children who have no one to provide for them—scattered about. A year ago these people were comparatively prosperous and comfortable, but are now barefoot and in rags, begging their daily bread from those who are not much better off than themselves.

Consul Graves forwards a private letter describing the deplorable condition of the people at Talvorig: "There are about 860 of these houseless wanderers now living in the woods and mountains, in caves and hollow trees, half naked, and some, indeed, entirely without covering for their nakedness. Bread they have not tasted for months, and curdled milk they only dream of living as they do upon greens and the leaves of trees. There are two varieties of greens which are preferred, but these are disappearing, as they wither at this season. Living on such food they have become sickly; their skin has turned yellow, their strength is gone, their bodies are swollen and fever is rife among them."

In addition to these there are thousands of refugees who, compelled by poverty and danger to abandon their village homes, have flocked into the towns where they hope to find personal safety and charity to keep them alive.

The committee of the Armenian Relief Fund has already remitted £3,000 to Sir Philip Currie, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, for the distribution of food and clothing in the distressed districts, and it is hoped that further aid may soon be at its disposal, as it is very urgently required. Any sums sent to Grosvenor House will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged. Remittances should be crossed "H. S. King & Co., Armenian Relief Fund."

FAITH AND LIBERALITY.

One cause of the failure of some Christian educational institutions to train up Christian men and women is a mistaken idea of what genuine liberality is. Some people seem to think that it is impossible to be broadminded if we believe anything. In the minds of such persons, the depth and breadth of a man's scholarship is gauged by the fullness with which he accepts all the results of the "higher criticism"; it is an evidence of bigotry to affirm that the fundamental truths of Christianity are not subjects of doubt. Such teaching as this is worse than the most utter skepticism, for the attitude of mind which dares not believe anything, which is too cowardly to scorn doubt of any kind is littleness and weakness itself. All the work of the world thus far has been done by men and women of strong convictions, who believed something with an intensity which made them willing to die for it, if need be, and there is every reason to believe that the same kind of people will carry on the work of the world to the end of time.

It is better to have an approximately correct view of the theory of inspiration than an utterly erroneous one; it is a legitimate subject of inquiry whether or not Isaiah wrote the entire book which bears his name, and we may profitably inquire into the original sources of the gospels, but mistaken views on these and similar minor subjects become insignificant indeed when compared with mistaken views on the great fundamental truths of life, death and eternity. A man may much better believe that Moses wrote the account of his own death and burial than to reject Moses altogether and stand by the open grave of his dear ones with no better consolation than that "his grief will grow less day by day."

But more than this, there are some things as well established as anything short of a mathematical demonstration can be. The hundred years of our national history serve to confirm the stories of Revolutionary days. Nineteen hundred years of Christian history prove something. That a handful of disheartened, frightened men suddenly came out from behind the locked doors, where "they were assembled for fear of the Jews," and began, with their fear all gone, to tell the strange story of a risen Master; that their preaching has turned the world upside down; that that preaching has lost none of its original power, but has at different times been the unmistakable cause of great epochs in the world's history, and is to-day the strongest moral force on this planet; that it is behind all philanthropic and reform movements; that it is spreading to heathen lands, and revolutionizing their civilizations; that it has created civilizations and languages among peoples that had none; that it is constantly working miraculous transformations in individual character; all these are facts as undeniable and obvious as any which science can produce, and they demand explanation quite as much as any other facts.

Christian parents have, therefore, a right to demand that professedly Christian institutions of learning should give to the facts of Christian history the same recognition, the same authority that they accord to other facts, and that, while allowing free investigation and the honest statement of points concerning which real doubt exists, they should, on the other hand, allow no undermining of the fundamental truths of Christianity which are established by a history which reaches back beyond the records of any other known historical documents. Nay, more, it is the duty of Christian parents to keep their children away from any so-called Christian institution which does not in its intellectual training establish the faith of its students in the fundamental truths of Christianity, and in its moral training develop a living Christian experience in the young people under its care.

The Archbishop of York recently invited a company of ministers—not of the Established Church—to spend the day with him, saying that it had always been to him a subject of regret that the clergy of the Church of England should have so few opportunities of social intercourse with the ministers of other religious communities, however much they might be divided on questions of church order or even of Christian doctrine. The invitation was warmly accepted, and the delightful day spent in social converse and in prayer was an omen of good for the church universal in all nations.

A discovery has been made during the past year which scientific men declare to be scarcely equaled in brilliancy by anything in the past. A few such achievements as those of Adams and Le Verrier, which resulted in the finding of Neptune, alone being worthy to rank with it. It is the discovery of a fifth elementary gas, an additional constituent of the atmosphere. The new gas is named argon and constitutes so small a proportion of the atmosphere that its discovery is styled a "triumph of the last place of decimals." For a hundred years, scientists have supposed that the component parts of the air we breathe were known beyond doubt. So assured were they also that the four elementary gases, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen and chlorine were all that existed that the announcement of a fifth elementary gas was received with great skepticism. Reliable experiments have, however, proved the existence of the new element and it is now announced that probably science will have to revise its former teachings concerning atmospheric air, though it will require immense labor and much time to determine the effect of the newly discovered constituent. The discoverers of argon are two English scientists, Lord Rayleigh and Prof. Wm. Ramsay.

Alice Hilton speaking of "the new woman" in the August Chautauquan had this to say: "The advent of a fashion requiring a woman to be able to do something more than cling and consume must tend to good, if it do nothing more than reduce the number of helpless creatures. She is not new in the world; not new anywhere in the world. For, the woman of all countries and times, the woman who has breathed her soul into all human progress, the most numerous woman of civilized lands and especially of the United States, has been, and is, a woman strong, capable, economically a producer of wealth, and socially equal to 'her man,' or any other man of her environment."

Why is the Mohammedan boy in Bombay better prepared to resist drink than the Christian boy in Boston or Liverpool? Because his Bible (the only one he knows, and he calls it the Koran) teaches him that it is his solemn duty to abstain from alcohol. This teaching has come down from father to son; it has been worked into the warp and woof of his character, and has been engraven upon that childish memory which is "wax to receive and marble to retain." "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." This flood-tide is the flowing torrent of the youthful soul. The formative period of the brain is gelatinous, and an impression once made there is more deeply cut than it can be again; silver workers say that when you can see your face in the molten metal, that is the time to work. So it is with the heart of childhood in that impressionable stage when it reflects your character and teaching; then stamp with a firm true hand the white cross upon the soul, the habits of personal cleanliness of life with total abstinence from strong drink as their basis. We are not willing to time the step of the Sunday-school regiment with its "mighty swing of conquest" to the slowest foot in the last battalion; we are not willing to leave the defenseless little one, with his mocking enemy of inheritance, and his measureless temptations legalized and set along the street, at the mercy of the lukewarm superintendent or the indifferent teacher. We want the organic methods of the day school and Sunday-school upon the side of temperance teaching. They have their wheels and levers, cogs, bolts and bands, all in position; what we ask is permission to "gear on" the temperance wheel and set it spinning round the world, from this central motive power.

QUEENSLAND.

A BUDGET OF NEWS.

Throughout Queensland unions are holding annual meetings, preparatory to Colonial convention. In this colony there are forty unions in working order. At the district conventions last summer reports showed how much practical good is being accomplished by them. The Mac Kay W. C. T. U. has a choir of Kanaka "boys" from the sugar plantations, whose singing at public meetings is very interesting. The union at Townsville has a rescue home, where girls are received who wish to lead reformed lives. The Charters Towers union has been instrumental in sending several from their town. They and the Townsville union have also appointed deputations to wait upon the police magistrate, re publicans supplying drink to children under age, and also during prohibited hours. The deputations were courteously received and the act read, his worship agreeing that their step was necessary.

Some of the unions in the north have open social evenings in the winter, and regular open-air meetings in the summer, which are productive of good to many; also fortnightly united temperance gospel meetings, and cake and apron fair in afternoon, with coffee supper in the evening. The Mount Morgan union held a most successful booth on sports' day, when a thriving business was done, and all who took part thoroughly enjoyed their work. A quantity of temperance literature is always distributed at these booths. This union is starting a service of song, proceeds for headquarters in Brisbane.

The W. C. T. U. booth at the annual exhibition, Brisbane, was even a greater success than usual, the many helpers having to fly around to keep their customers supplied. The country people look forward to this booth of white-ribbon women as one of the sights of the exhibition, and it is patronized by all. Other unions have taken up this work, and at the agricultural shows in many brisk towns temperance drinks are to be obtained, where a few years ago such a thing was quite unknown, and, of course, as a natural consequence, the crowds are more orderly and better tempered. Tract distribution is a department that is taken up by every union, and in country districts where there is not always room for much other work, this is carried out in such a systematic manner that in a few years this large colony will be completely sown with literature by white-ribboners; passengers on trains, in steamers, by train and bus all receive gladly these little messengers of love.

Most of the unions hold regular mothers' meetings once a fortnight, when sewing is done and the women are allowed to buy it at cost price. This is found to be a means of bringing many to the meetings who would not otherwise attend; they are also given practical advice for treatment in cases of accident and children's illnesses; books are lent them on useful subjects, and those who work so earnestly in spite of many discouragements are educating and helping these women to rise to higher things than the daily necessary routine of life. The subject of social purity is brought before these meetings, and is awakening a desire in the hearts of these mothers to help forward the day when Christ's kingdom of peace and purity shall reign upon the earth.

The Y's are busy with many departments. Those at Charters Towers do good work among the miners and others and have considerably increased their membership. The Gympie Y's gave a happy afternoon treat to the poor children of Gympie. The townspeople were most liberal with subscriptions and donations of goods. A paddock was lent them where the sixty children had a lovely picnic with games, races and plenty of good things to gladden their young hearts and a pretty handkerchief each at parting.

The Townsville Y has only been started fourteen months. They have given socials to the newsboys, are starting a flower mission, visit the hospital regularly and supply the river steamers with literature. Young girls who were visited by the Y's when sick in the hospital, have gladly joined the union when well again. Public entertainments and socials given by the different Y unions are always very successful. "Congress of Nations" and other American dialogues are very popular. The Bundaberg Y's hired the local theater for a representation of "Columbia's Conclave," published by the W. T. P. A., which was a great success, all items being carried out in first-class style.

The tenth annual convention is to be held September 17 to 20 in the lecture hall of Baptist City Tabernacle, Brisbane. On the evening of 16th there will be a reception of delegates, hostesses and friends, when ministers and representatives of temperance societies will speak. On 20th a grand evening demonstration of Loyal Temperance Legions, and 17th a Y evening. A new departure is to be taken for the luncheons. Instead of the sumptuous repasts of other conventions, a simple lunch is to be provided of sandwiches, brown and wheaten bread, cakes, etc.; as hygiene is one of the union's departments, it is thought right and proper to carry out these principles.

CHILE.

AN ORGANIZING TRIP.

In response to an invitation from Brother Juan Canut de Bon, of Angol, I accompanied my husband on a visit to the churches in the south of Chile, and was present at a temperance reunion in Angol—my first real organizing trip. Brother Canut has instructed both men and women to wear the white ribbon, and they understand by it not simply abstinence from intoxicants, but Christian purity as the Bible commands. Angol is about one hundred miles from Concepcion. Just before our arrival there, while we tarried at a junction, Mr. Arms was immediately accosted by a nice looking German, "You are the pastor?" Receiving an affirmative reply, "I thought so by your white ribbon," he continued. An introduction followed to other men, each with a little white band in the coat lapel. At another junction others joined us, and when we reached Angol station full thirty men and women were standing on the platform to greet us. Our coachman even wore the little talisman.

On Saturday evening over two hundred people gathered in the little rented chapel. We sang (but no organ has yet been donated in response to my plea in Zion's Herald) and celebrated La fiesta de agapas, our Methodist love feast. This was followed by an experience meeting, in which husbands and wives testified to the change in their homes since they found the Saviour.

On Sunday morning Goodsil preached, in Spanish, of course, on "Precious blood." Again the chapel was full, and a more interested audience I never saw. At the close of this service I met the women in the inner court (patio) and explained to them the work and position of the W. C. T. U. Meanwhile, the men removed the benches, brought in tables, etc., etc., and dinner was served then in the chapel. All was done quietly and in order, the women doing their work as deftly as our sisters in the home lands.

We had the popular Spanish chicken casuela, a side dish of meat and vegetables, a plate of garbanzos, with ham, roast mutton and salad, pudding, pie, fruit and coffee.

These people are from the lower, or paeon class, all day laborers, earning small pay and living in poor tenements. How they ever prepared such a dinner; where they obtained napkins, tablecloths, dishes, etc., all is a wonder to me. Between the courses, and when there was any delay in serving, we had songs and recitations.

After dinner I met the women again and organized a union with twenty-four members. I expect the men will join later as honorary members. I asked them to pay to the World's treasurer, ten cents per member. The president is Senora Virginia Canut; secretary, Senora Luisa Beltran; corresponding secretary, Demetria Gallegos.

On Sunday evening we had communion, and Brother Canut talked on "The Baptism of Power." Again we noted the same intense interest, and in an after-meeting, lasting till past midnight, the manifestations of the Spirit's presence were like those in the early days of Methodism. On Monday morning we were accompanied to the station by our white-ribboned hosts and hostesses, I returning to the college, and my husband, with twenty-four from other frontier towns, passing to their homes.

People along the line whispered "Protestants," and we were everywhere the objects of interest, but I am sure I was never more glad to be conspicuous than in such a company. It was a great gathering for Chile, and I am sure the first of its kind. I prophesy that it will not be the last, but here everything moves slowly.

After our years of seed-sowing these signs of a harvest are most precious. Only in yesterday's daily I read a copy of new temperance laws, proposed to congress by President Montt. These things indicate an awakening sentiment most grateful to us, who have seen its entire absence in the past years.

I must not forget to tell of the new Loyal Temperance Legion in Concepcion. I meet with the children every other Saturday, and have ordered pledge cards, with the Chilian flag printed on the back.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

MRS. ROSSETER-WILLARD, editor of the Woman's Signal Budget, official organ of the B. W. T. A., is a gifted young woman from Nebraska and a white-ribboner of many years standing.

THE cabinet photograph group of the World's officers—Miss Willard, Lady Somerset, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Sanderson and Miss Slack is especially good. Each figure is a fine likeness and the picture is a welcome addition to a worker's gallery or album. This and the picture of the Polyglot Petition can be obtained from the World's W. C. T. U. corresponding secretary, Miss Agnes E. Slack, Ripley, Derbyshire, England, at one shilling each, postpaid. The small profit on these will be given to the funds of the W. W. C. T. U.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER has already sent $1,663 to Mrs. Sanderson of Canada, the new treasurer to the World's W. C. T. U. The National W. C. T. U. of the United States is by far the largest contributor of the World's. In view of the fact that the president is also the president of the World's W. C. T. U., the American National should be represented by another officer so that it may have its full vote on the executive committee, since each nation is entitled to a vote in that body, and the World's president is entitled to a vote by reason of her office.

WHITE ribbon women have every reason to be proud of the record made by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, whose work has obliged the highest authorities in Great Britain to take cognizance of the evil of the Contagious Diseases Acts, and also of the abomination of the opium traffic, not only in its relation to the brain but to the chastity of those who use it. These ladies have recently brought out a printed statement recording their investigations in the East. This pamphlet was circulated at the World's W. C. T. U. meetings, and it furnished most startling disclosures with regard to the effect of the accursed drug.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

"COMING OF AGE" CONVENTION.

Promptly at 9:30 our twenty-first annual meeting opened on the morning of September 26, in Foundry M. E. church. This is the church where Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes belonged while she lived in Washington, both as the wife of the senator from Ohio and as the mistress of the White House during those bright years when wine was banished from its hospitality. Some years later this church was the scene of the "non-partisan" effort from which the split in our National ranks proceeded, for Mrs. J. Ellen Foster was and still is a member of this distinguished church.

Seven symbolic years have passed since last its doors were opened to an annual meeting of the W. C. T. U., and the loyal sisters who read these lines will realize that our grateful hearts were swelling with praise to Him who chastens but to save. The sorrow is forgotten in joy when we diligently consider the but half realized successes of that golden cycle the last seven years.

The decorations of the church consisted of flags, ferns, flowers and palms, arranged by the skillful hands of our superintendent of flower mission. A portrait of Miss Willard on an easel graced the platform. Festooned around the gallery were the folds of a petition which is now all ready to go to Congress. It is called the "Voice of the Churches," and contains the signatures of all the pastors and officers of the Congregational, Baptist, Friends, United Brethren, Methodist and Christian churches of this city, as well as several other denominations, asking for total prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia.

Mrs. M. E. Griffith, the president, called the meeting to order and in a few well chosen words stated the object and occasion of the assembly. The devotions were conducted by Mrs. Jennie Bartlett, minutes and roll-call read by Mrs. Shelton, the recording secretary. The usual committees were appointed and then Mrs. Griffith introduced Rev. O. A. Brown, the pastor of Foundry church, whose ringing words of welcome are with us yet. He said, "You can challenge any organization to produce a grander work, either in conception, in delineation or in consummation. Looking back over the past you can gather comfort to continue your blest labors." Mrs. R. R. West in her response referred to the speaker as one whom God Himself had called and ordained to speak forth His messages of truth.

The corresponding secretary, Miss Weightman, read a report in which the results of a year's labors and struggles and achievements were condensed and was listened to with close attention.

At 11:30 began a unique feature of the convention, namely, the "reception of pastors." No less than fourteen pastors came forward, were introduced and greeted the convention with warmest commendation. Their remarks were spicy and pithy but above all laudatory. Where, where can there be found such pastors as those of Washington?

The noontide hour of prayer was not forgotten but promptly on the stroke of twelve Mrs. Bieler, wife of the Vice Chancellor of the new American University, voiced the devotions of the assembly.

In the afternoon the president, Mrs. M. E. Griffith, delivered her annual address. It was an able document, and one of which any society may well be proud. Soon after, the question-box appeared. It was presided over by Mrs. M. E. Cohen, vice-president. Thereupon ensued a lively time. What else could be expected when a church full of live temperance women has projected upon them such questions as, "Does prohibition prohibit?" "Should temperance people stop at hotels having bars?" "How many temperance hotels are there in Washington?" "How shall we stem the tide of Sunday excursions?" "Should our delegates or visitors make such engagements as compel them to use street cars on Sunday?" and many others equally pertinent. The greatest latitude was allowed in the discussion and perfect good feeling reigned.

Department work was well set forth in the reports of superintendents scattered through the whole time allotted to the convention. Our twenty-five active departments were represented. Each superintendent is a specialist in her line. Did space in these columns permit, I would gladly summarize each of these valuable reports. By invitation the W. C. T. U. took possession of the regular weekly prayer-meeting that was held in the church that evening.

Officers for the coming year were elected on the second day. The whole number of voting members was found to be one hundred and twenty-two. Mrs. Griffith announced that she would retain the chair, not being in any sense a candidate, as her home in future is to be in a distant city. The balloting resulted in the election for president of Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, who has long been the president of North Capitol auxiliary, and is a lady staunch and true, energetic and capable, as is proven by her utterances from the platform and through the press. She is the author of some of the ablest leaflets in the repertory of our National literature.

After being escorted to the platform and greeted with the Chautauqua salute Mrs. Platt accepted the position in a few well-chosen words. Then every heart joined in a prayer for guidance divine. All of the other officers were reëlected. Mrs. S. D. LaFetra and Mrs. J. S. Bartlett were made delegates to the National with alternates, Mrs. H. A. Gillenwater and Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley. The treasurer eported the total receipts of the year $2,479.89, and the balance in treasury $84.91.

Among the pleasant incidents of the convention was the presence of the white-ribbon baby, Evelyn Emig. She is a wee little lady in long clothes. She never took the floor or made a bit of noise (that part can wait until some future day when she may be president of the triumphant W. C. T. U. of D. C.) except at the social lunch hour, when she passed from group to group in the hands of her admirers. There were with us two aged ladies who arose to their feet when early workers were called out. The Y's sat in a body on the east side of the church. Pages were selected from their ranks. Mrs. Griffith showed copies of the new book, "Life and Labors of Mary A. Woodbridge." Through the whole the program was well carried out and kept up to time.

The crowning pleasure was the evening, with Loyal Temperance Legion exercises, conducted by Mrs. Alfred Wood, and plenty of good singing by the "Y choir" arrayed in their new and unique costumes of white cashmere bishop gowns and Oxford caps to match.

Mrs. LaFetra, beloved superintendent of Y work, "told us all about it" in her own happy, informal way.

The secretary of the Y Branch, Mrs. Emig, read the full report of that organization. It was rich with incident and accomplishment. I would gladly transcribe the whole did space allow, but think the Y work of the District is worthy of a separate letter.

We have voted to provide a luncheon for such of the delegates to the National Convention in Baltimore as many come to Washington to see the capital city and Mount Vernon. Low rates by rail are asked for.

NEW YORK.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The twenty-second annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state of New York was held in the Central Presbyterian church of Rochester, "The Flower City," September 24, 25, 26. The commodious church, admirably adapted for a large convention, with bunting and banners, flowers and palms, had been beautified for our coming, while from the lofty flagstaff "Old Glory" floated to the breeze during the days of our assembling.

Of the "elect" and "elected" women of the state the recorded delegation was 426 representing our white-ribboners. We truly rejoiced that our beloved president and treasurer as well as many more of our women who have been "the wide sea o'er" during the past summer had returned in safety. They all reported a delightful time abroad, but are glad to sing, "My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty."

The platform during the sessions had a national, and I might add international air, as at various times Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's superintendents; Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, Miss Clara Parrish, of National repute; Miss Lillian Phelps, from across the border, and Miss Susan B. Anthony, the noble champion of us all, were brought forward for presentation.

The routine work of the convention was conducted with a precision which elicited loudest praise. That the work had been planned and the plan worked was apparent.

ADDRESSES AND REPORTS.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt began her annual address with a beautiful illustration of an ocean vessel's "lookout" on duty, compared to the good ship Temperance with its watchmen of our various divisions, local, county and state, who with grateful hearts breathe out the words, "all's well." This was but an introduction to a comprehensive résumé of the year's work. The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances W. Graham, sounded just like a book, as in addition to her regular items she had incorporated many features and incidents of the work, which, but for her watchful eye would have been lost to record. The ring of the true metal was heard in the excellent report of the treasurer, Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney.

The superintendents of the twenty-seven departments of work nearly all reported in person. The keynote of each was progress. These addresses and reports were more than bare recitals of facts, being articles of real literary merit as well, and to this is due the fact that the interest was well sustained until the last one was heard. It is impossible to estimate the impetus given to the general work by the indefatigable efforts of these faithful officers and superintendents.

NEW FEATURES.

The county president's hour:—This was led by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, the first vice-president. When the name of a county was called, its delegation stood, while the county president recited a Scripture passage or sentiment associated with her work during the year. This hour gave a spiritual uplift to the convention at its beginning.

The roll call of counties having secured one hundred or more new members within the past year was another new feature. Ten counties responded. Their presidents assembled upon the platform and were enthusiastically greeted by the convention. Franklin county received honorable mention, having paid dues for her new members as early in the year as February. Clinton is the banner county, having added one hundred and forty-eight to her membership.

An hour with L. T. L. Juniors and Seniors under the supervision of Mrs. H. A. Metcalf, state superintendent, was something new. Fred D. Squires, the state president of the L. T. L's (for you must know they have a state organization of their own) was present and gave a short address.

IN MEMORIAM.

This impressive service was conducted by the president. Revelations 7 was read, this being the same chapter read at the memorial service of the World's Convention at London. Three hundred and twenty-eight of our number have heard, during the year, the Master's call, "Come up higher." Among these Mrs. Allen Butler, our first state president, Mrs. O. C. Dounce and Mrs. C. W. Leete, former county presidents. Fitting words of tribute were spoken in memory of our beloved dead.

OFFICERS.

The officers were all reëlected except the recording secretary, Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, who after occupying the office twelve years positively declined a reëlection because of the pressure of other duties. Present officers: President, Mrs. Mary T. Burt; first vice-president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances W. Graham; recording secretary, Mrs. Nellie H. Hutchinson; treasurer, Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney.

PRESENTATIONS.

After the election of officers Mrs. Kishlar, on behalf of the Monroe county W. C. T. U., presented Mrs. Burt with a beautiful gavel, silver bound, the wood of which was taken from the house in which Miss Willard was born. The last day of the convention was Mrs. Graham's birthday. Mrs. T. J. Bissell, on behalf of Monroe county, presented her with a set of Grace Aguilar's works. As the box had a band of white ribbon around it, she accepted the gift by singing, "There are bands of ribbon white around the world." By the way, Mrs. Graham is our own sweet singer, and was musical director of the convention. Her soulful voice was heard many times. Miss Julia E. Dailey, who resigned her position as editor of the state paper, received a set of books also. Mrs. Gardenier the ex-recording secretary, was the most "gifted" of all with tokens of affection, which were a surprise, but will be treasured for the love they express.

EVENING MEETINGS.

These were largely attended; the addresses of welcome, from Rev. H. H. Stebbins, Mrs. L. F. Parish and Mrs. T. J. Bissell, were admirable. Mrs. Boole, although invited at a late hour to respond to these in the absence of Miss Varnum, did it beautifully. The evening addresses were given by Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, Miss Clara Parrish and John G. Woolley. They were each at their best, and by their eloquence and convincing arguments deeply impressed their audiences. An impressive feature of Y night was the consecrating of Lucian Harold Dudley, the five months old son of a Y and honorary, to the temperance work.

NOTES.

The midday luncheons were served in the church to the delegates and visitors, leaving quite a time for conferences or social intercourse. Every available nook was occupied by groups of workers anxious to gain all the information possible, the conference upon scientific temperance instruction being the most largely attended.

The sales table of the Y's and the literature table were well patronized.

The devotional meetings at eight o'clock in the morning were seasons of refreshing.

A beautiful souvenir program, with full-page pictures of the five general officers, was greatly prized. The large supply was soon exhausted. The musical program was also a thing of beauty, but space forbids a longer report.

The beautiful hospitality of the Rochester women, our courteous treatment by the citizens generally, the harmonious workings of the convention, will mark the twenty-second convention as one of our best. The year's work is done, and we have entered upon another filled with the spirit of our state song, which is from the gifted pen of Mrs. H. Roscoe Edgett:

"All hail, New York's, white-ribbon host!
All hail, our sisters brave!
A Christlike service fills our days—
We seek the lost to save.
Our Prince—Immanuel—God with us—
We wage our peaceful war,
From victory to victory
We shout Excelsior!"

KANSAS.

ANNUAL GATHERING.

We will praise the Lord for Kansas,
For her prairies grand and free;
For her climate, for her people
Full of life and energy.
And for laws promoting temperance
She may well the leader be
As she goes marching on.

And if our prohibitory law is not wholly enforced at all points in the state, it is so much in advance of the license system, either high or low, as a preventive of the drink evil that I feel like adding right here:

Once we looked with pride on Kansas
As a refuge for the slave;
Now our hearts with joy are swelling,
'Tis a refuge from the grave,
For the victims of the wine-cup
By our laws we hope to save,
As we go marching on.

The W. C. T. U., with the spirit of this refrain in the hearts of its members, has again assembled in annual conference to tell of the victories achieved, the reverses met and to plan for a renewed effort "all along the line" for the coming year. Not having had the precious privilege of meeting with the assembled hosts, I must gather my information from the press of Hutchinson (kindly forwarded to me).

Hutchinson, the city chosen for the state convention, is a little south of the geographical center of the state, but is out on what was recently called the frontier. It is a flourishing city. The state reformatory is located there and is naturally an object of interest to the W. C. T. U. which is denominated as "organized motherhood." The hearts beating beneath the white ribbon throb with love and sympathy for all wayward youth.

The convention opened at 2:30 p. m., Tuesday, September 17, but for some time previous there had been a bustle of preparation in arranging conveniently located parlors for headquarters. Rooms were prepared in the Woodard block, handsomely decorated and made to look cozy and homelike. The famous World's Fair picture of Miss Willard and her political peers, was given prominence. By the way, Mrs. Wall, the artist who designed it, is a resident of Hutchinson, and was present at the convention. The sessions were held in the M. E. church.

Tuesday afternoon was largely devoted to preliminaries and district reports. A parliamentary drill was conducted by our lawyer, Mrs. Ella W. Brown, of Holton. These drills are always instructive as well as entertaining, and are of much benefit in training us for future citizenship. When that glad day comes it will be a matter of surprise to some of our good male citizens that the women are so well qualified for active citizenship.

Rev. J. C. Hall, pastor of the church, opened the first evening's exercises, the music being furnished by the choir. In the absence of the mayor, Judge F. L. Martin briefly but very cordially welcomed the convention to the city. Rev. A. F. Irwin gave an eloquent greeting in behalf of the churches, and Mrs. Hodges, for the Woman's Club. Hon. O. E. Comstock voiced the welcome of the Commercial Club, and Mrs. Alice Vincent, president of Scott union, for the W. C. T. Unions. After a beautiful solo, rendered by Mrs. Frank Coliaday, The Rev. Eugenia F. St. John delighted the audience with a brilliant response D. L. Wall followed with a solo, and President L. B. Smith gave her annual message to her constituents. She declared that temperance sentiment is growing, that men are more open to conviction along temperance lines than ever before, and that it is a menace to our republic to assert that the prohibitory law cannot be enforced.

One feature of the convention was the singing of the Kansas song, composed by our state secretary, Mrs. Hartough, to be sung at National Convention by Kansas delegates. The song proved very popular, and was sung repeatedly.

The reports of superintendents were upon the whole very encouraging, and showed that much good work had been done during the year just closed. The attendance of delegates was quite large. The state officers were all present and many of the superintendents. The reëlection of Mrs. L. B. Smith, of Ottawa, as president, was good news to her many faithful sisters throughout the state. Mrs. S. M. Hartough, of Leavenworth, our faithful recording secretary, consented to again "take the minutes of the convention," Mrs. Jessie Maxey, of Ottawa, will again answer all state correspondence, Mrs. Hutchinson was elected to preside over the "money bags," and our tried and true editor, Miss Olive P. Bray, again takes the helm to guide Our Messenger.

Thursday afternoon an "Ideal Parlor meeting" was conducted by Mrs. M. C. Gillette. Miss Clothier, Mrs. St. John, Mrs. Evans and others gave spicy talks and Miss Edith Hill an interesting recitation. The meeting closed with refreshments and was pronounced a success.

In convention Rev. St. John gave an interesting Bible exposition, which received closest attention and many words of commendation. The address of Wednesday evening was by Miss Ida B. Clothier, of Colorado, National lecturer and organizer. Miss Minnie Wooddell, of Hutchinson, sang a beautiful solo, and the mandolin club discoursed sweet music. Thursday evening Rev. Edith Hill (our girl preacher), pastor of the first Baptist church, of Pittsburg, Kas., gave an eloquent discourse from Revelations, on "The Four Horses." She likened the red horse to sin, the black horse to justice, the pale horse to death, and the white horse to the Redeemer of the world. Pointing out the condition of America today, where the powers of government are so largely in collusion and partnership with sin, she showed the struggle now going on between the cohorts of sin and the followers of the white horse, which at last are to become conquerors over all.

The spirit of the Master was present in all the devotional exercises, and a spiritual uplift was felt by all.

An unusually long list of resolutions was passed, among the number one indorsing the course of study outlined by the Equal Suffrage Association for the coming year, one declaring that no superintendent is fitted for her work without our papers, one commending the faithful efforts of the Temple workers, and praying that its projector may meet with financial success.

NOTES.

An open parliament with four minute speeches on the topic, "Will the enfranchisement of women affect the enforcement of law?" proved that the women of Kansas are as quick at repartee and as sharp in debate as are the sons of the sunflower state.

On Tuesday dainty lunches were served by the Nickerson and McPherson unions at headquarters, and souvenirs given each individual, a hand painted pansy booklet tied with white ribbon.

Kingman and Newton ladies served the refreshments Wednesday and gave as souvenirs a tiny fan tied with our ribbon white and inscribed "W. C. T. U. We can trust you to raise a breeze for prohibition."

Thursday the Hutchinson sisters entertained the delegates at the Streator hotel and presented each with a tiny white silk sack of fine salt tied with yellow ribbon on which was inscribed, "Kansas, W. C. T. U., 1895. The salt of the earth."

Carriages were furnished delegates to visit the salt works, also enabling them to accept the kind invitation to visit the state reformatory.

The next annual is to be held at Kansas City, Kan.

LOUISIANA.

PROGRESS ALL ALONG THE LINE.

The present year has been most emphatically a year of progress in the great principles of temperance and morality. One parish after another has planted the prohibition banner. The parish of De Soto has just given a majority of nearly six hundred for prohibition. We hear of several other parishes that promise victory over the saloon in the near future.

The thinking faculty of the people has been awakened, and a public sentiment created that makes it highly probable that within the next year every parish in the state, with the exception of Orleans, will have voted out the saloon.

To-day's issue of the Morning Herald, published in Monroe, says, "The wave of prohibition is rolling on in North Louisiana, and it is confidently predicted that in a short time every parish from Vicksburg to Shreveport will hoist the white ribbon as its banner of victory."

The cause of prohibition has advanced so much that it is beginning to assume a place in the political affairs of the day. A wide field here offers for the women of understanding, discretion and sagacity to bring the influence of these qualities upon the voters of their individual families, and impress upon them the truth that morals and intelligence should be the basis upon which to select those who are to represent the welfare, the honor and moral elevation of the people.

Here is the opportunity for efficient, capable women to quietly assist in the election of such men as can be trusted to correct the abuses and evils of the liquor traffic. The passing years have wrought such change in the popular estimate of woman that the learning once considered so dangerous for her is now her surest letter of credit—and she is now called upon to aid in creating the public sentiment so necessary in effecting any reform. These changes should be prophetic of what women may accomplish for the happiness of the race, by strong, united and energetic action among themselves.

It was said by Goethe, "The longer I live in the world, the more certain am I that the difference between the great and the insignificant, is energy, invincible determination, an honest purpose once fixed, and then victory." I quote this to remind my white ribbon sisters of what may be accomplished by labor, energy, perseverance and self-reliance combined. Rouse women to a belief in their own natural ability, and a desire to cultivate and sustain their noblest powers, let them acquire knowledge commensurate with their natural qualifications, and the result will be the birth of new liberty, power and influences that will guide or illumine, civilize or elevate, the social world that is profoundly absorbed, and radiantly satisfied with its various distractions and noisy conflicts. Trammeled as women have been in the past by ancient custom and modern folly, their outlook has contracted, beyond the responsibilities and duties of a tender mother and bustling housewife, and their noblest actions have been in accord with the maxim laid down by the wise men of past ages that to be unknown in public was the highest tribute to their virtue, delicacy and refinement.

If our women could be made to realize the fact that each home, no matter how stately or lowly, is affected by all the problems of civic government, by the saloon and gambling den, and the innumerable consequences that follow in their wake, the apathy and indifference that lies like a baleful incubus over the minds of a majority of our women and prevents their actively engaging in work for temperance, would be succeeded by a zeal and activity, sure, earnest and unceasing, till not only every woman had pledged allegiance to the white ribbon, but every home was under the protection of prohibition laws, whose fair product will be a nobler system of morality and firmer religious conviction.

Mother Stewart, who has been in Chicago for the past four weeks under the care of a specialist, is so much recovered as to be able to return to her home. Her many friends will be glad to learn that the removal of the cause of many years' suffering seems to have given her an extension of time.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary of the Y Branch, has visited New York, Ohio and Indiana state conventions this month, speaking for the young women in her usual graceful and winning manner She will rally her forces as in former years at the National Y conferences during the Baltimore Convention.

At the Central New York conference of the M. E. church, held in Newark, N. Y., the first week in October, the vote taken on the admission of women to the General Conference, was ninety-nine in favor and sixty-five opposed. Rev. Dr. Buckley was upon the platform when the vote was taken, and he is said to have appeared calm.

The department of finding homes for homeless children, of which Mrs. Merrill, of Maine, is National superintendent, has had its latest protégé in the person of a friendless little four-year-old boy, who came over with Miss Willard and Miss Gordon. He was sent by Lady Henry Somerset to be placed in some nice home in prohibition Maine. On his arrival, he was taken in charge by Miss Kate Lunden, our Scandinavian organizer, whose experiences in conducting the dear little fellow to Portland were unique and enlivening.

Colorado held its annual W. C. T. U. gathering at Canon City, on October 1 to 4 with eighty-five delegates. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford; vice-president, Mrs. M. A. Cassell, Denver; corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. A. Alderdice, Pueblo; recording secretary, Mrs. Josephine Hicks, Denver; treasurer, Mrs. Mira R. Sprague. They open a Lecture Bureau for the year with Mrs. Laura A. Berry as its chairman. John G. Woolley is expected for a campaign soon.

A marriage has been arranged between Lady Catharine Vere de Vere Beauclerk, second daughter of the Duke of St. Albans, and Henry Somers Somerset, of Eastnor Castle, England, heir presumptive to the Dukedom of Beaufort and only child of Lady Henry Somerset. Mr. Somerset's book of travels in Athabasca entitled "The Land of the Muskeg," and brought out by William Heinemann, the London publisher, has had a large sale and has been most favorably reviewed by the metropolitan press. The marriage is expected to take place at Easter.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

If a text were to be chosen for my column this week, that text would undoubtedly be, "On to Baltimore." But, alas, the deductions from that text would resemble too closely those frequently drawn from others, in that they would have but little practical application, at the time of their delivery (into your hands). Baltimore is a future dream now, but the steady onward rush of the days will have made it, before this issue of The Union Signal shall have reached your homes, a present reality, and thus to announce a coming event would be to record a past one.

Nevertheless, it is impossible to keep from writing of that which, alone, fills heart and hand, and I remember, too, that not all our readers will go to Baltimore—the more's the pity.

If you were to take a peep in at National Headquarters these days you would see it fairly bubbling over with work and the pleasant bustle of preparation. The program has been the all engrossing matter for weeks past, but that has, at last, passed to its final reading, while at this very hour the auditor, Mrs. Bigelow, treasurer of the National Temperance Hospital, is going through Mrs. Barker's carefully kept vouchers preparatory to the printing of the treasurer's report.

The last bit of copy for the corresponding secretary's report was handed in this morning, October 9. Several states are as yet unheard from, but it was impossible to wait longer and have the report printed before Convention. I may be able to make place for the delinquents in the Minutes, and they will all appear in the tabulated report, which will not be printed until after Convention.

Seven states—Pennsylvania, New York, Maine, Connecticut, Iowa, Southern California and Oregon—have gained five hundred new members, most of them in excess of that, and will, therefore, take part in the program on Benefit Night, Tuesday, October 23. Ohio has gained fully one thousand new members, but the treasurer's books do not show that gain "in excess of last year's membership," which was the condition to entrance upon Benefit Night. Miss Willard will be in attendance upon the Pennsylvania convention this week, as that is the state making the largest gain. New York, which comes second in the list, had held its convention before her arrival.

It seems rather early to be planning new work, and yet I most earnestly hope that the echoes of the Convention will not be permitted to die away before each white-ribboner will have girded on the armor anew for another year of conflict. This may be the last time I shall speak to you from this work, so suffer the word of exhortation, and let the gains of this year count as losses before the splendid advances of the year to come. This can be made possible only by each one's doing her own individual best.

I hope the local unions will make good use of the President's Annual Address and the Annual Minutes in their work. Send in your orders for the latter in advance that Headquarters may know how many must be printed. Each individual union should have at least one copy and should use it as a text-book.

I can hardly realize that I have come up to the last series of notes for this year. It seems only yesterday that I first, with fear and trembling, ventured into this column. My heart is filled with a gratitude too deep for words for all the kindnesses you have shown me. May God abundantly bless us, each one, and lead us to better service, wherever called to serve, in the year to come. Yours most sincerely,

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Street, Chicago.

The National Temperance Hospital and Sanitarium has completed another successful year. The annual meeting was characterized by the same practical, earnest enthusiasm which has brought it to its present place of importance and power. This week a few quotations from the report of our admirable secretary, Mrs. Watson Thatcher, are given to the readers of The Union Signal, to be followed by the treasurer's report in the next number:

"The mark toward which all the forces centered in the National Temperance Hospital is aimed is the thorough and successful demonstration of the principle upon which this institution is founded, that of non-alcoholic treatment of disease.

"The members of our eminent staff of physicians are contributing their skill and experience to the healing of patients in this hospital, because of their interest in the establishment and advancement of this comparatively new practice.

"Nurses are in the training school of this hospital instead of some other, because of their preference for a training which demonstrates that there is no necessity for alcohol in the whole materia medica.

"The members of the board of trustees are devoting their time and strength to devising means and ways to maintain this experiment, the chief purpose being to give to the world this object lesson.

"It is a great satisfaction if at the close of each year progress can be noted in the strengthening and promulgating of this principle which is becoming more firmly established as the years go by. Upon the evidence of such progress should rest the estimate of the measure of success.

"Physicians on the staff have assured the board that their connection with the hospital is not because of gain to them, of money or influence, but because of their deep interest in the principle of no alcohol in the treatment of disease. One of them said, 'My interest in this method of treatment has steadily increased during the past five years,' and one young woman, who served as house physician but a short time, said, 'I can never be thankful enough for the experience I have had these few weeks in the National Temperance Hospital, where I have learned that alcohol is never needed in the healing of disease.'"

ADVERTISEMENTS.

No advertisements of a questionable character will be admitted to the columns of The Union Signal under any circumstances. Our readers can depend upon the advertisers, and the promises made by them.

A girl in a high school was set the task of composing an account of "an excursion in the mountains."

She wrote in this beautiful vein:

"On the little lake everything was idyllically lovely. Beautiful milkmaids sat under their cows in order to milk them. On the surface of the lake this charming sight was mirrored upsidedown."

Little Ned—Don't take away the light.

Mamma—I want you to learn to sleep without a light.

Little Ned—Must I sleep in the dark?

Mamma—Yes.

Little Ned—Well, then, wait a minute, I guess I'll get up and say my prayers a little more carefully.

The author of an essay on the "Uses of Animals," asserted that "the horse is serviceable to man by his swiftness. How many brave soldiers owe their lives to the swiftness with which their horses have carried them away from battlefields!"

"Tommy, you should try and be a better boy. You are our only child, and we expect you to be good." "It ain't my fault," said Tommy, "that I am your only child. It's tough on me to be good for a lot of brothers and sisters I haven't got."

In the issue of October 4, the New York daily Tribune devoted two columns of space to the outing of the employés of the New York Condensed Milk Co. The article also described the manner in which this justly merited milk is prepared and placed upon the market. According to the paper above referred to, fifty thousand families in New York city alone use their Condensed Milk regularly. The great success of this concern is largely due to the purity of their goods, which are highly indorsed by physicians, not only for infants but for adults as well.

An Irishman, comparing his watch with the clock of St. Paul's, burst into a fit of laughter. Being asked what tickled him, he answered: "An' how can I help it? Here is my little watch that was made by Paddy O'Flaherty, which cost me five guineas, has beat your big London clock there a full hour and a quarter since yesterday mornin'."

A little girl whose parents recently moved to another city, and who is now enjoying her first experience in living in a block, thus described it in a letter to another child: "This is a very queer place. Next door is fastened on our house."

While a compositor on the Montreal Witness was setting up an advertisement of a lost canary, a few days ago, the bird flew in at the office window. This shows the value of advertising.

I was trying to impress upon the mind of my little boy, aged five, God's loving care of all things, speaking of the sparrows, and especially his love for us, saying God takes so much interest in us as to know the number of hairs on our heads, when he exclaimed: "Why, of course He does, for He put 'em on, and of course He counted 'em when He put 'em on."

GOOD NEWS FOR ASTHMATICS.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of sufferers from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. Spices are not as a rule noisy, but you have all heard the gingersnap.

Thirteen is not an unlucky number, in spite of the fact that the men of the thirteenth century are all dead.

Betsy, an old colored cook, was moaning round the kitchen one day when her mistress asked her if she was ill. "No, ma'am, not 'zactly," said Betsy, "but the fac' is, I don't feel ambition 'nough to git outer my own way."

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Home Hints.

The directions for candy making which will be given in this column from week to week are tried recipes, and will be helpful in preparing candies for socials or for your Christmas boxes.

Butter Scotch, No. 1:—Two cups sugar, half cup of butter, four tablespoons molasses, two tablespoons vinegar, two tablespoons water. Boil until a little dropped in cold water becomes brittle.

Butter Scotch, No. 2:—Three teacups molasses, two teacups sugar, two teacups water, one teacup butter. Add a pinch of soda just before taking from the stove. Test the same as in No. 1.

If you wish to keep your silver plate bright wash it very often with very hot soft water and hard soap. Some seem to get a certain satisfaction from allowing the silver to get very dull looking and then having a general cleaning day when every piece, spoons, knives and forks, tea-set and all go through a regular scouring process. Silver may be kept clean just as easily as china. Wash all the soiled pieces after each meal. Wipe perfectly dry with a soft towel and polish with dry flannel. If stained by egg or vegetables rub with silver soap, using a stiff tooth brush to clean the engraved parts.

Four even teaspoonfuls of liquid equal an even tablespoonful.

Three even teaspoonfuls dry material equal one even tablespoonful.

Sixteen tablespoonfuls liquid equal one cupful.

Twelve tablespoonfuls dry material equal one cupful.

The following plan may be very successful in adding a little money to the treasury of your local union. At the social have a table for the sale of home-made candies. Put the candies up in dainty hand-made boxes, cornucopias, or pasteboard tubes, besides having them displayed in many different ways, on cut glass and china. Use lots of crepe tissue paper, and make your stand "just as pretty as it can be." Copy the recipes you have used in making your candies onto slips of pretty note paper, having them duplicated on the typewriter or mimeograph. Make pretty covers, and tie them with baby ribbon, and you have little booklets which will be an added attraction to your table and they will sell.

A person in a faint should be placed in a recumbent position, in a cool place where there is a good circulation of pure air, the clothes loosened about the waist and chest. Sprinkle the face with cold water.

In the morning the windows should be opened wide, the bed thrown open, the clothes being sufficiently spread out to assure their getting well aired. As often as once a week, choosing a day of sunshine, have all the mattresses, blankets, comforters and pillows taken out of doors and left for several hours. If you don't realize from the sweet restful sleep you have that night the immediate benefit of the absorbed sunlight, you may conclude that you need medical treatment.

The Household tells us that Russia stove pipe can be kept shining and bright by rubbing it with a flannel cloth dampened with boiled linseed oil. Use but little oil, apply it to a small portion of the pipe at a time and rub it vigorously with a dry flannel cloth before applying more oil.

"Close bedrooms make the graves of thousands," says a writer, and surely they are the source of more poor health and suffering than is charged to them. What is so sickening as the dead, heavy atmosphere that greets one on entering the houses of those who do not practice the thorough daily ventilating of their sleeping and living rooms. Fresh air and sunlight are two of God's best and freest gifts to His creatures. Do not shut either of them from your homes but let the sunshine in, and let the pure outdoor air get in, in purifying quantity and frequency. Sleep with windows open enough every night in the year to insure a perfect change of the air. One gas jet consumes as much of the life-giving properties of air as one human being, so if a light must burn through the night, be sure and provide enough fresh air to supply the extra demand. A writer on hygiene says, "It is all folly for people to talk of being so feeble that they cannot bear a window open through the night. Every one can bear air enough to sustain healthy breathing; and all notions to the contrary are foolish and wicked."

"Do Everything," which you will need for yourself, we shall have on hand, and the "White Ribbon Hymnal," which you will be glad to own if you have not a copy; but for your hostess, who may not be a W. THE WHITTIER YEAR BOOK is a gem of book-maker's art. It is filled with "passages from the verse and prose of John Greenleaf Whittier, chosen for the daily food of the lover of thought and beauty." The selections are the cream of the poet's utterances, and the mind that is daily impressed by his high, pure thought must itself take on a holier hue of thinking.

THE VILLAGE WATCH TOWER is an attractive publication of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., containing six of Kate Douglas Wiggin's delightful short stories. Her blended pathos and humor, together with her strength and delicacy in plot-building, give to her stories a uniqueness that is rich and rare. The stories in the present volume are "The Village Watch Tower," "Tom o' the Blue-b'ry Plains," "The Nooning Tree," "The Fore-Room Rug," "A Village Stradivarius" and "The Eventful Trip of the Midnight Cry."

THE TEMPERANCE FOURTH READER, by Julia McNair Wright, like its predecessors, teaches in reading lessons the great truths of a true temperance education, which every boy and girl should have, growing up in this age of temptation and saloon domination. The lessons are rather more advanced than in the first three of the series, but give interesting stories and facts on this question, teaching truths every child should know. In its popular form it should have a very wide circulation. It contains fifteen engravings and twenty-seven lessons.

UNDER THE OLD ELMS. By Mary B. Claflin. Governor Claflin's beautiful estate at Newtonville is rich in historic associations. It has been the residence of three governors. General Hull of Revolutionary fame once dwelt there, and during its present occupancy it has seen staying under the hospitable roof or wandering around its ample grounds some of the most famous men and women of our day. Mrs. Claflin has gathered up a sheaf of charming personal recollections of many of these visitors: Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson, James Freeman Clarke, Henry Ward Beecher, Mrs. Stowe and others. She tells in a perfectly graceful, simple and unaffected way of their interesting and amiable traits. Anecdotes, descriptions and quaint bits of conversation give the book a bright and fascinating character. Not only to Mrs. Claflin's many personal friends, but to all who reverence the names of those whom she introduces into her pages, this volume will have remarkable interest.

A GUIDE TO SYSTEMATIC READINGS IN THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA. The Encyclopædia Britannica has often proved a "white elephant" in the possession of people who with a desire to avail themselves of its invaluable store of information, are baffled in their attempt to do so by the multiplicity and wide variety of topics. To all such this guide will be a most welcome key to the difficulty. We quote from the preface as it aptly sets forth the object of the work: "The plan has been to direct each individual how to draw from this great storehouse of knowledge that which will cover with all desirable completeness the line of work in which he is most interested, thus assisting him in the knowledge of his particular business, and aiding him in its prosecution. It being recognized that the Britannica contains a great deal of interesting and profitable matter for boys and girls, the first part of this GUIDE is directed to young people. By the aid of brief but graphic text and copious references, the youth is led along pleasant avenues of research, and thus aided in acquiring a habit of reading and of investigation that will continue through life, and add largely to his chances of success. The second part is especially designed for students. . . . Numerous courses of study are outlined, which may be pursued independent of schools; many profitable lines of research are suggested, and the best ways of obtaining a fund of general information are pointed out."

The GUIDE is compiled by James Baldwin, Ph. D., a man of broad education.

BIBLE READING FOR NOVEMBER.

Mary in Cana.

BY MRS. JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

White-ribboners do not need to be told that this reading contains a rich spiritual feast, for all know Mrs. Willing, and many have been helped upward by her Bible studies, and by her own firm grasp upon the Rock of Ages. We cannot refrain from giving our readers a foretaste: "The miracle at Cana was only the marvel He had been working every summer since creation's dawn, hanging clusters on vines and filling grapes with rich, healthful, living juice. No death, no fermentation, no decay—nothing that could lead to excess or ruin could come from the hand of Him who was the Life." The chief lesson to W. C. T. U. women, however, in "Mary in Cana" is the "omnipotence that lies within reach of our own obedient trust."

During 1894, 52,658 persons were committed to prison in Scotland, a great increase which has been swelled by the greater number of persons committed for drunkenness. Two causes for the latter are named: The generally prosperous state of the country and the activity of the police.

Mr. John Wilson, M. P., president of the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association at its recent annual meeting, said they maintained their position and claimed that the majority of the Scotch people were in favor of the Local Veto bill. A call has been issued for a National Conference of Christians to meet in the Christian Federation church at 310 Fulton St., Chicago, October 22 and 23, for the purpose of organizing a non-sectarian Christian alliance. The St. Benedictine brewery in Pennsylvania earns a profit of over forty thousand dollars on its output of eleven thousand barrels of beer a year. The amount thus earned is used in the educational work of the order. Many of the intelligent Roman Catholics, however, opposed to such an incongruous method of earning funds, are petitioning for the suppression of this brewery.

Mrs. S. A. Morrison, of Michigan, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of work in almshouses, in a paper read before the National Waifs' Association at Detroit, Mich., not long ago, eloquently advocated separate buildings for pauper children, with suitable matrons under whom they could receive proper care and education and be free from the baleful influences of hardened inmates.

Publisher's Notes

All who have ever seen or listened to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge will remember the grief with which they heard the announcement of her sudden death in Chicago, last October, while in the very midst of her busy labors for temperance and for humanity. And now her hosts of friends will eagerly welcome this memorial volume, written by her friend and pastor of twenty years, Rev. A. M. Hills, who knew her not only in her public life, but in her religious life, and in the sanctities of home and church and intimate friendship. His portraiture reveals a woman of singularly sweet spirit, strong intellect, firm convictions and absolute courage in carrying them out; a woman of culture and refinement and courtesy; a most womanly woman, even if she did possess a man's power of logic, of argument, public speaking and of statesmanship. She was called the "statesman of the W. C. T. U.," and she well deserved the name. She was superintendent of petitions and legislation; six years president of the Ohio union; seventeen years recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U.; corresponding secretary of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and performed all these duties with distinguished success. Not only this, but she often supplied pulpits, preaching gospel sermons of great and convincing power, and winning many to the better life. Withal she was modest, seeking to hide rather than to parade her doings, and it was by her works that she was known. Her home duties were most beautifully performed, and it was only after her children were all grown, and she was, indeed, a grandmother, that her more public life began, but the home fires were always kept burning bright in her heart, and her husband always stood back of her for her comfort and support. Her life was one hid with Christ in God, and this was the secret of her success. All of her great gifts and graces were consecrated to His service, and He blessed the offering, and used it for the good of her fellow men. She was so much a part of the great woman's temperance movement that the story of her life is almost the history as well of the W. C. T. U. The book will be found of exceeding interest. ## SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Great Britain has presented its ultimatum in the boundary dispute with Venezuela.

The National Purity Congress, Aaron Powell, president, closed at Baltimore, Thursday.

The Sultan has signed the Armenian reform treaty demanded by the European powers.

Governor Clark, of Arkansas, has declared that there will be no prize fight at Hot Springs.

The Presbyterian Synod at Peoria, Ill., last week declared resolutely for Christian prohibition citizenship.

The Grand Lodge of Masons of Kentucky have disapproved the conducting of liquor business by members of the order.

Twenty-two prosecutions have been begun in Burlington, Ia., for the purpose of closing the saloons open under the mulct law.

A dispatch from Foo Chow announces the execution, October 21, of fourteen of the anti-Christian rioters by the Chinese government.

Baltimore welcomed the twenty-second annual National Convention of the W. C. T. U. Friday. A consecration service was held Thursday night.

One hundred and seventy-six letter carriers of Chicago have been found delinquent in office, the most frequent charge being that of loitering or drinking in saloons.

A series of Monday noon lectures, similar to the famous Boston Monday lectures of Joseph Cook, have been instituted by the Chicago University Extension department.

Cook county, Ill., commissioners have directed that hereafter the ten per cent income from saloon licenses shall not be paid to the Washingtonian Home for Inebriates in Chicago.

MISS WILLARD read her annual address before our National Convention at Baltimore, Friday, with all the varied expression of her pathetic, electric voice. It goes without saying that as a review of woman's work in the temperance reform and in all work for humanity, the address of 1895 is not excelled by any previous effort of our president's masterly mind. We will publish a large and vital portion of this annual trumpet-call in our Convention number of November 7.

STRAWS show which way the wind blows. The Retail Liquor Dealers' National Association at Washington last week, in view of the evident concentration of the temperance movement, urge more radical steps for the protection of their interests and more powerful organization at the legislative capital of the nation. They pledged themselves to resist all law making power against the liquor traffic. That is the dreaded direction from which the hurricane of a people's righteous wrath can gather force to sweep the nation clear.

As announced by Lady Henry Somerset in our columns last week, that cultured and experienced English journalist, Mrs. Florence Fenwick Miller, has assumed editorial control of our sister contemporary, the Woman's Signal. Mrs. Miller's salutatory promises a wide outlook over domestic and public affairs, which are by the very nature of things inseparable from our great reform. Our British sisters and their progressive editor are to be congratulated on their glorious opportunity for serving with mind and spirit our advancing cause.

AT last a brighter day has dawned for the persecuted Armenian Christians. The reform plan which the Sultan has now promulgated under pressure from Great Britain, France and Russia is the light which illumines the dark horizon. According to the important stipulations of this agreement, complete changes will be made in the judicial system; torture will be abolished; the prisons will be under surveillance; the police will be composed of Christians and Turks equally, and the laws against compulsory conversions to Islamism will be strictly enforced.

A MASSACHUSETTS "Man Suffrage Association" has just opened headquarters in Boston and has issued a "call to arms" in the form of a fearsome circular protesting that as "women have had so little experience in business affairs, the rights and property of our citizens, female as well as male, are better protected and more intelligently cared for than they would be by establishing woman suffrage(!)" We wonder if our numerous business-educated, self (and family) supporting sisters in the old Bay State are not running to hide their diminished heads in alarm before such terrific blank cartridge fire!

OUR Convention number of November 7 will be completely devoted to a faithful and eloquent reproduction of all the doings of our great annual gathering. All that accurate stenographic work, able comment and supervision by editors on the spot can photograph for the readers of the National W. C. T. U. organ will be focused upon this extra special number. We are safe in saying that this will be the best pen picture of the Convention. In this connection we commend the suggestion of a Massachusetts superintendent, that subscribers to THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL who have paid twenty-five cents for five numbers heretofore, can this year subscribe for five copies of our Convention UNION SIGNAL and send to friends.

THAT a society of women should put itself on record as favoring state regulation of vice is surely something new! There may be, indeed we know there are, isolated cases of individual women in whose honest but mistaken judgment such action upon the part of government seems expedient, but the Woman's Liberal League of New Zealand is the first organized body of women to support such shameful legislation as the C. D. Acts. The official utterances of the League called forth Mrs. Josephine Butler's "second letter of warning," published on page 3 of this paper. As will be seen she attributes this remarkable action of New Zealand women to masculine influence. Unlike the doctor of divinity elsewhere referred to, Mrs. Butler sees danger in co-deliberations of men and women, not from the chivalry of men toward women, but from the "feminine habit of subservience to the opinion of men."

A PROMINENT bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, addressing a lay electoral conference, said that the admission of women to the General Conference might work well if men and women deliberated in separate bodies, but that otherwise it was impracticable because of the chivalry of men to women! We had thought that the discussion of this question in the church had been carried on from the Biblical standpoint, and that the opposition of our conservative friends was based upon their interpretation of the Pauline doctrine concerning woman's place in the church and in society. Now, after the question of woman's admission to the General Conference is virtually decided so far as the annual conferences are concerned, this bishop brings forward, not a new argument, but a new ground for argument—ground so much lower as to cause retreat to be most undignified. In fact, it is a shifting of position which borders on a descent from the sublime to the ridiculous. The Scriptural argument demands universal respect and reverential attention among Christian people; the chivalry argument is untenable on its face and evokes well-deserved ridicule. The bishop in question sees danger to the church from co-deliberations of men and women in its supreme councils. It must at least be admitted that the experience of individual churches, Methodist or otherwise, does not sustain this theory. Those who have attended co-deliberative gatherings can testify that "chivalry" is by no means confined to the sterner sex. Women—at least new women—are chivalric as well as men.

MANY of our delegates went to Baltimore early last week in order to participate in the National Purity Congress which preceded the opening of our National W. C. T. U. Convention. The sessions were largely attended and aroused thrilling interest. All phases of the important subject were presented by leading divines and women purity workers, during the three days' session. Rev. W. T. Sabine, of New York, showed the effect of impurity on the life of a nation. The great need of the moral crusade, home teaching, was eloquently pleaded by Dr. Laura Satterthwaite, of New Jersey. Rev. Joseph May, of Philadelphia, declared that social impurity is infecting politics, as many politicians use this method of increasing their hold on the criminal classes. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, in her strong paper, pleaded for moral equality between the sexes, as also did Dr. Emily Blackwell, of the Woman's Medical College, New York. Organized prostitution was graphically depicted by Mrs. Dora Webb, Ohio W. C. T. U. purity superintendent, who told how houses of ill fame in large cities are supplied with innocent immigrants entrapped by wily agents; and how these vile institutions are banded together for mutual protection and supported by political influence. Mrs. Prindle, of New York, and Mrs. Edholm gave stirring experiences from their work in Florence Crittenton Rescue Missions. Miss Willard was presented and in a brilliant short speech advocated the bicycle as a means to personal purity, and an offset to idle temptations. She also saw a good sign in the spread of co-education and the wider companionship of men and women. Elbridge T. Gerry, the noted reformer, treated the subject from the childsaving standpoint, and Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, of England, for twenty-six years a leader in the social purity movement, claimed that the English divorce laws were mainly responsible for impurity in that country. Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National W. C. T. U. purity superintendent, and Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Michigan, Mrs. B. O. Flower, of Boston, and Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, Illinois' purity superintendent, were among those who gave the outcome of their experience and thought to the conference. Rev. Aaron A. Powell, the consecrated editor of The Philanthropist, presided ably over the congress whose results, we foresee, will constitute an energizing and thought-awakening epoch in this vital reform.

A FIELD OF BLUE.

BY E. H. CHASE.

Yester morn the sun lay warm
On Prospect's groves, where I have loved
To seek the wild flowers, since the early spring
Joyed her first tender crocus blooms to fling,
Even on the path where children careless roved.

This morn there was white frost
On roofs and trees and flowers; yet blue
The sky, and in the east I watched a flush
Of pink, so like a bashful maiden's blush,
I almost thought the spring had come anew

Yet know I that the noon
Will show a blackened garden bed,
And if I find, in a shrub-sheltered spot
A late wild aster, by the frost forgot,
Still shall remember that our summer's dead.

Still know that, later on,
The leaves that now are being dyed
In colors manifold, with flying feet
Will chase each other down the wind-swept street,
And Prospect hill be stripped of all its pride.

And is this all of it?
Nay, flowers will come again, and through
Bare branches, where the dearest thing
I sought in summer was an azure wing,
I soon shall look upon a field of blue.

HIS DISCHARGE.

BY EMMA HARRIMAN.

The dust lay thick over everything, the road was full of "chuck holes," and yet the three ladies bowling along over the road toward Santa Monica seemed to be enjoying themselves.

"No matter what the season, here it is always beautiful," said Mrs. Thorpe, who was driving.

"Oh, you're a California crank and a crank on California," laughed Mrs. Munson from her seat behind the driver. "You needn't try to reach me with your whip. I knew you couldn't hit me before I said it."

"Come out and face me," said Mrs. Thorpe, with mock displeasure. "White-ribboners don't believe in bush-whacking."

"Nor any other sort of warfare," said Mrs. Randall, "so you two had better kiss and make up."

"Have to postpone that part of it," said Mrs. Thorpe, touching the horse with her whip. "But look at those hills stretching along like soldiers and—"

"War again. Don't be too military if we are going to the Soldiers' Home."

"And the green lute land with all those horses and cattle. Then what could be more delightful and delicious than this cool, clear air with the salt of the sea all through it?"

"You left out one thing," said Mrs. Munson.

"What was that?"

"The dust."

"Some things are better left out, and who minds the dust? You know you agree with me."

"Of course I do, but I love to hear you talk. It's so seldom I do, you know," with a playful little pat on her shoulder.

"Why, what is the matter? You stopped so suddenly you nearly dislocated my neck."

"See that man," said Mrs. Thorpe, pointing with her whip in among the dry, dusty mustard stalks.

"Oh, drive on, please drive on," said Mrs. Randall, "it's a tramp."

"He looks terribly pale," said Mrs. Thorpe, "I am afraid he is sick."

"He may be intoxicated," said Mrs. Munson.

"Oh, no; he doesn't look like that," cried Mrs. Thorpe, "he's an old man, see his gray hair."

"Hadn't we better drive on," asked Mrs. Munson uneasily, "he might wake."

"He's an old man," continued Mrs. Thorpe, "and lame; see the thick sole and heel on the shoe beside him. He's taken it off to rest his foot."

"We can tell them at the next house," suggested Mrs. Munson.

"Or at the Home," added Mrs. Randall.

"No one will pay any attention. Who cares for a man sleeping in the dust of the roadside?"

"Well, what can we do about it?"

"Wake him up and take him somewhere where he can be cared for."

"Why, Mrs. Thorpe," and "You wouldn't think of doing such a thing," came from the other ladies.

"Why not? Here's an empty seat. It's clearly a providence Mrs. Rogers couldn't come. I don't like an empty seat."

"But you can't pick up every Tom, Dick and Harry," said Mrs. Munson.

"Especially a woman," said Mrs. Randall.

"Perhaps you are right," said Mrs. Thorpe, "but that's what the Master did, He talked with them. He hadn't a surrey with an empty seat, but—"

She drove on reluctantly. Silence fell on the group. The laughing banter and jest had died out.

"I don't know," said Mrs. Randall after they had gone a mile or so, "I don't feel easy about that old man. I'm afraid we didn't do right."

"I am, too," added Mrs. Munson. "I can see his pale face all the time. Let's go back."

"Yes," said Mrs. Randall, "say we do. I know I sha'n't sleep to-night if we don't."

Mrs. Thorpe turned back. The old man had waked and was sitting up. He looked at them wonderingly as they stopped.

"We thought you looked tired," said Mrs. Thorpe. "Were you going far?"

"A good, long journey, ma'am."

"We were going to the Soldiers' Home. You might ride with us if you were going our way. Where are you going?"

"Well, ma'am, I suppose I'm going to a place they call sheol nowadays. I suppose you don't know—"

"How dreadful," said Mrs. Randall.

"Please don't talk like that," said Mrs. Thorpe. "Come and get into the surrey and we'll take you on to some of these farmhouses where you can get cared for."

"Huh," said the old man, shaking the dust and leaves from his tangled hair, "they'd set their dogs on me."

"We won't let them," said Mrs. Munson.

"I don't look like ridin' with ladies," said he, but he began to pull on the heavy shoe. "It's so long since I rode anywhere I don't know how it would seem."

"Poor old fellow, how weak he is," said Mrs. Munson as he limped toward them, "I'm going to get out and help him in."

"He's hungry, no doubt," said Mrs. Randall, "I'm going to give him a sandwich and some fruit." She began to rummage for the lunch basket.

"So you're going to the Soldiers' Home," said the old man, munching eagerly away at his sandwich, "that's where I'd started for but I give out. Ain't used to forced marches nowadays."

"Were you a soldier?" asked Mrs. Randall.

"Went all through the war. Thought I was goin' to end my days in the Home but there's some trouble about my discharge and I can't git in. If I could only find my old captain. I don't know where he is, and when a man has no friends—" He broke off shortly. "So I thought I'd jist go down and take a look at the boys before I started on that journey I spoke of."

He looked slyly out from under his shaggy eyebrows watching the effect of his words.

"You had better start in the other direction," said Mrs. Randall.

"Ain't familiar with that road, ma'am, and I know this one pretty well. I've been on it for some time. It's all down grade and easy to travel."

"'The way of the transgressor is hard,'" said Mrs. Munson.

"Oh, that's out of an old book I used to read once. 'Taint kept at the stalls of the road I travel lately. So you ladies belong to the Relief Corps?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Thorpe, touching her white ribbon, "the relief corps that reaches out to all."

"White ribbon, oh, yes; Hannah used to wear that. Hannah was my wife. I didn't sleep out on the ground while she lived."

He grew silent then and said little more till they reached the grounds of the Home.

"There now, ma'am," he said to Mrs. Thorpe, "jist stop here and let me git out. I'm a thousand times obliged to you but I wouldn't disgrace you by ridin' up there with you."

"No, indeed," said Mrs. Thorpe, "you mustn't get out. I wouldn't think of it."

"Perhaps we can help you," said Mrs. Randall.

"Certainly, I know some of the officials here," said Mrs. Munson.

When they stopped before the door where they were to begin their rounds the old man climbed out slowly, repeating his thanks. A group of visitors being shown over the grounds, stopped near them with some of the officials.

"There, you see what a fine view we have here," said one; "just look off at those hills and over there is the ocean and —"

The old man limped forward and interrupted him with a cry.

"Captain Rawlson, don't you know me, Joe Reed, that went with you all through the —"

"Joe Reed!" cried a tall, soldierly man at the right of the group, "Joe Reed! Know you? I'd know you anywhere."

The two men grasped each other's hands like brothers.

"This is one of my men, General," said Captain Rawlson, "one I'm not likely to forget. See that," and he pointed to the thick, solid shoe, "he wears that because of a saber cut intended for me. And see here." He took off the old man's slouch, felt hat and lifted his tangled gray hair, showing a large, deep scar. "That was meant for me too."

Just as the ladies were leaving on their return home the old man crept out to speak to them. Bathed, shaved, clad in the army blue, he was another man.

"I'm not in here regular yet, you see," he explained, "but Captain Rawlson says I've slept on the ground long enough and he'll be responsible if it doesn't come out all right. But it will and I'll never forget you ladies. If it hadn't been for you, I'd never got here, and Captain would have been gone before I'd have walked it, anyway."

"I told you it was a providence Mrs. Rogers couldn't come," said Mrs. Thorpe.

They went down again later. Mrs. Thorpe had been several times. The old man was in bed now.

"I've been thinking of what you said the other day," he told Mrs. Thorpe; "if our discharge ain't all right we can't git in here and we need our papers to git in up there. I know all about it. My mother taught me and then Hannah." He broke off with a sob. "Don't let up in your fight against whisky, that's what ruins us. That's why I lost my home. It broke Hannah's heart, too. It's murderin' the boys now in the navy, and the regulars. Don't let up in your fight." He stopped to cough. "And you're right about the other thing, the down grade's the hardest road. I believe I'll try the other if I can only crawl. Maybe somebody'll come along with a surrey," he added, with his old jesting way. His cough stopped him again.

"You said, 'Whoever will, may come'. That means me."

The next time they went his bed was empty.

"He wanted me to move his bed so he could look out at the sunrise," said the nurse. "When I had done it he raised himself and looked out. 'See,' he said, pointing to the bright sky, 'see that's the door to the—the heavenly home. It's wide open. The discharge is all right.'"

A GREAT MISTAKE.

BY ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

It was a matter of surprise and regret to many readers of The Union Signal to learn that a good woman was advocating the state regulation of vice, and that another woman, professing to represent an organization of working women, had lately proposed a similar plan. Hitherto, this scheme has been advocated almost exclusively by men, and with the express object of protecting dissolute men from the hygienic consequences of their conduct. Now that it is advocated in the interests of women, and especially of working women, attention should be called to the fact that the system is hated by the working people in every European country where it prevails, and is detested by the miserable women themselves.

A distinguished French advocate of "regulation" expresses frankly and clearly the view which the government takes of these women. He says: "A woman who sacrifices her modesty sacrifices also her liberty. She is no longer a person, but a piece of property belonging to the government." This principle is carried out to the full. The women are literal slaves. Naturally, they try to escape. A few years ago M. Lecour, the head of the department of police devoted to this particular work in Paris, published a book on the subject. Though a strong advocate of "regulation," he declared that it had proved a failure in Paris, because the police, with all their efforts, were not able to bring under government supervision more than one-seventh of the women of immoral life in that city. The women exerted their utmost ingenuity to conceal themselves from the police, and risked all legal penalties rather than live in the state licensed houses, whose inmates are no longer persons, but pieces of property belonging to the government.

Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, who led the successful movement for the repeal of these laws in England, testifies that she had the working people behind her from beginning to end. When she was driven by her conscience, most reluctantly, to go out and publicly advocate repeal, the first meeting she addressed was one of working men. She says in her biography of her husband, Canon

Butler: "I took the train to Crewe—where there is a great manufactory of locomotives and a mass of workmen. A friend acquainted with the workmen led me after work hours to their popular hall; and when I had delivered my message a small group of leaders among the men bade me thrice welcome in the name of all there. They surprised me by saying, 'We understand you perfectly. We in this group served an apprenticeship in Paris, and we have seen and know for ourselves the truth of what you say. We have said to each other that it would be the death-knell of the moral life of England were she to copy France in this matter.'"

Within a few weeks the working men all through the north of England had organized for the repeal of the obnoxious laws. Mrs. Butler was summoned to testify before a Royal Commission of Inquiry on the question. In a letter to her husband describing the hearing she says: "I handed the chairman a large packet of the letters and resolutions from working men. He said, 'We may as well see them; for no doubt that class takes some little interest in the question.' I should think so! Let them wait till election times and they will see! One of the commissioners asked, 'Are these bona fide working men?' I replied, 'Yes, and well-known men. There is more virtue in the country than you gentlemen in high life imagine.'"

Mrs. Butler afterward crossed the channel and initiated a movement for the repeal of "regulation" in several European countries. Her letters to her husband and friends describing her continental tour were collected and published in a little book now out of print, entitled, "The New Abolitionists." Writing to her husband from Paris she said:

"I asked some workmen if they could get together a meeting of their class to confer on our subject. They told me, and a working man also informed M. Humbert, who made inquiries for me, that it would be easy enough to get a hundred together (I believe more cannot be called together without the leave of the Minister of Public Instruction), but that it would be dangerous to do so. And why, do you suppose? Because, said these men, out of that hundred there would probably be twenty-five, or more, who had a daughter, or a sister, or some one connected with them in St. Lazare, or in one of the licensed houses; and that any words spoken on the subject, however cautious, might act like a spark upon a train of gunpowder. When asked, 'But how so?' the reply was, 'There is too much hatred'—hatred of the police authorities, and of the whole régime which drills the daughters of France, like soldiers, in the service of debauchery. It is evident that many of the blue blouses of the Faubourg, St. Antoine and the Belleville quarter are honest, sober, home-loving men. How little understood by us in England was the meaning of that noble proclamation of the Commune, which being 'hostile to slavery,' proclaimed the abolition of every house of prostitution in Paris, and the freedom of the miserable slaves inhabiting them, and which called on the citizens to recognize the necessity for women of freedom to labor with their hands for an honest livelihood. Such an act might 'cover a multitude of sins,' I think."

Neither the women themselves, nor their fathers and brothers regard "regulation" as a boon. English and European experience has also proved conclusively that the advantages to the public health hoped for from this legislation have not been realized. The effect everywhere is the same; the increase of vice consequent upon fancied security more than neutralizes any benefits resulting from the very partial and imperfect medical supervision. Ample statistics and other evidence to this effect can be obtained from the office of the International Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, 36 Place du Bourg du Four, Geneva, Switzerland.

PHYSICULTURE.

BY HELEN POTTER.

[Superintendent of this department for the Massachusetts W. C. T. U.]

Primarily the end and aim of education is symmetry and power of concentration. To be symmetrical is to be evenly balanced; no one set of muscles developed at the expense of other sets of muscles; no one faculty or sense cultivated at the expense of other faculties or senses. The educated or trained mind can concentrate upon one subject, excluding all other subjects; can think independently and continuously at will; can set himself a task and accomplish that task.

A clergyman once said to a brother clergyman "How is it with you, my brother; can you conduct religious services and keep all foreign thoughts apart?"

"Why, yes, I think I can. Can't you?"

"I must confess," said the first speaker, "that I cannot. External and irrelevant matters flit through my brain in a most irrational manner. No matter how hard I try to concentrate upon the duties of the hour, this often occurs. I cannot even say the Lord's Prayer without wandering thoughts."

"That's strange. I do not have such experiences."

"Well," said Number One, "let's try the experiment here and now. You shall repeat the Lord's Prayer aloud and if you say that you entertained no other thought while doing it, I'll give you my horse."

"Good," said Number Two, "I'll try it." So they knelt down and Number Two began to pray. When about half through, he sprang to his feet, exclaiming, "I give it up. I could not help thinking would you throw in the bridle and saddle."

Not only must there be absolute concentration for severe mental work, but also for physical precision. To hit the mark one must see nothing but the mark; think of nothing but the mark.

An educated or trained body is one that can do whatsoever is to be done, easily, promptly and with precision; one that is available under all circumstances, with no unnecessary waste of force; one in which distinct sets of muscles can be employed while others are at rest; one that can run, jump, climb, leap, swim, row, balance, ride, skate, etc.; that has hands trained to various uses and senses active and certain—for the senses can be trained and educated, too.

A learned person is not necessarily an educated person; one may be a walking encyclopedia of language, facts and statistics, and yet be an utterly useless member of society; on the contrary, with a moderate amount of brains, one may be a very useful member of society. To think and act with celerity and to the purpose is the training needed for everyday contact with the world. There is an interdependence between mind and body, and so long as they remain together, just so long will this mutual dependence continue. The mind ordinarily can express itself only through the body, and the body is dependent upon the mind for care and protection, for sustenance and comfort. Our bodies are our servants, and are obliged to accept such treatment as we give them; such food as we provide, be it wholesome or foul; such clothing as we choose, be it light, loose and convenient, or heavy, tight and uncomfortable. They must obey the masters, be they cruel or merciful. Goaded on with stimulants and drugs the machinery stops very suddenly, and some newspaper announces another case of "heart failure"—as if all death were not heart failure! There is no such thing as breaking natural laws. The laws of the universe are eternal and unchanging. When we come in collision with them we break ourselves and not the laws. An eternal, unchanging law cannot be broken. Effect must follow cause, and then we suffer the penalty of our folly in various disorders, such as colds, fevers, dyspepsia, earache, etc.

In our public schools we have devoted too much time to learning and not enough to education. We have devoted our time to memorizing instead of thinking and applying what we have learned. We have neglected the body to pass examinations in facts and figures. There is an effort being made to introduce military drill into our public schools, and to make it compulsory. It is to be hoped that such a thing will not be done. In the first place, military drill does not produce symmetrical results. It is not the all-round training that we need for public schools. It is one-sided and incomplete.

There are also ethical reasons why our youth should be kept from warlike drill as well as from vivisection and all other things that tend to cultivate destructiveness, to exalt brute force and to create a growing disregard for life God-given. Alas, we have been and are suffering from more than one neglect and abuse. Talk about freedom—how much freedom have we? Very little, and rather of the kind that the very self-satisfied, good man expressed to a friend concerning his wife: "My wife? I let her do just as she has a mind to, and if she doesn't I make her."

While boys are free to exercise in a hundred ways, girls from their birth are repressed, suppressed, oppressed, depressed by conventional customs and habits that ought to be relegated to oblivion. She is pressed into uncomfortable clothing; into uncomfortable positions; bound hand and foot and then called the "weaker" sex. It is really wonderful what strength she displays after all this restraint and false education. We ought to hold the bicycle in reverence, for it has already done more to liberate woman from the absurd bondage of dress than all the articles, lectures and books ever written on physical education and comfortable dress. The bicycle has come to stay so far as she is concerned. Having once been borne on the wings of the wind and drunk its healing elixir, she cannot be made to go back to her inert and helpless condition. It has been adopted by all classes and is fashionable. The French girl on her wheel needs no chaperon for she can outstrip all danger in her flight, and people begin to see there is no sin in her short dress, for it causes no remark now.

There is a chance, not a small one, that cycling may be carried too far for an all-round, symmetrical development of body. It should be accompanied by gymnasium practice of the other muscles less used. And here I come to the point I desire to make, viz., the need you have of places for exercises and play, cheap enough to allow any one to avail himself of their benefits.

I hope our great and powerful organization will stand by the department which I represent until there shall be a girl's gymnasium connected with every W. C. T. Union in the land.

THE DEFECTION OF WOMEN.

BY JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

[From the "Second Letter of Warning and Appeal," read before the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice.]

Formerly, in appealing against the crowning and consummation of woman's degradation which is represented by the official regulation of prostitution, I have fearlessly spoken as the mouthpiece of the womanhood of the world, in the firm belief that I was expressing in very truth the feeling and conviction of every true woman.

I should hesitate now to speak thus in the name of all women, although my faith in true womanhood is as firm as ever. It seems to me better and wiser that we should judge ourselves than that we should leave it to others to judge us, while we remain silent concerning errors into which we may have fallen.

On the one hand I am asked in the name of loyalty to my own sex to say nothing concerning some serious mistakes into which women have fallen in regard to the cause for which I labor; I am asked to be silent, because these women will, it is believed, shortly see their error, and range themselves on the side of the truth.

On the other hand, reproaches are awaiting us and reaching us; reproaches from our bitter opponents, which have a note of triumph in them. "See," they seem to say, "you have boasted that women were all deniers of the doctrine of the necessity of prostitution, and of the desirability of its recognition and official regulation. Your boast is vain. There are women as honorable as you who are against you in this matter."

I have pondered deeply the causes which may have led certain honorable and good women to give their names and influence recently in favor of the "very crown and front of the world's wickedness and infamy," (as it has been called) the state regulation of prostitution, which binds tens of thousands of our fellow women to lifelong and hopeless harlot slavery and degradation.

The main cause of this lamentable error on the part of women is, I am convinced, ignorance. But because they have acted in ignorance they are not wholly guiltless though they may be excusable. They have no right to be ignorant and to remain in ignorance of this awful question. Still more are they to blame for acting and speaking publicly in the matter while in ignorance.

A second cause, however, is the feminine habit of subservience to the opinion of men; a habit which, when entering into this question, so vital for the interests of women, may be fraught with consequences of the gravest and most awful kind.

Certain groups of women who have been influenced to give their names in favor of this seal of women's degradation, have told us that the teaching and guidance they had followed concerning it were those of "good" and "distinguished" men. This is very probable. Good men have often favored this abomination, also through ignorance of its true character, and sometimes through some fatal warp of the judgment, like that of the great St. Augustine, who, after his conversion, proclaimed the necessity of prostitution, recognizing it as a Divinely permitted institution for the "safeguarding of family life." That warp in him may be clearly seen to have been the result of a youth spent in debauchery. As an evangelical convert, he believed and claimed that his dreadful sins were all forgiven through faith in Christ crucified; but that taint of the judgment, that black spot in his brain, was never healed, never blotted out until death—the death of his vice-corrupted body—and judgment, saint as he is called!

A "good" man, a spiritual man, a pastor and teacher, lately confessed, after a successful ministry to souls, that when brought face to face with this question with which we are dealing, he felt (God showed him) that he needed to be reconverted. Thousands of our "good" men have needed reconversion in this sense; and as for "distinguished" men, they have very frequently erred and acted shamefully in regard to this testing and shifting question.

. . . . . .

I give some facts to justify what I have said concerning the "defection of women." In doing so I ask the women who have made, and now feel or suspect they have made, a grievous mistake, to forgive me, and to believe that I believe that "in ignorance ye did it." At the same time I ask them to accept my words of warning which are wrung out of a long and deeply tried heart—a heart which is moreover full of love, respect, and compassion for them, and for all the sons and daughters of men.

The Women's Liberal League, of New Zealand, signalized their recent accession to electoral rights by publishing the following resolution:

"That we look upon the Contagious Diseases Act as a protection to posterity by safeguarding wives unhappily circumstanced, and earnestly urge as a strong preventive to immorality that the Act should be made applicable to men and women alike, and should be rigidly enforced."

. . . . . .

In India, efforts are being made to engage women—more especially assistant medical women in the public hospitals—(who are not duly qualified physicians) to take part in this "defection," and so to strengthen the hands (it is imagined) of the party in India, who cling as obstinately and fiercely to their indecent regulation system as a pariah dog to its "dirty bone."

In certain of our colonies we have seen, with grief, groups of good and well-intentioned women, zealous for the repression of moral evils, calling for stronger police measures and the interference of the police with women in a manner which would open the door to an easy introduction of state regulation with all its attendant injustices and horrors.

At Nijni Novgorod, in Russia, a great annual Fair takes place, to which traders come from many different countries. Every year, troops of poor peasant girls are brought or driven from the Russian villages round about, and some from great distances, to this Fair, for prostitution. They come to earn a little money thus, which they take back to their families in order to help them to endure their miserable poverty through the winter.

Those who have realized at all the horrors of the late Russian famine and know how crushing is the poverty of the peasantry, may be able to understand how the hunger-stricken parents can even consent to bargain away the honor of their daughters for a piece of bread. These girls are brought to the Fair sometimes by a regular trader in vice—a man or a woman; sometimes they come in groups of themselves, returning to their homes, it is said, more wretched (morally and physically) and often poorer than when they came.

The Russian government superintends this traffic, having taken in hand some few years ago to strengthen the sanitary police who regulate it, and appointing two medical officers, of whom Madame Eltzina is one, to ascertain that the wretched victims are physically fit for the market. Madame Eltzina presented a paper at the great Medical Congress at Rome in 1894, in which she detailed the methods by which she has, she asserts, discovered a great number of cases of "latent" disease and unfitness for the vice market in the women who come under her treatment, which cases were not discovered before. This she does by a thoroughness of operation too ghastly to detail. It appears that all her pretended science and her thoroughness, however, does not avail to prevent these poor girls from taking back to their wretched village homes, far and near, the physical as well as the moral poison they have imbibed in this abominable market.

What can we think of a paternal government which aims, by an elaborate system of tyranny and indecency, at enabling the world's traders to gratify their evil passions without detriment to their physical health, and does not raise a finger to prevent this shameful traffic? One would imagine that the money spent on this elaborate and delusive machinery for vice might suffice to offer to the starving families whose daughters are thus immolated, the pittance, and more than the pittance, which they earn by their own degradation, and which would help these same families to bear the rigors of the winter.

It is a new thing among us to see men, full of indignation against this cruel and degrading oppression of women, publicly setting themselves in opposition to certain educated women who are asking for or helping to carry out this tyranny against their fellow-women. I am much consoled by the conviction that the men who have worked with us and have been educated, if I may say so, in this great crusade, will never quit the position of principle which they have taken up. They will be true to women now, even if women should be untrue to themselves.

These men—our deeply convinced and powerful allies—are in some ways a safeguard to us against errors into which, as women working alone, we might be in danger of falling. They acknowledge that we have been their teachers; they had the humility and true manliness to confess long ago their errors of judgment and action. They have learned their lesson, and they will not unlearn it.

It is in the joint action of men and women in this great cause that our force, under God, chiefly resides.

He who never connects God with his daily life knows nothing of the spiritual meanings and uses of life—nothing of the calm, strong patience with which ills may be endured; of the gentle, tender comfort which the Father's love can minister; of the blessed rest to be realized in His forgiving love, His tender fatherhood; of the deep, peaceful sense of the Infinite One ever near, a refuge and a strength.—Archdeacon Farrar.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

God is on the giving hand at Willard Hall. Large and appreciative audiences greet us every day.

. . . . . .

When strong men in the prime of life step bravely out and say, "God helping me, I mean from this on to lead a Christian life," it shows that there is a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ. Such was the language of the Pinkerton detective agent a short time ago, at the close of one of the noonday meetings; and a look on his manly face said, "Surely, this man has met Christ and 'learned of Him.'"

. . . . . .

A man entered the hall a couple of weeks ago ruined by drink; in short, bankrupt of reputation and ruined of soul. His family had deserted him. To-day finds him able to say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." He has secured a good situation, and is thanking God for it.

. . . . . .

Worthy of especial mention is the singing of Mr. T. E. Jones, the musical director, who has charge of this part of the work. Surely he is a master. Last Friday he sung a selection entitled, "Homeland," and the large audiences showed their appreciation by the many Amens and "God bless you's."

. . . . . .

In the past four weeks over eighty souls have expressed themselves as having surrendered to Christ, and many are the requests that come to us for prayer. May the good work go on.

. . . . . .

We hope in the near future to crowd Willard Hall and have standing room at a premium. May those interested in this work bear us to God in prayer.

CRUEL TENERIFFE.

Dear Union Signal:—A resident of the Isle of Teneriffe has been writing to an American lady concerning the awful cruelties practiced by the Spaniards there, not only in the bull-fights but in all ways where animals are concerned. He has also sent an account of the same to Humanity, a journal published by the English Humanitarian League. Here are some extracts:

"Of all the horrible places for merciless cruelty to animals and all living creatures, this island surpasses any place I ever saw. I have lived in three other Spanish colonies previous to my six years' residence here, but this is far worse than the three put together. There is not the least attempt made by any class of people here to stop or stay in the least this cruelty. Women of the first class here never give a single thought to the sufferings of the animals that are being tortured to death under their eyes daily; and I can truly say that, after nearly twenty years' residence in Spanish colonies, I have never yet seen a continental or colonial Spaniard do a kind action to a horse or cow, seldom to a dog, never to a cat or bird.

"The English residents here seem to turn Spaniards if they live here long, and ape all their manners. They attend, and in this way much encourage, the cruelties of the bull and horse slaughter hells and cockpits. Many of the tourists who come here are shocked at the continual sights of cruelty, and many of them (English people) have called attention to this.

"The Spaniard is always ready to measure his corn in other people's measure, and this, together with his semi-civilization and pride, makes him an impossible convert. I have talked with friends (or rather acquaintances), Spaniards who are not bad or ignorant, about this useless and horrible cruelty; but one and all are ready to condone or defend it. They always say, 'Why, you English all like to see bull-fights, etc.'

"Just to show you what the sentiment is in this place I will send you two newspapers with marked articles. One paper refers to an article appearing in a late English paper in which an English tourist speaks in glowing terms of the fine climate of this island, the hotels, etc., all of which he praises highly (this the Spaniards like); but he says that the cruelty to animals is something horrible. Here the Spaniard steps in to object and the editor comments upon the English article. He says that the English cruelties are in excess of the Spanish, in stag hunting and horse racing, while the cruelty all over the continent is far worse than that at Teneriffe.

"Last summer I saw a case which probably is only about an average one—a poor horse harnessed to a heavy load of salt. There were six large raw sores on his back, black with flies that bite like hot iron. The poor animal had been mercilessly beaten about the head until actually the head was misshapen with the swelling. One of the blows must have caught the animal's tongue, for it was almost in two and hanging out of his mouth. Now, how was the animal to eat or drink in this condition? Yet he was harnessed to a heavy load, to go probably to Laguna, the distance seven miles and the grade two thousand feet in that distance.

"Another case—a dairy was started here in this town. Some Jersey cows were imported at a considerable expense. The milk was to be sold by the glass direct from the cow, and a high price was charged for the milk. The dairy was neatly fitted up, grounds laid out and kept clean. At once the demand exceeded the supply, in spite of the high price; and the proprietor turned the dairy over to the care of two common farm laborers. They had never treated any animal gently—had never even seen an animal treated otherwise than cruelly; so these mild, patient, docile animals were clubbed and stoned, beaten and kicked, until several of them died. None could give milk when so treated. I tried to tell the owner, but he was no better than the men. A farm, also owned by the same man, on which were some English and French animals was run on the same lines. Both places were, of course, failures.

"Two years ago, here in one of the annual bull and horse slaughter hells a poor, young, tame animal refused to defend himself. At this the crowd of sporting men, bravos and whatnot, jumped into the ring shouting the most horrid imprecations against the poor animal. They dug out his eyes with knives and beat and stabbed him to death. Last year three of these damnable exhibitions were given in one week. In the town of Laguna another slaughter hell exists, and the advertisement of one of these spectacles reads that the proprietors, out of 'pure patriotism' had gone to the extra expense of importing horses from Spain, as the island horses were too small and short-legged for the bull to get his horns under them properly to rip them open in the Peninsular style. After the three slaughters in one week last year, there was quite a glut of bloodshed and cruelty; and so the captain-general of this island gave a free entertainment to the better classes 'of pulling the heads off live ducks while the horsemen rode by at full speed.'

"In the old town of Laguna, on this island, where Sunday bull-fights occasionally occur (cock-fights and dog-fights every Sunday), they have an unique species of cruelty, which is barely surpassed by the bull and horse slaughter spectacle. A yoke of oxen are fastened to an empty cart of the ordinary two-wheel kind used here, and as many men as can get near the poor animals keep alongside, running and goading them to agony with the terrible long steel spur in the end of a pole or stick, the spectators keeping up in a mob with yells and shouts, while one man keeps in front of the poor oxen. The trick of the affair is that this man shall thus keep his position at the head of the animals. A blind lane is chosen, stopped by a wall or something at one end. Into this the poor animals are driven at a furious gallop, and encountering the wall, fall into a heap along with the heavy cart. The man is supposed to be agile enough to escape, and is looked upon as a hero. It is no matter if the legs of the poor animals are broken by the collision; that is only to be expected, and they are slaughtered on the spot for a further spectacle for the crowd of children, boys and girls, to see, and the meat is sold at a good round price, it being an honor to eat of it.

"In all these affairs of killing bulls and oxen the meat is advertised as being superior food, as it has some good qualities to impart with it—at least that is the idea that is conveyed to the people.

"In the theater here many of the plays are mere exhibits of actors dressed up as bull-fighters. The songs are on the same subject. The actors are supposed to be thorough savages, ready to quarrel at a look. Every few moments one of them takes offence at a word, and a knife is drawn, and efforts made to stab the offender. The others interfere. At this the audience yell in the true bull-slaughter hell style. Then the sweetheart of one of the bull-fighters, a modest, virtuous girl, is shown in another scene, on her knees before her saint, praying that the life of her lover may be spared. Then the bull-ring is shown with an imitation bull. Am I not right in saying that religion and cruelty go hand-in-hand in these Spanish countries?"

It is the desire of the superintendent of the world's department of mercy to reach just such places as the above with books, literature translated into the Spanish language, and whatever else may tend to better these terrible conditions. To do this much money will be needed. The superintendent is waiting in faith to see who will provide it from their abundance.

THE COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

Dear Union Signal:—Of the many important and interesting congresses being held at Atlanta, it would be hard to find one that exceeded in those particulars the National Congress of the Council of Women. This congress opened October 7 and closed October 13. It was very well attended.

The National Council of Women is an organization composed of organizations. That is, its members represent other women's organizations. It is the largest organization of women in the world, representing a membership of seven hundred thousand.

One of the most interesting papers of the Council was that of Mrs. Ellen Battelle Dietrich, representing the committee on divorce of the Council of Women.

Miss Clara Barton's paper on "The Significance of the Red Cross Movement" excited great interest. She believed that the full significance of the movement was expressed in the almost prophetical utterance of one of the founders of the organization that "the Red Cross would teach war to make war upon itself."

A notable feature of the Exposition and of the congresses auxiliary to it is the place accorded to the colored people. Equally worthy of notice is the fact that the work of the colored people, both in their exhibits and in their work in the congresses, has shown itself worthy of the place given it. In the Council of Women no address was received with greater enthusiasm than that of Miss C. R. Franklin, a colored woman who discussed the aims and work of the National League of Colored Women.

Two Jewish ladies gave addresses of deep interest and great ability. Miss Sadie American, corresponding secretary of the National Council of Jewish Women, and Miss Clara Block, president of the Cincinnati Section of the same organization.

Other papers equally as interesting as those I have referred to were read upon almost all conceivable subjects. Many of them were along lines in which we as an organization are engaged, and some of them from our own workers. Our own W. C. T. U. is one of the organizations belonging to the Council, but was not represented except indirectly by its workers in specific fields. Missionary societies of different denominations, the Woman's Suffrage Association, the Anti-vivisection Society, the National Christian League for Protection of Social Purity, the Salvation Army, the Woman's Relief Corps, the Society of the Maccabees, are a few only of the different lines of woman's work represented at this congress.

The fact that this Council thus brings together women from all fields of work and of all shades of opinion is one of immeasurable significance. The importance of the many women's organizations being brought into contact and learning one another's methods appears upon the surface. But even a greater result is the broadening which such an organization gives to woman's outlook; an outlook which through the ages has been the narrowest possible. On the platform of this congress there sat together as sisters, women representing every religious belief, and working in every possible philanthropy and reform. About the only test of membership in the Council is that the organization which desires to enter shall be really doing something. In the words of the president, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, "One great thing that the Council demands of every organization composing it, as an element of highest success, is that basis of knowledge as to its actual conditions, degree and character of influence, its relative power as an agent of good in the world, which shall enable it, instead of filling its record with vague generalities as to what its aspirations made it hope to do, with accurate estimates as to what it really is doing, and what it can be made to do by the highest utilization of all the forces which it can control."

That in the past women, as a class, have been the bitterest partisans, the most bigoted zealots, the most intolerant enemies, in short, the most intense and prejudiced of mortals, is beyond dispute. Those who delight to find inherent and ineradicable differences between the sexes have attributed this to a natural intensity of nature and a narrowness of intellect that made it impossible for a woman to look at more than one side of a question. The truth is, and it was so upon the surface that one who ran might have read, that it was due to the fact that women were shut in where they had no opportunity to know the world and adapt themselves to it. Their school education was of the most meager kind. After school days they were shut into their homes, where they constructed the world according to their own ideas of what it should be instead of in accordance with the actual and insurmountable facts. Men, on the contrary, were obliged to mingle with their fellow men and adapt themselves to persons of the most different views. They thus acquired a broadness of sentiment and feeling which enabled them to sympathize with or overlook many differences of belief. All of our women's organizations have had a tendency to cultivate this same broad and tolerant spirit in women.

South Atlanta, Ga. Isabella Webb Parks.

Dear Co-workers:—Here comes a call for help from one of our sisterhood. She tells in a pathetic letter a story of which I will give the bare outlines: The writer is evidently a member of a small union. The number to constitute a quorum was fixed upon as seven, but finally, in face of the fact that seven could never be gotten together at one time, was reduced to three; the latter number was found to be embarrassing for very evident reasons. Two efforts to hold an annual meeting failed for lack of members present. The old officers do not wish to vote for and reappoint each other, nor to appoint those not present. The superintendent of literature does not take The Union Signal and knows little of her duty. Other superintendents accept office, but do no work. It seems that this union began life with ardor, believing it could rid the town of saloons, but it has failed, and the saloons have—not.

Even "Mother Experience" is inadequate to a full answering of such a problem as the above, and I ask that readers of this column send me at the earliest opportunity such plans as they would advocate for the aid of the "faithful few" who are standing by the W. C. T. U. helm in this little town. How shall they reawaken interest? How secure an intelligent reading of our literature? May I not hope to receive a dozen or more helpful suggestions, which, through the medium of this column, will reach not only this one perplexed sister, but others who may be similarly anxious?

Question.—When a visiting white-ribboner has been granted "all privileges of a convention," is it out of place for her to serve on the Resolutions Committee?

Answer.—Certainly not.

---

In looking over the pages of the Ladies' Home Journal recently my eye for practical suggestions was attracted by these words:

AN EVERY-DAY DOLLAR PARTY, and the plan was so unique that I quote it in full, thinking it may lend fresh zest to the solution of the ever-recurring problem, "How shall we raise some money?" The article is as follows:

The majority of churches (unions) would be very glad to earn three hundred and sixty-five dollars in one evening, and they can do it readily and with great attendant enjoyment through the "Every-Day Dollar Party." Church workers agree that any plan which interests the young folks and divides the work among a large number is sure to be successful. The plan of the "Every-Day Dollar Party" is simple and practicable. The whole "round year" is divided into quarters, months, weeks and days, and the officers of the entire year are classified thus:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| New Year | | President |
| January, April, July, October | The first months of each "quarter." | Vice-Presidents |
| Twelve Calendar Months | | Executive Committee |
| Easter Day | | Secretary |
| Christmas | | Treasurer |

The president supervises the work in general and presides at the meeting of "Months," and the vice-presidents take charge of their respective "Quarters" of the year. The latter also assist the executive committee and serve as presiding officers at the Quarter meetings. Each Month calls to her aid four helpers named respectively, First, Second, Third and Fourth Week. Each Week must find seven helpers to become her Days—each helper taking one Day, the extra days of the month, over twenty-eight, being also looked out for by Month. The year in this way is divided into three hundred and sixty-five Days, with no person directly responsible for more than one Day. Each Day is pledged to secure at least one dollar, but more may be turned in as there is no limit set.

It is a good plan to distribute "day-boxes," pretty, plain boxes of convenient size with a slit in the sealed cover, after the fashion of an improvised bank for pennies. Each box is marked "day-box" on the cover, and the owner's name and date of the "day of jubilee" upon the front. Placed in a conspicuous spot in the home it invites contributions from family friends. Special honors in the form of prizes may be conferred upon the Day, Week, Month and Quarter presenting the largest sum on the opening of the boxes on the "day of jubilee."

Yours for concentrated and consecrated endeavor,

Mother Experience.

The following persons have subscribed to the $300,000 subscription pledge: Hon. Thomas W. Palmer, Detroit, Mich., $1,000; Mrs. Thomas W. Palmer, $1,000; Mrs. J. P. Lord, Elgin, Ill., $500. Mrs. Lord sent a check for the full amount.

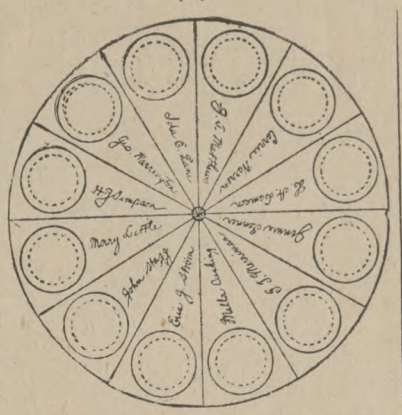
WON'T ALL OUR SISTERS WHO HAVE WHEELS PUT AWAY IN BUREAU DRAWERS GET THEM OUT?



SPIN YOUR WHEELS ALONG WITH THEIR SILVER BRIGHT. EVERY DOLLAR COUNTS. JANUARY IS AT HAND.

Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, president of the Boston W. C. T. U., sent for one hundred Wheels, and has personally had them all filled herself. We would like to have a few more such local presidents as she. This noble woman, who is one of the finest speakers in the W. C. T. U. ranks, wanted very much to have her name enrolled in our Temperance Westminster, and as she could not afford to pay a hundred dollars right out, she set herself to work to secure the amount, and accomplished it by filling one hundred Wheels. There are plenty more of our women who have a large circle of acquaintances who could do the same thing if they would only try.

One hundred and fifty-two dollars and eighty-eight cents has been received from the treasurer of New Jersey, Mrs. N. L. Caminade; $52 of the above comes from the Vineland W. C. T. U., this completes their hundred dollar pledge and two dollars over. Allentown W. C. T. U. sends $34.89. Palisade union, $20, Rahway W. C. T. U., $40, Tuckerton Y's, $5, Plainfield W. C. T. U., $1. Mrs. L. W. Blacklaw sends $25 towards the Bucks' county, Pa., W. C. T. U. pledge. Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, president of Iowa, sends $50 which is to be applied toward placing the name of Mother Benedict on a tablet in Willard Hall. The Y. W. C. T. U. of Millersville, Pa., normal school sends $12. We hope this Y union will complete a hundred dollars and have its name in Willard Hall. Mrs. A. E. Sanford, treasurer of Illinois W. C. T. U., sends a check for $71.89. Of the above amount $46.89 comes from the sixteenth district W. C. T. U. The balance is in small amounts from different unions, and will be given by the financial secretary later. Mrs. Lydia A. Maddock sends $15.30 on the pledge of Preble county, Ohio, W. C. T. U. Miss Augusta Hood is working hard to raise a hundred dollars for the Payson, Ill., union. She has sent in $26.35. She has filled Wheels, sold plants, ice cream, and is still keeping at it. Why is it that some souls are so faithful and unselfish, while others sit with folded hands and are entirely unresponsive? I always wonder what He will think of it all—He who came not to be ministered unto but to minister.

Mrs. Ellen H. Lacy, president of Warren county, Pa., W. C. T. U. sends for a complete outfit for Baby Bands. She writes, "One of our local unions has been blessed with an increase in membership, ten babies during the last year. This is a splendid opportunity to start a Baby Band. God bless the Temple babies!" We wish there could be a revival in Baby Band work. As we have so often said, no better work for temperance can be done. All persons securing the names of one hundred children under eight years will receive a Temple silver souvenir teaspoon. Send to me for lists and cards.

Mrs. M. J. Wamsley sends one dollar from the infant class of the Bement, Ill., M. E. Church. Two dollars comes through Miss Mary M. Slack, from a little Sunday-school of fifteen members in Taylor, North Dakota. Miss Slack writes, "We are an isolated little company attempting our little without any church help whatever. Please send me two Wheels, we will try to fill them." Oh, these LITTLES from such sources by heaven's alchemy are turned into great sums.

Our little friend, Ethel Stout, the child editor (now getting into her teens) has held on through all the hard times to the cute little ten-cent child's paper, The Midget, published at Warm Springs, Ga. Ethel writes: "The Midget is now ready to come to the Temple with its one-tenth. I think, however, I shall not apply it to securing tablets, but let the local unions where The Midget is taken retain the one-tenth to send direct to you." We would advise Ethel that the money is much better to come through her hands as the local unions would find it very difficult to keep track of such small amounts.

OUR NOBLE CAUSE.

[Tune: The Russian Hymn.]

[The following hymn was one of four sung at the World's W. C. T. U. Convention by the pupils of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, and composed by Miss Amelia Campbell, one of the pupils. The college was founded by Dr. F. J. Campbell, a native of Tennessee, and a graduate of the New York College for the Blind.]

God bless our noble cause, crown it with glory,
Through every age let its praises resound.
May the whole earth feel the truth of our story,
As the white ribbon encircles it round.

God send us many friends, brave and truehearted,
Fighting our battles with courage and love;
In this great strife may we never be parted,
Till in Thy kingdom we all meet above.

God give us strength and zeal, Thy presence shedding
Light on our pathway, by night and by day;
Thus may our cause, Lord, Thine honor be spreading,
And the white ribbon Thy glory display.

THE SHOEMAKER AND LITTLE WHITE SHOES.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

I write down the following story from memory. It was related by one of the original Crusaders of Ohio, in an audience where I was present:

"One morning during the crusade, a drunkard's wife came to my door. She carried in her arms a baby six weeks old. Her pale, pinched face was sad to see, and she told me this sorrowful story: 'My husband is drinking himself to death; he is lost to all human feeling; our rent is unpaid, and we are liable to be put out into the street; and there is no food in the house for me and the children. He has a good trade, but his earnings all go into the saloon on the corner near us; he is becoming more and more brutal and abusive. We seem to be on the verge of ruin. How can I, feeble as I am, with a babe in my arms, earn bread for myself and children?'

"Quick as thought the question came to me, and I asked it, 'Why not have this husband of yours converted?'

"But she answered hopelessly, 'Oh, there's no hope of such a thing; he cares for nothing but strong drink.'

"'I'll come and see him this afternoon,' said I.

"'He'll insult you,' she replied.

"'No matter,' said I; 'my Saviour was insulted, and the servant is not above his Lord.'

"That very afternoon I called at the little tenement house. The husband was at work at his trade in a back room, and his little girl was sent to tell him that a lady wished to see him. The child, however, soon returned with the message, 'My pa says he won't see any one.'

"But I sent him a message proving that I was indeed in earnest. I said, 'Go back and tell your pa that a lady wishes to see him on very important business, and she must see him, if she has to stay till after supper.'

"I knew very well that there was nothing in the house to eat. A moment afterward a poor, bloated, besotted wreck of a man stood before me.

"'What do you want?' he demanded, as he came shuffling into the room.

"'Please be seated and look at this paper,' I answered, pointing to a vacant chair at the other end of the table where I was sitting, and handing a printed pledge to him.

"He read it slowly, and then throwing it down upon the table, broke out violently:

"'Do you think I'm a fool? I drink when I please, and let it alone when I please. I'm not going to sign away my personal liberty.'

"'Do you think you can stop drinking?'

"'Yes, I could if I wanted.'

"'On the contrary, I think you're a slave to the rum-shop down on the corner.'

"'No, I ain't any such thing.'

"'I think, too, that you love the saloon-keeper's daughter better than you do your own little girl.'

"'No, I don't, either.'

"'Well, let us see about that. When I passed the saloon-keeper's house I saw his little girl coming down the steps, and she had on white shoes, and a white dress, and a blue sash. Your money helped to buy them. I came here, and your little girl, more beautiful than she, has on a faded, ragged dress, and her feet are bare.'

"'That's so, madam.'

"'And you love the saloon-keeper's wife better than you do your own wife.'

"'Never, no, never.'

"'When I passed the saloon-keeper's house, I saw his wife come out with the little girl, and she was dressed in silks and laces, and a carriage waited for her. Your money helped to buy the silks and laces, and the horses and the carriage. I came here and I find your wife in a faded calico gown, doing her work. If she goes anywhere, she must walk.'

"'You speak the truth, madam.'

"'You love the saloon-keeper better than you love yourself. You say you can keep from drinking if you choose, but you helped the saloon-keeper to build himself a fine brick house, and you live in this poor, tumble-down old house yourself.'

"'I never saw it in that light before.' Then, holding out his hand, that shook like an aspen leaf, he continued, 'You speak the truth, madam; I am a slave. Do you see that hand? I've got a piece of work to finish, and I must have a mug of beer to steady my nerves, or I cannot do it, but to-morrow, if you call, I will sign the pledge.'

"'That's a temptation of the devil. I did not ask you to sign the pledge. You are a slave, and cannot help it. But I do want to tell you this: there is One who can break your chains and set you free.'

"'I want to be free.'

"'Well, Christ can set you free, if you'll submit to Him, and let Him break the chains of sin and appetite that bind you.'

"'It's been many a long year since I prayed.'

"'No matter; the sooner you begin the better for you.'

"He threw himself at once upon his knees, and while I prayed I heard him sobbing out the cry of his soul to God.

"His wife knelt beside me and followed me in earnest prayer. The words were simple and broken with sobs, but somehow they went straight up from her crushed heart to God, and the poor man began to cry in earnest for mercy.

"'O God! break these chains that are burning into my soul! Pity me, and pity my wife and children, and break the chains that are dragging me down to hell. O God! be merciful to me, a sinner.' And thus out of the depths he cried to God, and He heard him and had compassion upon him, and broke every chain and lifted every burden; and he arose a free, redeemed man.

"When he rose from his knees he said, 'Now I will sign the pledge and keep it.'

"And he did. A family altar was established; the comforts of life were soon secured—for he had a good trade—and two weeks after this scene his little girl came into my husband's Sunday-school with white shoes and white dress, and a blue sash on, as a token that her father's money no longer went into the saloon-keeper's till.

"But what struck me most of all was, that it took less than two hours of my time thus to be an ambassador for Christ in declaring the terms of heaven's great treaty whereby a soul was saved from death, a multitude of sins were covered, and a home restored to purity and peace."—Selected.

SWINGING CATS.

BY LILY RICE FOXCROFT.

"But I don't want to swing a cat. I never do swing a cat"—such, David Copperfield tells us, was gentle Mr. Dick's reply when Mrs. Crupp criticised his lodgings as not affording room for exercise of that sort. A very proper reply it certainly was. Acquiescence and adaptation were what Mr. Dick's circumstances called for, and what he was best fitted for himself, for that matter. But, after all, isn't there something to be said for Mrs. Crupp and her ideals?

"Room to swing a cat"—are we so sure that we do not want it, that we should not be any happier or healthier if we had it? Dismiss for a minute the thought of the cat as a sentient, palpitating creature, and conceive of her merely as a unit of length. Two and a half feet, say, from the tip of her nose back to the end of her extended tail; add three feet or a trifle more for the arm and shoulder of the person swinging her, and you have easily a radius of five and a half feet. Fancy the exhilaration of being able to stand straight up on your floor and swing such a circle without knocking anything down or pulling anything off or tumbling over anything yourself, if you chance to grow a little dizzy in the mad whirl! There is freedom, tonic, in the very thought. "Hold a sense of swinging cats" ought to be added to the list of instructions for Delsarte practice. But imagine yourself trying the experiment in your reception room! First, pussy's claws catch in the scarf over the easel; then you hear them tearing the lace shade of the piano-lamp; thud goes her poor cheek against the vase on the piano; as your arm drops lower with the shock, her body bangs against your teakettle and it clatters to the floor; moving back to get out of range of the fire-screen, you fall in a heap over your baby-palm—and still poor puss has hardly described an arc of 270 degrees.

The fact is, we have become so much accustomed to crowded rooms that we accept the confusion and inconvenience as a matter of course, without realizing how wearisome it all is. The care of superfluous furniture and bric-à-brac is beginning to be recognized as a burden, but that its mere presence is an occasion of fatigue we are slower in finding out. No doubt the newspaper humorists have exaggerated the influence of the "tidy" as a promoter of profanity. But there is a bit of truth in the dull old jest. Tidies that slip off, photographs that tumble down, hassocks that trip you up, plants that get in your way when you try to open windows, rugs that roll up against the casters of your chair, as you move it, Dresden trays on the corner where you would naturally rest your elbow while you read, tables so full of knickknacks that you can't find a place to set anything down, writing desks with room on them for everything except the elbow of the person who wants to write—these are things that try men's souls. "Trifles not worth noticing," women may call them. But to one of these "trifles" add another and another and another, and there results a total of nervous irritation which affects women as much as men, though they may not be so conscious of it. Threading one's way through a crowd of things is not really so very much easier than threading one's way through a crowd of people. The effort may in time become an unconscious one, but it still produces fatigue.

It is as true of things as of people that their room is often better than their company. Not only is their presence a perpetual annoyance, but their absence would be an actual rest. This is not mere fancy. The sense of space is refreshing and reposeful in itself. We feel it looking on the mountains and the great plains and the sea. We feel it in the very difference between outdoors and indoors. We should feel it, if we had not schooled ourselves against the feeling, in the difference between rooms which now we call "too bare," and rooms which we ought to learn to call "too crowded." All this, of course, artists appreciate. But it is worth considering from the hygienic as well as the æsthetic side.

Practically, what can we do? In spite of the artists, fashion still favors a superfluity of furnishing and ornament. Women who find the burden of inconvenience easier to carry than the burden of unconventionality must leave their reception rooms as they are. But in the less public parts of the house—in the sleeping-rooms, the sewing-rooms, and the nurseries—each may surely please herself. Sleep is most refreshing, work goes on fastest, frolic is freest, where there is the maximum of space with the minimum of movables—in short, where there is room to swing a cat!—The Outlook.

SNAP-SHOT AT A BOSTON LIQUOR HEARING.

BY MARGARET J. BIDWELL.

A hot, stifling morning in August, when the heat pours down from the heavens above and seems to come up through the pavements from the earth beneath, and when every mortal who can find a cool, quiet place among the hills or beside the sea and is able to get there, is absent from the city.

There is no lovelier place, no more beautiful homes than can be found in D——, but the liquor dealer, like his master, never takes a vacation, and so the people who desire to live in a clean neighborhood, and to feel that there is safety for their children as they pass to and from school, are up and doing this morning, and wending their way to the office of the police commissioners, who wish to know why a half-dozen more saloons should not be set up in this residential part of the city.

See them crowding into the room. Soon it is full, and the three members of the honorable board are in their places. They are sensible looking men; the chairman has the bearing of a soldier, and is a resident of D——. Over on this side are the remonstrants, almost a hundred of them, from various walks of life. Study their faces; clear-eyed, intelligent, clean American citizens, and worthy of the name. There are earnest-faced women among them, and here is a group wearing a bit of white ribbon.

Some weeks ago, when it was rumored that Mr. and Mrs. O'Thief and Mr. Gilligan had applied for a license to open saloons near the old post-office, where there are already two dens in full blast, a few of these women, with the assistance of a faithful pastor, quietly secured the names of two hundred voters who objected, and as a result this meeting was called to-day. There are the ministers. That gray-haired man, with a pleasant face and a keen eye, is a leader among them. He has done valiant service for God and humanity, and is the uncompromising foe of the liquor traffic. When the time comes for him to speak, his voice rings out clear and true.

Behold the petitioners! Foreigners to a man, with coarse faces, and without conscience enough among them to furnish a decent heathen with a sample of that particular article. But they can all vote! So can the motley crowd who appear as witnesses in their behalf.

One of these witnesses affords a good deal of amusement to the remonstrants. He is Mr. O'Toole, and he thinks there ought to be more saloons in D——. "It would greatly benefit the town, he is sure, and a great many eminent people who live there think so too."

"Will you mention some of the people who think that the neighborhood would be improved by an increase in the number of saloons," said a lawyer, quietly.

"Well," said Mr. O'Toole, "Mary Macarty thinks so and so does Dennis O'Brien!"

"Do you think that men have difficulty in getting all the liquor they want?"

"I do, sorr."

"Do you find any trouble in getting all you desire?"

"Oh, no, indeed, sorr; I can get all I want, day or night."

There can be no argument in defense of these would-be drunkard makers, but one of the lawyers, who has been paid to talk and so must do it, solemnly arises and declares that "D—— must be a sacred place and ought to have a Chinese wall around it." The board listens with grave faces, while the lawyers talk and the remonstrants grow weary but stick to their posts, until at last the hearing is declared ended, and with thankful hearts the respectable part of the audience vanish from the scene to wait and hope, and pray that the right may prevail. And it does, for after two days the announcement is made that no more liquor licenses will be granted in D—— this year.

A CHOICE.

Our pledge, one and all,
Is against alcohol;
A bright idea
Is not found in beer;
Something more than a spider
Is found in the cider.

Now, answer me promptly.
With judgment as clear.
When asked to decide
Between water and beer.

The one leads to sickness,
The other to health;
The beer leads to ruin,
Pure water to wealth;

The one costs you nothing,
The other is dear;
For God gives the water,
But man sells the beer.
Then be wise with your choice.

AUNT HATTIE'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

BY CLARISSA POTTER.

It was Katie's happy thought and it came to her one sunshiny October day as she ran home from school kicking a long bright path through the rustling crimson and gold and russet leaves that lay in thick windrows along the roadside.

"Next month is Aunt Hattie's birthday," she said, "and by that time the pretty leaves will have faded and the ferns and vines be frost-nipped, so we can't trim her room with bright branches and green vines as Nellie told to-day, of her present to her sick auntie. But poor, dear Aunt Hattie can never walk in the fields and woods again, and she does so love green growing things and to gather the gay colored leaves, I wish—" and then Katie's bright thought flashed in mind.

She would pick for her Aunt Hattie, before they were spoiled, the very brightest of the leaves, just as many colors as she could find, and press them with pretty ferns and vines, maiden hair and pigeon and wild strawberry, ready for Aunt Hattie's birthday.

Katie gathered a great many leaves, for she knew that in pressing them very many would lose their gay coloring while others would come from it as gaudy as when they fluttered from the tree.

The delicate fronds and vines she laid in thick newspapers under heavy weights, till their juices were well dried in them.

Aunt Hattie had long been a shut-in, crippled with spinal disease, lying year after year on her bed but still had use of her hands.

Her room in Katie's home was a sunny south chamber with three large windows prettily draped with curtains of white lace.

This birthday she was fifty years old and she had thought it would be a long, dreary day, but she forgot her pain and loneliness when Katie brought her her present.

It was a basket of pressed bright autumn leaves, dainty sprays of blood-red sumac and woodbine with graceful ferns and vines, a roll of Japanese paper napkins and a box of tiny pins.

"See, auntie," Katie said, spreading one of the napkins before her on the coverlet. "See what lovely transparencies you can make by pinning the leaves and ferns on the pretty squares of silk paper! You can make wreaths and crosses and anchors of them just as you pin on the leaves and vines, and then I will fasten them all over the lace curtains in your windows, so the sun may shine through them till your room looks like a fairy's bower."

"Oh, how beautiful," Aunt Hattie said, when she had pinned on the sheeny white paper a circlet of gorgeous leaves and Katie had fastened it in the window. "They look as fresh as though just gathered from the woods. Thank you, Katie, for giving me such a busy, happy birthday as this will be in arranging in pretty designs these lovely things from the fields and woods."

TOBACCO.

BY ERMA M. THORNTON.

[Eleven years old.]

Until within a few years ago part of the southern states and the middle states were the chief tobacco raising states. They now raise it nearly all over the United States and as far north as Canada.

The plant grows to the height of about six feet. It has long pale green leaves which are dried and prepared to smoke in pipes, chewed or made into cigars.

Tobacco is a narcotic. A narcotic is anything that deadens the brain and nerves. Tobacco contains a substance called nicotine. You can prove the poisoning power of nicotine by putting a single drop on the tongue of a dog. It will soon kill the animal. A cigar contains enough nicotine to kill three men, if taken pure.

Men have to learn to like tobacco. They know that the first time they take any of it, it makes them dizzy and causes headache. A great many boys and men learn to smoke by beginning on cigarettes. These are so small that they seem harmless but it is one of the worst ways of using tobacco.

Old cigar stumps are often picked up in the streets and made into cigarettes. In this way diseases may be spread, coming from the mouths of the first users. These stumps are the strongest and contain more nicotine than any other part of the cigar.

Chewing tobacco sometimes causes sores on the mouth, and even cancers. Besides it discolors the teeth and the gums become soft and spongy.

Nicotine makes the mouth feel dry and the glands send more saliva to the mouth and the constant spitting robs one of the saliva needed for digestion.

The habit of spitting is a very impolite one. It makes floors and sidewalks filthy, and they are not fit for clean people to walk on.

Tobacco affects the stomach in three different ways. It injures the lining of the stomach, hinders the flow of the gastric juice and therefore interferes with digestion.

The effect of tobacco on the heart is much the same as that of alcohol. The beat is quickened but the power is weakened. Severe pain around the heart sometimes results from smoking. Sometimes ringing sounds are heard in the ears. This results from the use of tobacco.

In Germany children under sixteen years of age are forbidden to use it. Sometimes specks of light seem to be dancing before the eyes and it usually results from the use of tobacco and is cured by stopping its use.

Tobacco used in any form destroys the ability to apply one's self to study and prevents one from remembering things.

In a word, we might say tobacco and alcohol disappoint all except those who seek death for body and mind.

It takes 3,200 mail cars to distribute Uncle Sam's mail, and the New York division alone requires 819 railway postal clerks to handle it. Last year these clerks handled 1,207,220,577 pieces of mail bound past their division, of which 753,976,835 were letters. To get a clear idea of the immense amount of mail matter in this number of letters, suppose they averaged four inches in length and are laid end to end. They will stretch over a line 2,975 miles long. All railway postal clerks must be quick and intelligent and have a thorough knowledge of the geography of the whole country. In the second division there are 18,000 post-offices, and the clerks know every one. This system of railway post-offices has proved so valuable that it is now being operated on the trans-Atlantic steamships.—Harper's Young People.

463. Chicago.

Dear Boys and Girls:—A company of white-ribboners were lunching together in the Temple one day not a thousand miles away from Cozy Corner. Among the W. C. T. U. mothers and aunties was one who is known throughout our country as a lecturer and Christian worker. She told such a good story about her daughter that I am going to tell it to you. This little girl was very quick to learn, and yet she was like many other little ones, full of naughty ways. She was fond of flowers, and could never resist the temptation to pick any which were within her reach. Next door there lived a neighbor, Mrs. C——, who had just planted a fine garden. M—— (for that was the little girl's name) had been warned by her mother and carefully cautioned not to pick Mrs. C——'s flowers. All went well until one day, her mother returning from an absence, found the little girl with her hands full of the beautiful flowers from Mrs. C——'s garden.

"Why, M——," said she, "did I not tell you that you were not to pick those flowers?"

M—— clung tightly to the bouquet and said nothing.

"Don't you know those flowers are not yours? It is stealing for you to take them."

The tears began to flow in the child's eyes as she realized what she had done.

"You have broken one of God's commandments," continued her mother, sorrowfully, "and you must pray to Him for forgiveness. But first, go to Mrs. C——, return the flowers, and tell her how sorry you are for what you have done."

Mrs. C—— was a stern, severe woman, of whom M—— was very much afraid.

"Oh, no, mamma," she cried, tearfully, "I'd rather tell God!"

"Why?" asked her mother, kindly.

"Because I'm more afraid of Mrs. C—— than I am of God!"

This happened many years ago. M—— is a grown woman now, with a little white-ribbon daughter of her own. She has learned to be more afraid of displeasing her Father in heaven than any earthly friend. God loves us more than our dearest friends can do, and it pains Him more than any other when His children do wrong. Shall we not show our love by endeavoring to do all things right in His eyes?

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

I have just been reading The Union Signal. I like to read the letters and crack the Soft-Shelled Nuts. I belong as an active to the Christian Endeavor. I will be thirteen years old the twenty-first of this month. Please write to me, and I would like to hear from the cousins.

O'Neal's, Madera Co., Cal. Kate Smith.

And you are an "active" temperance worker, too, I am sure.

I was in Chicago and went to the Cozy Corner to see you, and was sorry that you were not at home, for I wanted to see you. I had a drink from the children's fountain. Papa paid ten cents for me two or three years ago. Maybe I can go to see you again if papa goes to Chicago to buy goods. I am only six years old, and have not written many letters, so you cannot expect this letter to be very good. Mamma wrote this for me, I write so slowly.

Fern Gage.

Olivet, Mich.

I will be very glad to see you, Fern, when you come again.

My papa is a Prohibitionist, and my mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U., giving much time to the work of the union. I belong to the Loyal Temperance Legion, and I am ten years old. I am in the fourth grade, and I enjoy my school work.

I have earned almost twelve dollars through the summer selling flowers. I am very much interested in Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner in The Union Signal, and hope to become a strong temperance woman.

Springfield, Mass. Helen B. Merrill.

You will become one, God helping you, little niece.

I am eleven years old. I read my grandma's Union Signal every week. Jennie S. Wallace.

2133 Vine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Shall we enroll you as a Cozy Cornerer, Jennie?

DEVELOPMENT.

In a paper read before the Wisconsin State Horticultural Society a lady said: "I want the woman on the farm to go visiting more and have company more. I want her to be emancipated from bed quilts and rag carpets—soul destroying appliances that they are."

We are none of us too metropolitan for the application of the spirit of this sentiment. There are wrecks all along the shores of time which mark an intellectual progress in womankind. There are houses which contain a perfect calendar of progress, from putty work up to absorption in the Chautauqua course. Our fancy work has grown artistic, but there is fair prospect for future bonfires fed by the placques and decorated rolling pins which please some of us vastly now.

We have seen the rag carpet and patchwork quilt when they told a pathetic story, but in general their value is doubtful, even from the economic standpoint. The money spent for thread, wadding, lining and material for setting together a pieced quilt would certainly have purchased an infinitely prettier white one.

When these things represent the reaching out toward the art ideal of an ignorant, undeveloped nature without capacity or opportunity—one more likely to do worse than better were these idols removed—it would be far from wise to seek to cast them out, but when the intelligent woman, who can by other means furnish her house, finds herself sitting down to cut old clothes into strings, she would better endow the ubiquitous neighbor of low degree who is always wanting "a few carpet rags," and take the time to improve her qualifications for intelligently instructing her children, keeping intellectual pace with her husband or stimulating him to keep pace with her and the times; better even "pick up" and go visiting and talk of those things which make for the advantage of home and church and state.

Women come together and talk over all sorts of matters justly styled "feminine"—how they make their preserves and pickles, their success with house plants, the addition to the house or to their neighbor's family, how to make a new gown, and a piece of fancy work rouses to enthusiasm. There is no fault to be found with this friendly chat about necessary and pleasant things; it is womanly, pleasant talk; we ought to be interested in items of home comfort and adornment, but how often this is the sum and substance of the thinking; how often this little round comprises all there is of intellectual action.

These are days of great opportunity; let us open our windows and let in thoughts; let us lift our souls above and let them surround the narrowness of commonplace living instead of being confined therein. There is nothing too high and fine for the soul to aspire to and understand and live by. Every one of us may be great; it is that to live up to our possibilities wherever we may be placed. There is a broader view of the duties and influence of women dawning upon us than the world has before dreamed of; not alone or chiefly in public work but in the opportunities and possibilities of our homes. There are thoughts advanced, books written, knowledge poured out before us, and those to whom it comes of a sudden feel almost overwhelmed. Young mothers with little children already about them grasp and use what they can, regretting the unthinking folly which brought them to their kingdom without one idea of preparation. Wifehood and motherhood come to most women. Life is not to be all gayety. "We'll have a good time then while we can," say the girls. That is all right and nobody will say you nay, but shall the coming time bring the hard, joyless, disappointing fate which curses so many lives for want of a little serious thought and study? How many girls base their hope of a happy future on that which can no more produce happiness than thistles can produce grapes.

There are still very many persons who consider a girl perfectly well prepared for marriage when she has her wardrobe well replenished and is skilled in cookery and the details of housekeeping, and truly she is better so than many who enter the wedded state; but how little thought whether or no she has a high ideal of living to be impressed on those who are to gather around her in her home-making—of the infinity of things she ought to know.

True, housekeeping is a science and not to be learned in a day. One may be a firstclass housekeeper and maintain in apple pie order only an empty shell for a home. It is not a thing to be learned all of a sudden when the demand comes; it calls for training, thought and study.

Where shall they go to school—these young women who need to learn discrimination and self-control and facts in hygiene and the recognition of real values—these older women who need to be illumined by the kindling of a light within? You, the initiated and illumined who read these words, know there are ample sources of inspiration. The more difficult question is, how shall they who are not conscious of the existence of any such needs be induced to go to school?

Are white-ribbon mothers educating their own daughters as they might and ought to educate them? Why not the unobtrusive but systematic bringing of the book, the leaflet, the temperance paper to their notice? A woman who could be induced to read regularly the official organ of our order could not long be unenlightened. Try persistent lending of your paper with special articles marked.

The convention is one of the best places to capture the woman whose heart and mind respond readily to what is good and right. Might not white-ribboners conspire to bring the promising subject under its influence? With face set in the right direction, with mental hunger once awakened, how many would soon be no whit behind the best of us? Must not their school be a mission school in which all white ribbon women shall be teachers?

THE TEMPERANCE EDUCATION STAR.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt has well characterized the educational temperance movement as "The star that stands over our school-houses." This star starting in Vermont has moved on from one state to another until it stands over every one except two of the forty-four states in the Union, and sheds its benign rays upon eighteen million of children. In the near future all of the youth of our land will come under instruction in regard to the nature of narcotics, and thus be fortified against their use before a vicious appetite is formed. It is believed that when children have thoroughly mastered the truth that "Temperance is the moderate use of those things that are good in their essential nature, but total abstinence from all things that are bad in their essential composition," and have learned to know the bad and its effects upon the mental, moral and physical man, the "ounce of prevention" will then be put to a larger and more vital test than in all the ages heretofore, and that it will not fail. That it shall not is the prayer of faith woven into the web of law, running through warp and woof, double stayed and battened by thousands of thoughtful, hopeful men and women. These temperance laws put the future of our Republic into the hands of teachers as never before. To-morrow the scepter of power passes to the millions of children whose springs of action are touched to-day for good or for evil, and they become the sources of weakness or of strength in our national as well as in our individual life.

The seed thought of compulsory education in the line of temperance did not originate till about 1880, and there was not a single temperance education law until 1882. This was passed down in Vermont, and was so feeble, probably on account of the stony soil upon which the seed fell, that there had to be a replanting in 1886, or, in other words, the law had to be amended.

No general opportunity to study the results of this and similar laws passed from time to time in other states, presented itself until the World's Fair was opened. Even then the results, so far as expressed, were hidden facts, in that dense forest of beautiful, vigorous, mature and immature—but always promising—intellectual growth installed in the gallery of the Manufactures Building and spreading out into some of the state buildings. Results were as hard to find as the historic needle in the haystack, but when found well rewarded the seeker. Only great facts can be noted here. Of the thirty-eight states having mandatory laws at that time thirty-five had school exhibits at Chicago, but as the temperance laws of three of these did not become effective until after the Fair opened they could show no results. Of the remaining thirty-two states, all but seven included the subject of scientific temperance in their exhibitions.

Of the work of the twenty-five states which included this subject, it may be said in general that while some schools indicated a lack of proper training upon vital points, due probably to the use of inferior texts, the major part of the work described and illustrated the subject in such a way as to show careful and accurate training with good books in hand. In a number of cases the primary grades, by especially meritorious work, revealed the teacher's interest and proficiency in the subject, as well as that of the pupil. Two-thirds of the twenty-five states had essays and examination papers which indicated not only a good knowledge of structure and function, but excellent knowledge of the consequences to the human system of the violation of hygienic law in the use of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics, including cigars and cigarettes. The states showing the highest excellence in this particular subject were Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nebraska, Maryland, Iowa, Montana, South Dakota and Washington.

Several of the six states not having temperance education laws at that time, exhibited good pupil work on the subject; this was especially true of New Jersey, which has since then passed such a law; while five of the seven states having laws and showing no work in this study, were reported by superintendents of public instruction or other officials to have the subject taught according to the requirements of the law.

From the foregoing it seems only fair to conclude that the subject is not so unpopular as some have affirmed; in fact, that it is not at all unpopular in any general or extended sense. When teachers are unprepared, and especially when text-books are not good, it is reasonable that there should be an effort to shirk the responsibility of the law, and that teachers and superintendents should make "up-hill" work of it.

From the quantity and quality of the exhibit it may safely be concluded that laws had been enforced about as well as the difficulties attending would permit, as in many of the states sufficient time had not elapsed in which to thoroughly introduce the study, instruct the teachers and select the best books.

Temperance education laws were sterile plants of necessity, until the pollen of proper text-books was fully matured and fell into the hands of school boards, teachers and pupils. When the first law was passed in 1882, there was not a single book in the world that met its requirements. At the Fair there was shown as large a variety of good, well-graded school texts on this as on any other subject, and they were awarded, as was also the pupil work of the schools. There is now under process of growth a plan for post-graduate training—a department of scientific temperance in a great university, where specialists may prosecute their work in all lines pertaining to the subject—biology, chemistry, physiology, pathology, and in time law, economics, reform, etc. Such specialists in research and original experiment, would naturally become the great pedagogical leaders in the presentation of scientific temperance truth and a school of authority such as does not exist to-day.

Sweden, Finland, Canada and parts of Australia have followed the example of the United States and framed similar laws making scientific temperance instruction mandatory. The mission schools of Turkey, China, Bulgaria, South Africa and the Danish West Indies are introducing the subject, while philanthropists of England, France, Russia, Denmark, New Zealand and other countries are inquiring and agitating.

American text-books have been translated into the languages of six different foreign countries and are now in their schools. Books and cuts for illustration have been sent by request to still other countries where they have served as the basis of school texts written from a native standpoint. The children of Japan, Sweden and Norway, the Sandwich Islands, Siam, India, Finland and China are to-day using physiologies prepared for them in America.

So far as laws have been enacted in other countries, they are, as are all of their prototypes in the United States, the product of the hand and brain of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt of Boston, superintendent of the department of Scientific Instruction of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. In her brain originated the plan of compulsory scientific temperance instruction in the schools, to execute which "called for the ability of a statesman, a scientist and a philanthropist." These have made the United States the pioneer of nations in giving this instruction to every boy and girl under its government; and will, it is believed, make it the pioneer nation to banish the drink habit from its subjects.

The idea of scientific temperance instruction in our schools has crystallized into law. It has become a part of the government to be executed in due and regular form. Behind the school authorities and the schools and the laws stand a favoring public sentiment and the hopes of many reformers. Among these are Uncle Sam's silent partners, 300,000 women who, without governmental recognition or relation to the scheme, nevertheless are pledged to a peaceful, faithful warfare of which this temperance instruction is an important part. They with others calmly await the coming century for the fruition of the method—a fruition which it is hoped will be nothing less than the cure of a great national evil by an educational preventive.

THE NEW BIRTH OF SOCIETY.

To a superficial view, the development of social principles seems often but an exemplification of the law of "survival of the fittest." These principles, seemingly contradictory and mutually destructive, develop side by side. Around one of them, preëminently, civilization crystallizes. After a process of evolution with more or less of upheaval, the other principle becomes the central idea of the social system. Such a conflict is reaching a crisis in our civilization.

"All men are born free and equal and possessed of certain inalienable rights," is the chief doctrine of our political creed, which voices the idea of civil liberty wrought out by our English ancestors. This statement does not assume to deny the obvious inequalities of heredity and environment under which men are born. It is simply a declaration of the truth that before the law every individual should be given equal rights. A truth which took such possession of the Anglo-Saxon mind, that for a time it all but excluded other truths of equal importance.

Out of this idea have sprung two seemingly contradictory growths; on the one hand the most perfectly organized system of society the world has ever seen; on the other an individualism as intense as any known to history. Society assumes to take from the individual the right and the need to protect himself, to avenge his own wrongs. It says to him, "the wealth and power of millions of your fellowmen are pledged to protect your life from the assassin, your property from the robber." Individuals find it no longer necessary to dwell in turreted castles, and cities have leveled their useless walls. Small room, it would seem, for individualism under such conditions. And yet, our social system itself is a system of private war in which each man's hand is against his fellow. Competition is every man for himself and one can win only by the loss of others. The conditions of a hundred years ago gave no opportunity for the full application of the principle. But with the massing of population, the invention of machinery, the enormous development and concentration of wealth, the undertaking of enterprises world-wide in their extent, the competitive system has developed its inherent characteristics and produced its legitimate fruits.

In the face of conflicts between capital and labor growing yearly more bitter and frequent, of the financial crashes increasing in frequency and magnitude, who dare claim that it is anything else than war, its ultimate results other than anarchy? Men, indeed, organize into great nations, the like of which the ancients never saw, but it is for the one purpose of securing "fair play" for the individual in the fierce struggle of competition.

Such, then, are the purely characteristic yet seemingly contradictory tendencies of our civilization. No greater community of interests, no more complete dependence of the individual upon the state have ever been known than exists in our great modern nations. Neither does history present an example of more intense individualism than that of our competitive system. Such a contradictory condition of affairs cannot continue indefinitely. Yet the struggle between these opposing principles is not a question of "the survival of the fittest." It is a question of reconciliation; of finding and embodying in our institutions the truth in both. If we fail to do this, if either principle shall prevail to the extinction of the other, modern civilization will be engulfed in the horrors of anarchy or strangled in the grasp of tyranny. The civilization which endures must hold sacred the rights of the individual; but for this very reason organized society must be preserved with jealous care. Outside of organized society, the individual has no development, no life worth living. The mistake in our civilization at present is not that individual rights are too highly prized, but that a wrong view obtains as to how to guard those rights. "A fair field and a free fight" were once supposed to be all that were necessary to secure the individual in his "inalienable rights" of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

But natural inequalities, and those of inherited wealth, are too great. Experience has proved that this policy results inevitably in the few getting all the prizes, the many being pushed to the wall. To protect the rights of the individual (in the struggle for existence) society must do something more than cry "hands off." It must remove disadvantages, must protect the weak against the strong. This does not mean a return to any form of patriarchal or feudal system. The development of the idea of individual rights has been too great to admit of such a possibility. Perhaps this is the object of its excessive growth. It does mean, however, a normal development of the principle of Christian altruism. Our present system serves as an illustration of the truth of the Master's words, "He that findeth his life shall lose it." Excessive individualism has well nigh swamped all individual rights.

There is no need to quibble as to the possibility of any radical change in our social system or to cavil as to the manner in which such a change is to be effected. Already the forces are at work which will surely bring about the transformation. The pendulum has begun its backward swing. In the midst of a social order whose foundation principle is "every man for himself," men have awakened to the keenest sense of responsibility for their fellows. Hence the social settlements, the institutional churches, such organizations as our own W. C. T. U. This same sense of the real unity of humanity and of duty to our fellows, though vague and undefined, has shown itself in our public institutions in which all unite for the good of each.

In the new, wider view of human relationship, it is beginning to be recognized also that society owes its members something more than a "fair field and a free fight." It does not necessarily owe "every man a living," but it owes every man a chance to earn his living, and having earned it the certainty of receiving it. This excludes the idea of excessive toil for the scantiest necessities of life. This chance it was once supposed competition gave, but experience has proved that it does not and cannot; and more and more clear becomes the tendency for government to interfere and protect the weak against the strong. It is dawning upon the human mind that great corporations which require so much aid from organized society, which demand and receive vast franchises are by right the creatures and servants of organized society and cannot trample with impunity the rights of any, "even one of these least," of their fellow citizens beneath their feet.

Men are asking themselves, "Am I my brother's keeper?" not lightly nor in a spirit of defiance, but as a question to be answered conscientiously to God and their own hearts. They are answering it too, with the full acknowledgment that the ills of society can never be remedied until "each man's weal is all men's care." The social evolution through which we are surely passing is a struggle to substitute this principle for selfish competition as the foundation principle of our social system. It is the voice of the Master saying to the state, "You must be born again."

The National Citizenship League has issued a call "To the People of God Everywhere," setting forth the method and purpose of that organization and summoning the followers of Christ to unite against His enemies. It is signed by a long list of men and women thinkers and philanthropists, among them Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, and appended are letters of indorsement from well known ministers and educators. The League is non-partisan and non-sectarian, its three-fold object being:

"1. To reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the nation as well as of the individual.

"2. To make Christian principles operative in public affairs.

"3. To unite the followers of Christ in consistent, harmonious and aggressive action, not as church members, but as Christian citizens for the following purposes:

"(1) To prevent by personal effort the nomination and election of corrupt candidates and the enactment of corrupt laws in city, state and nation.

"(2) To secure fidelity on the part of officers intrusted with the execution of the laws.

"(3) To exterminate the saloon as the greatest enemy of Christ and humanity.

"(4) To preserve the Sabbath.

"(5) To purify and elevate the elective franchise.

"(6) To promote the study of social wrongs and the application of effective remedies.

"(7) In general to seek the reign of whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report."

The call further states "that this is not a mere call for civic reform—it is vastly more," and "we do not seek a union of church and state nor to govern the state through the church; but we do propose to identify Christian citizens with public affairs, and thus infuse into industries, policies and administrations the spirit of Jesus Christ. . . . To this necessary and sacred work we summon all, of whatever creed, party, nationality or sex who acknowledge God as supreme over all, and desire to see His will done upon earth."

It behooves all Christian citizens to take steps to forward this movement for the betterment of humanity and we suggest they write to the headquarters of the National Christian Citizenship League, 153 La Salle street, Chicago, for detailed information concerning its plans of work.

Dr. Newman Hall once said: "I thank God for being a Christian minister, and after that for being a total abstainer."

Mistresses of the "steel steed" will be incited to still greater activity when they learn that over a million bicycles are turned out annually, costing over fifteen million dollars, and that four hundred miles in twenty-four hours is not considered an extraordinary feat. Robert Herrick, in Scribner's Magazine for October, says the intellectual standards have not been lowered by the presence of women in the University of Chicago, and that the average ability and scholarship of the women has exceeded that of the men. Concerning the atmosphere there, he says: "To be sure, the atmosphere is not the dreamy half-lights of an Oxford garden; rather the harsh, invigorating breeze of a Colorado desert. Unrelieved, that, perhaps, is the word; unrelieved by prejudice, past and present. The student is unprejudiced in scholarship, accepting no traditions of what is really excellent to know; unprejudiced in social life, despising the tame amenities of a reticent society; unprejudiced in athletics, and therefore, thank heaven! still willing to regard his amusements as avocations. He is untrained; even the ambitious candidate for a higher degree in the graduate schools is often lamentably unprejudiced about his foundation of knowledge, but he is eager, sensitive, industrious. College means for him work, and I am sure that the faculty rejoice in the fact that an industrious poverty will for a long time prevent any other conception from becoming universal."

The speech of the Tzar Nicolas II, when a reception was given him by the nobles and representatives of a great population under military rule, is the most far-reaching echo of the past heard this year. He declared his determination to uphold the principle of autocracy, and to be inflexible against innovations. When he had said this—and probably a weaker young man never said anything—his nobles and marshals adjourned to the cathedral to "render thanks to God" for the august declaration and the imperial resolve. Our hopes for Russia are based on the high character and liberal spirit of the young Tzarina, daughter of the Princess Alice, Queen Victoria's noblest child.

This "Tired Woman's Epitaph" I quote especially for the comforting of the Baltimore women who are entertaining the National W. C. T. U.:

"Here lies a poor woman, who always was tired,
Who lived in a house where help was not hired.
Her last words on earth were: 'Dear friends, I am going
Where washing ain't done, nor sweeping, nor sewing,
But everywhere there is exact to my wishes;
For there they don't eat and there's no washing of dishes.
I'll be where loud anthems will always be ringing,
But having no voice, I'll get clear of the singing.
Don't mourn for me now, don't mourn for me never,
I'm going to do nothing for ever and ever.'"

MAINE.

A SUCCESSFUL AND UNIQUE "MAJORITY" CONVENTION.

Our twenty-first annual convention held for the first time in what its residents call "the great state of Aroostook," has proved one of the most successful and certainly in some respects the most unique in our history. September 25, the northern bound trains were gay with flowers and white ribbons with here and there a man who had come to share his wife's good time. Not only the reception committee at Houlton, but many of the hosts and hostesses were at the station to tender the hospitality of the town.

Before eight o'clock Thursday morning the streets were full of women wending their way to the Baptist church to attend the meetings of the executive committee and state superintendents. The opening devotional service conducted by the evangelistic superintendent, Mrs. Lucy Snow, was very largely attended, the central thought being the need of earnestness since the fields are white for the harvest.

Promptly at ten o'clock the president's gavel fell; the convention instantly came to order, and every county delegation was found to be well filled. The report of the credential committee presented later showed 233 entitled to vote. The decorations of the church were significantly beautiful. Stars and stripes, white and yellow draperies, (for the sensible Houlton women believe in the significance of both colors), evergreen, mottoes and banners were all utilized. Over the windows on either side were the words "Organize" and "Agitate," and on opposite sides of the platform the dates 1874 and 1895.

A spicy feature of the forenoon was the one minute report of each county president. It was found that Cumberland county had made the largest actual gain and Waldo the largest pro rata gain in membership. In accordance with a request of Mrs. Stevens, nearly all closed with some favorite passage of Scripture.

It would be most unfair to attempt even an abstract of our beloved state president's inspiring address in this limited space. She touched upon the topics of deepest interest to the unions, and closed with a number of recommendations for the coming year. The address was received with a rising vote of thanks.

The report of the treasurer ad interim, Mrs. Mary McDowell, showed the finances in better condition than ever before, and a balance of over $200 in the treasury. There has been a gain of more than five hundred and twenty members during the year.

Even "the love of office" does not lure white-ribboners from home when their presence is needed there. Two honored members of our executive committee might have explained their absence in the words of Hannah of old. To assure our corresponding secretary how excusable all thought her, and with what pleasure they looked forward to her presence next year, a greeting was sent with instructions to read I Samuel 1:22. Her annual report was read by Mrs. Adelaide Johnston, and showed progress all along the line, from Aroostook in the north to York in the extreme southwest. A vivid description of the World's Convention in London was given by Miss Clara Stimson, of Caribou, one of the delegates from Maine. Though dark and stormy without, welcome night found only warmth and brightness within. A right royal welcome it was, too. The county president, Mrs. L. J. Spaulding, in her breezy way, welcomed the delegates to the county nearly as large as Massachusetts, larger than Rhode Island or Connecticut, "the land of the big potato." Greetings from Houlton's eight churches were extended through Rev. C. E. Owen, pastor of the convention church, while an eloquent heart-to-heart welcome from the Houlton union was given by Mrs. Owen. Mrs. Geo. S. Hunt ably responded for the state. Mrs. Stevens then introduced what she described as a very remarkable body of women, the state superintendents of department work. From each a two-minute speech was expected, and the fifteen present responded each in her own characteristic way, giving a spice of variety to the evening, and affording the uninitiated a new conception of the breadth and variety of the union's work.

The music of the session was in charge of Rev. Stanford Mitchell and Mrs. Mitchell. Professor Wright and Mrs. A. S. Ladd also rendered several solos.

Special arrangements were made to enable the white-ribboners of the county who were not delegates to attend the meeting as visitors, with comparatively little expense. Music Hall was temporarily turned into a dormitory containing fifty beds and with a housekeeper in charge, under the name of "White-ribboners' Retreat." The parlors of the Congregational church were known for the time as "Willard Hall," and nine ladies found a pleasant home there. The dormitory of Coburn Classical Institute also threw open its doors to the delegates. Meals were served in the church dining hall to one hundred and twenty-five persons.

The people of the town seemed to catch the spirit of the occasion to an unusual degree. Drivers of public carriages were using whips decorated with knots of white ribbon. A friend brought to the church a quantity of decorated potatoes to be taken home as souvenirs.

The usual memorial service for those who have passed away during the year, was conducted by Mrs. Stevens. The list of more than forty names was read and a tender tribute paid to their memory with prayer and appropriate music, the service closing with the noontide prayer.

Maine white-ribboners believe in equal suffrage and they also know how to make voting a very artistic function. The teller announced that Mrs. Stevens had every one of the two hundred and eight votes cast for president and on her being conducted to the platform she was greeted with a song written for the occasion in her honor, by Miss Isabel Shirley, of Bethel, to the tune, "Marching through Georgia." Mrs. Ladd sang the solo, all the delegates coming in on the chorus.

"Hurrah, hurrah, Maine leads a noble band!
Hurrah, hurrah, God, Home and Native Land!
Could there be a deadlier foe or cause more good and grand?
The White Ribbon Army forever!"

Every one in the church was standing, and the air seemed full of white wings as the Chautauqua salute was given. Mrs. Stevens, elected for the eighteenth time, acknowledged the trust reposed in her by her coworkers, and in a voice tremulous with emotion, pledged herself anew to help usher in the day when the Golden Rule shall be applied in society, custom and law.

Mrs. Sarah L. Cram, of Biddeford, and Miss Clara Farwell, of Rockland, were reëlected corresponding and recording secretaries, respectively, Miss Farwell nominating as her assistent Miss Estelle Brainard, of China. A new treasurer was elected, Mrs. Adelaide Johnston, of Fort Fairfield, our "all around woman," who has served us for several years as assistant secretary and in every other way that her ready tact and kindly spirit could suggest. Her popularity may be judged from the fact that she had every vote cast for treasurer.

The welcome of the first night overflowed into the second, when Hon. R. W. Shaw gave a rousing greeting on behalf of the citizens of Houlton. Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, president of the Boston union, gave one of the best addresses ever heard even at our conventions. The number of young men in the audience was very noticeable, and to them she spoke with great directness and power. Mrs. McLaughlin speaks from the standpoint of both an ideal and practical temperance worker, and appeals equally to the conscience and the will.

Some very nice speeches were made by gentlemen representing the clergy, the press, the bar and the board of trade, and the delegates were quick to applaud every noble sentiment.

At no previous convention have the young women taken so prominent a part. They stand at the head of several important departments, and the last evening was entirely theirs. Devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Lubelle Patrick, of Groveville, secretary of the young woman's branch. The speaker was also an earnest and cultured young woman. Miss Clara Parrish, whose address, though especially for the young people who formed a large part of the audience, was equally enjoyed by their mothers.

Religious services were held Sunday morning in all the churches, and in the jail at 2 p. m. flowers and papers were distributed among the prisoners. There also was a temperance rally of the various Sunday-schools. A procession of children with banners waving sang, "Saloons Must Go." In the evening the church services were omitted and the people came together in a mass-meeting addressed by Mrs. Livermore. An overflow meeting addressed by Miss Parrish and attended by six hundred people was also held in the church. All in all it was a wonderful convention.

NEBRASKA.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

Twenty-one years ago three delegates met in Lincoln, the capital city of Nebraska, and by making the members of the Lincoln union delegates the first convention of the Nebraska W. C. T. U. was held.

The twenty-first convention, held at Beatrice, has just closed. The attendance was not as large as hoped for, nor as large as usual, owing to the hard times. But we had with us three of the delegates to the first convention, several old Crusaders and most of the officers and superintendents of the state, with a good number of earnest, wide-awake delegates, about one hundred in all.

The meetings were held in the beautiful new First Presbyterian church. Addresses of welcome were given by the city attorney, Mr. Pemberton, in the absence of the mayor, Rev. C. S. Dudley for the churches, Mrs. Agnes V. Lester for the union, Mrs. J. H. Starn for the Y's. Mrs. Nellie M. Richardson of Lincoln, responded to these in a most ready and happy manner, winning friends for us at the start. The president's address which followed was most interesting and full of timely suggestions.

Reports of superintendents showed that despite the drouth and money stringency an interest has been maintained and good work done. The treasurer's report, too, bore evidence that while numbers of unions have suspended for the present other unions have increased their membership, and our number has been kept up to that of last year—3,010.

The work of the past year was reviewed by the corresponding secretary and district presidents. For six months relief work engaged the attention of the unions almost exclusively. The presidents of the tenth, eleventh, thirteenth and sixteenth districts gave almost their entire time to receiving and distributing supplies. Their report is most interesting, and in another letter I expect to be able to give some adequate account of the work done. It certainly has been of benefit to the W. C. T. U. in recommending the organization to those who were before little disposed in our favor.

Another cause of rejoicing was the report from the Union Worker, which under the new plan adopted at last state convention has become self-supporting. Mrs. Bunting, the editor, has done an immense amount of work with very little financial return, but arrangements were made to give her some remuneration and still further increase the circulation of the paper by guaranteeing her three thousand bona fide subscribers at twenty-five cents each, or their equivalent. It now remains for unions to use their utmost endeavors to send in large lists of names and keep our state paper up to its present standard of excellence and usefulness.

Crusade evening was very interesting to all. Many old Crusaders were on the platform and each was given a few minutes for reminiscences. The enthusiasm of Crusade days came to us all, and these forerunners of our grand organization were enshrined in our hearts as never before.

Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Bunting gave a pleasant and lively account of their trip across the ocean and of the Lord Mayor's reception.

A Bible reading was given by Mrs. A. Holden Byles, of England. Mrs. Byles is a member of Lady Henry Somerset's executive committee and is spending a year in America, at present residing in Omaha. The Loyal Temperance Legion children came in under the direction of Miss Kerney and Miss Jansen, state and local superintendents of L. T. L. work. Several pieces were sung and spoken very earnestly, and as they declared to us they would "turn their glasses upside down," we have great hopes of "the coming man."

Y night was in charge of Miss Anna Goudy, state superintendent. Three recitations were given, each perfect in its way, by Miss Maude Manzy, of Plattsmouth, Miss Smith, of Omaha, and Miss Ocean Dailey, of University Place. Miss Goudy gave a short address upon the Y work which was listened to with close attention. Miss Goudy speaks readily and very clearly, and always pleases her audience. A wand drill, conducted by Miss Thomas, and an Indian club drill by four of the Beatrice Y's, were a pleasing part of the evening's program.

In order that the anniversary convention might be made a little unusual, the program committee arranged to hold it over Sunday, and on Sunday morning eleven pulpits were filled by women speakers, all from our own state except Mrs. St. John. These services were very satisfactory to the ministers and congregations in all parts of the city, and have made our work and workers much better known. The Y. M. C. A. asked for a speaker at their men's meeting and we gave them Mrs. G. W. Clark, of Omaha. The secretary has expressed himself as delighted with the address.

Mrs. Eugenia St. John preached the anniversary sermon. It was one of the occasions when we rejoice that so many are brought to hear the burning words of truth and righteousness. Mrs. St. John gave us one of her best addresses and it cannot fail to do incalculable good.

On Sunday afternoon was held "a love feast in a Presbyterian church," as it was announced by the pastor, Dr. Countermine, at the morning service. But this was a W. C. T. U. love feast and was along the line of the past, present and future of the W. C. T. U. On this occasion a beautiful anniversary ode, by Mrs. Julia M. Klinck, was read. Its title was, "The Hero, the Martyr and the Woman." It is written in a pleasing strain and is worthy to stand beside more ambitious poems.

All the state officers were reëlected. Delegates to the National Convention are: Mrs. Spurlock, Clarke, Dailey, Cooke, Goff and Brower, with Mrs. A. F. Newman, delegate-at-large, Mrs. M. M. Lantry, alternate. These delegates were also made our delegates to the Purity Congress. Mrs. St. John conducted a parliamentary drill. Her informal talk on social purity will be long remembered. Miss Helena Jansen arranged with the board of education and went with Mrs. St. John to the High School, where she gave a half-hour address upon this theme, with which the young people, and especially the young men, were heard to express themselves as greatly pleased.

Another innovation in our convention program was the parlor meeting held Monday evening in charge of state superintendent of parlor meetings, Mrs. M. M. Pugh, of Omaha.

A short program consisted of excellent music, some account of the World's Convention by Mrs. Walker, and the presentation of a chocolate pot to the union gaining most members by means of the parlor meeting. This was given by Mrs. Pugh and received by Mrs. Gertrude McDowell, in behalf of the Fairbury union.

Mrs. Marshall, of Hastings, then stepped forward, and in a very few words presented the surprised president with a handsome quilt, "every stitch the work of a W. C. T. U. woman," and containing many names of her coworkers. Although surprised, our president is never without words. She expressed her thanks gracefully, and sang a pleasing solo, accompanying herself with her autoharp. The audience were all in a pleasant humor, and formalities were dispensed with as the parlor meeting superintendents formed themselves into a reception committee in the large church parlor and greeted all. A very happy social hour followed.

Tuesday morning finished the business of the convention, and all felt we had had a most profitable and enjoyable season together.

The music for the convention was very satisfactory. Different church choirs took charge each evening, while solos and quartettes made a pleasing variety. We would especially mention the Beatrice Y quartette, four young ladies, who sang for the day meetings, as well as the evening.

Mrs. Flora Cassell, author of "White-Ribbon Vibrations," wrote a short poem for the anniversary evening and a song. Mrs. C. M. Leighton, of Lincoln, also had printed an original poem for the occasion, which was sung to a familiar tune. We had songs galore. Rev. G. W. Crofts, the poet preacher, wrote some verses to a well-known tune for our National song; so, also, did one of our state officers. Poets and musicians abound in our prairie state.

Fremont invited the convention for next year. Omaha asks for the semi-annual executive meeting.

We certainly feel that the work in Nebraska is in a prosperous condition, and the outlook bright. Thus we take courage and go forward.

MASSACHUSETTS.

A GLORIOUS CONVENTION.

Dean Stanley, after his return from America, was asked what was the most interesting place, historical, that he had visited? "Salem," was the reply. The members, guests and friends of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. endorse this opinion very heartily since their recent visit. Possessing as it does the oldest church in America, the oldest graveyard, and many an ancient landmark of special interest; forever memorable as the home of the witches, and never to be forgotten as the birthplace of the old Bay State itself, it is always worth while to go to Salem, even without the distractions of a convention. Seventeen witches were hung in Salem (none were ever burned) and what is known as the "witch house" was built by Roger Williams.

Salem, like Dorchester, has its bell cast by Paul Revere. It has Hawthorne's famous "House of Seven Gables" and the chair in a large drawing-room overlooking the harbor where he wrote his story, "The Grandfather's Chair." It has the little house where Hawthorne was born, the custom house where he found the material for the "Scarlet Letter," and the old desk where he worked. It has some choice specimens of architecture of which the famous MacIntyre was the architect. Is it any wonder that excursions were a part of the program of the convention?

Salem (Essex county) is afflicted with the licensed liquor traffic and so the informing, transforming principles of the W. C. T. U. in its representatives were especially welcome. For three days and nights a temperance gospel in all its ramifications was proclaimed. The Salem Gazette, the best city daily, was on our side and gave good evidence of the same.

There were nearly 300 delegates present—averaging one to a union—300 unions in the state. The events and progress of the year crowded thick and fast in the corresponding secretary's report. The Massachusetts membership is about 11,000—863 honoraries. Multiply these and the work, and the 6,400 meetings of all kinds; multiply or add to, like forces in other states and who can doubt the power and progress of our great organization in all that makes for righteousness.

The treasurer stated the total receipts as $8,793, the expenditures $8,125. Massachusetts has $6,320 on hand toward permanent headquarters. The executive committee submitted a plan, and the convention voted favorably, of assessment of the membership, fifty cents per capita for the expenses of state work.

The president's address discussed such themes as government, including the progress and enlargement of the work of women; the franchise reform; the Norwegian system, or any system of compromise with the liquor traffic; the duty of the favored classes to those less fortunate, etc. (See Annual Minutes).

Perhaps the freshest of department reports was that of Mrs. Mary G. Stuckenberg, superintendent on the "Relation of Temperance to Labor"; also on the same subject, an address by Miss Mary A. Nason of Haverhill, including an earnest, heartfelt plea for the stewardship of humanity; "It is hard to tell whether more are made intemperate by poverty or poor by intemperance;" Mrs. Stuckenberg exclaimed, "Why should we have slums? There are none in Berlin." Why not have parks and shade trees and all sweet, educational influences among the homes of the poor and needy?

The devotional hour each day was led by women who are pastors in Massachusetts, the Rev. Sarah A. Dixon, Barnstable, Rev. Amelia A. Frost, Littleton, Rev. Mabel L. MacCoy, Mansfield. They demonstrated their high calling in Christ Jesus, bringing spiritual refreshment and blessing to the waiting people.

The Young Woman's Branch is fortunate in its general secretary, Caroline M. Caswell. She marshals her forces and so presents them as to greatly emphasize the power and profit of work among the young. She was reinforced this year by the presence of, and an address from, Miss Clara Parrish, National organizer. Wellesley and Holyoke and Northfield are represented in the Somerset Y's; five organizations have been formed in other states through the influence of the Northfield young women. Fitchburg Y has one hundred members; Wellesley College Y's a Bible training class. Many points of interest might be added from cities and towns about these young and more enthusiastic recruits.

The closing address of the convention was given Thursday evening by Miss E. U. Yates, National franchise lecturer. This was so heartily received that there were many applications for further service from Miss Yates in the referendum campaign. She will take part in the canvass, with many others, and although "an enemy did it," we expect a victory for women.

The first telegram was sent to the precious National president whose safe arrival to these shores had just been announced. "To Frances E. Willard: For so He bringeth us to the desired haven. God be thanked!" Time and space forbid to tell of other interesting proceedings; the address of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; the memorial hour; the fraternal delegates; the letters and all the impromptu make-up of an annual meeting. It was one of the best of conventions and as typical for humanity as the meeting held in the same church (tabernacle) early in the century when the first missionaries were ordained—Judson, Newell, Nott, Rice and Hall.

Mrs. Steele, of Auburndale, one of the original Crusaders, widely known and loved, has passed on to join the heavenly host.

The year has brought blessing and trial, success and defeat, but out of it all the Massachusetts union sings the same old song:

"Onward, Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus
Going on before."

Mrs. Fessenden, president, looks forward to special work soon, for an amendment for constitutional prohibition, and the idea and purpose was emphasized in strong words by Rev. Arthur Little, of Dorchester, at the convention.

And so I might linger over details, but must hasten to the aftermath, an epoch in the life and history of American women, the

UNVEILING OF THE BUST OF MARY A. LIVERMORE.

Friday morning, October 4, at 11 o'clock, at 171 Tremont street, headquarters of the Massachusetts union, returning delegates and friends assembled for the ceremony so long anticipated. Anne Whitney, the sculptor, was there, and many old, lifelong friends of Mrs. Livermore, besides many of the coterie who were stand-bys during her ten years official administration as president. Henry Blackwell said, "It was the privilege of reformers to be associated with men and women so honored as to be a continual inspiration." The life and work of Mary A. Livermore stand for something higher than for temperance and social purity and the like—it stands for human liberty.

Mrs. Fessenden, through whose efforts this deserved tribute was paid, spoke earnest, appreciative words in behalf of the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. V. Trask Hill, special ones (presenting flowers) for the old-time workers. Mrs. Livermore, standing beside her marble image, responded for herself her appreciation of the honor conferred. She had simply "done what she could." Her life had been one long consecration for the uplift of womankind. At seventeen, with five other girls, she knocked at Harvard College and President Quincy's obdurate heart. Being refused, the girls adjourned to the famous Copp's burying ground, and, joining hands round one of the graves, promised never to forget that day, and from that hour she had worked steadily onward and up. "The way ahead is more attractive, and there is no looking back. 'It is better further on,'" she said, "and I shall be more alive."

DELAWARE.

"BRINGING IN THE SHEAVES."

The delegates of the W. C. T. U. of Delaware arrived in Milford on Wednesday, October 2, and were met by the reception committee and taken to the M. E. church, where the sixteenth annual convention was held.

The devotional exercises of the morning session were conducted by Mrs. Roberta Matlack, state superintendent of evangelistic work. After the roll-call the delegates were assigned to their respective homes. In the afternoon the session was opened by singing and prayer. After appointing the committees on credentials, resolutions, courtesies, literature and finance, the address of welcome was most cordially given by Miss Georgia Pierce, of Milford. The response was by Mrs. A. G. Quigley, of Newport. Mrs. Elma Pyle, corresponding secretary of the state, gave her review of the year's work, which showed quite a growth in W. C. T. U. interest.

Our state president, Miss Margaret Hilles, varied her custom of giving a formal address by making "remarks." They took the coloring of hints and helps for work among the unions for the ensuing year, not forgetting commendation for the good work already done. She said we should ask ourselves why we are white-ribboners, and surely if the questioning is honest enough, we will work gladly, willingly, eagerly and lovingly. As Phillips Brooks said: "It may be said that no man does his work perfectly who does not do it gladly."

The vice-presidents of the three counties, Mrs. Cranston, of New Castle, Mrs. Kate Smithers, of Kent, Mrs. Annie E. Fisher, of Sussex, submitted reports of their respective counties, and it was found that the growth had been most encouraging. Mrs. Hattie Phelps, formerly an ardent worker in our ranks and state treasurer for several years, but now of Pennsylvania, was introduced to the convention. She made a few felicitous remarks and was most cordially received.

The evening services consisted of greetings from pastors of the Milford Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian and Baptist churches, and from the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League societies. Responses were made by members of the convention. Thursday morning was given largely to reports of superintendents. Miss S. E. Rawlins' report of the state's finances showed that the unions had not been behind in money matters. Miss M. H. Eastburn gave the work of the L. T. L. She is quite an enthusiast in her work, and her report was full of interest, showing growth in many places.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan, gave a parliamentary drill which incited many workers to better form in business meetings. Mrs. Ella Boole, of Staten Island, gave a most inspiring Bible reading on the two words, "Like Him," selecting passages of Scripture showing the human side of Christ while on earth in poverty, loneliness and homelessness, and urging our imitation of Him in every way.

The Thursday afternoon session was filled with continued reports of department work and with the memorial service. During the year eighteen members of our state army have been translated. This service was interspersed with tender songs.

On Thursday evening Mrs. Boole lectured to an interested and interesting audience.

On Friday morning the business session was continued. Mrs. Wolcott's report on legislation showed that she had in no wise been idle during the late session of our "notorious" legislature, but that in many cases her pleas had been unavailing.

The following officers were elected or re-elected: President, Miss Margaret Hilles; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Elma Pyle; recording secretary, Mrs. M. H. Green; treasurer, Miss S. E. Rawlins. The following delegates to the National Convention were elected: New Castle county, Mrs. M. S. Cranston; Kent county, Mrs. Annie Wharton; Sussex county, Mrs. Annie Carey.

In the evening Mrs. Benjamin gave an address and after the adoption of the usual courteous resolutions, the sixteenth annual session of the W. C. T. U. of Delaware adjourned.

UNION NEWS.

Newport union has been up and doing of late. On September 10, they had a harvest home which was successful and entertaining. Rev. Alpheus Mowbray and Mrs. Boole were the speakers. The dinner was a bountiful and excellent one and given, principally, by the people of the neighborhood. Though the expenses were heavy in other ways they realized about fifty dollars. On September 23, they celebrated Mrs. Leavitt's birthday anniversary. She was the means by which they were organized as a union on February 4, 1882. Starting with but five members they struggled along until 1885, when Miss Henrietta Moore, after a stirring address, caused six others to join. Now they have forty members with the prospect of more this autumn.

Not long before our state convention there was a meeting of the W. C. T. U. of Smyrna, held at the home of Mrs. Kate E. Smithers. A great deal of the interest in the meeting was caused by the presence of Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston, and of her participation in the deliberations. She gave an earnest Bible exposition and many bright ideas upon juvenile work.

The meeting was also an occasion of interest because of the annual election of superintendents and in reports of the year's work. Mrs. Adam Stengle reported Sunday-school work; Mrs. J. E. Williams, scientific temperance instruction in public schools; Mrs. Elizabeth Pennewill, evangelistic work. These ladies were reëlected and the follow-

SOUTH DAKOTA.

YEARLY CONFERENCE.

The seventh annual convention of the South Dakota Woman's Christian Temperance Union opened at Pierre, September 13, and continued four days. Since this proud young city was declared the capital of the state, many state organizations have held their yearly meetings here, but none has exceeded this in leaving behind it pleasant reminiscences of the gracious body composing its membership nor a deeper impression upon our citizens of the true nobility of an unselfish cause.

The convention assembled in the Hall of Representatives in the state house, and the very gavel that called to order the legislature that decreed that our prohibitory law should again run the gauntlet of a popular vote was used to call to action the staunch defenders of that law.

The president, in her address, stated that reliable legal advisers were of the opinion that if a proper case were brought before the supreme court of this state it would be found that the proceedings of the legislature resubmitting the question were unconstitutional and void. It is plainly required by the constitution that an amendment must be proposed in either house; that it must be agreed to by a majority vote in each house, and after being so agreed to it must be entered upon their respective journals with the yeas and nays by which it was agreed to, and then submitted to a vote of the people. Mrs. Cranmer explained that what the legislature really did was simply to adopt a resolution to take the sense of the voters as to whether a certain article of the constitution shall be repealed, and called attention to the fact that there is no provision by which the constitution or any part thereof may be "repealed." It may be stated here that the convention at a later session made an appropriation of fifty dollars to assist in a test case. In her address the president also spoke of the work that had been done in the legislature last winter for equal suffrage, and said that a great advance in popular favor had been made for that cause by the consequent agitation of the subject.

Although our leader has carried on these legislative battles, assisted by Anna R. Simmons, traveled over ten thousand miles, delivered over sixty addresses and attended to a voluminous correspondence during the year, she regretted that she had not been able to do more because of impaired health, and spoke with enthusiasm of the Battle Creek Sanitarium where she was obliged to remain for three months previous to issuing the call for this convention.

Knowing Mrs. Kellogg as the associate National superintendent of social purity work, the members of the union were glad to hear directly from Mrs. Cranmer of the great sanitarium of which her husband, Dr. Kellogg, is the head. Many aids to good health were referred to in an informal talk and we all felt that our president was turning what she had learned in her affliction into a blessing for others. As a practical lesson in hygiene sample packages of the sanitarium foods were presented to each of the delegates.

The memorial services held Saturday morning for the white ribbon comrades who have preceded us a short time into the new life, were fittingly conducted by our well beloved Mrs. Anna R. Simmons.

Many excellent reports and papers were read. One of the best was that of Mrs. Millikin, state superintendent of Demorest contests, from which we learned that one hundred and forty-two silver medals, twelve gold medals and two grand gold medals have this year been distributed, and the total receipts from contest work amounts to $1,225. One evening of the convention was given to a grand gold medal contest. Mr. J. Lenox Ward, of Canastota, won the medal, which was presented by Mrs. Marion Baxter, of Chicago. Mrs. Baxter was with us during the convention, and on Sunday evening made an address, one of the immediate effects of which was the putting of $150 into the state treasury. Her burning words upon the relation of the liquor traffic to poverty and crime set the officers of the state house to looking up statistics.

A well written and well read paper was given by Mrs. Cecilia Winnette upon juvenile work. One line of work in which the children have engaged is that of filling Temple Wheels.

Mrs. Harza being absent, Mrs. Cochrane read the report on the work done for the Temple, and also a letter from Mrs. Harza in which it was announced that the names of Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer and Mrs. Anna R. Simmons were to be placed upon tablets in Willard Hall by their grateful constituency, there to abide in loving remembrance of their faithful services.

Mrs. Cochrane's report of the business of the White Ribbon Journal disclosed the fact that the actual expenditure in maintaining the paper has equaled the money received, and loyal, generous-hearted Mrs. Cochrane has given her work for nothing. Arrangements were made by which the Journal will hereafter be published at Rapid City, from the office of The Rapid City Journal, under the able editorship of Mrs. Alice Gossage.

Mr. Sherrard, of the Sioux Falls Orphans' Home, was introduced and spoke earnestly in behalf of the friendless children committed to his care, asking the help of the women in placing them in good private homes. He has provided for nearly three hundred children in this way.

The report upon Clarence Hall, the proposed state headquarters established upon the Chautauqua grounds, at Lake Madison, was given by Mrs. Emma P. Myers, and showed that institution to be a good investment in which thirty-five shares remain unsold. Any person or union having the money will do well to take one or more shares at ten dollars each.

Mrs. Myers' report as corresponding secretary, showed that the school of methods at Chautauqua had been very successful. An encouraging report of the many gospel temperance meetings held was given, and the distribution of temperance literature and the importance of mothers' meetings were urged. The largest amount paid to the state came from Vermillion, while the largest local union is that of Rapid City. The banner for greatest increase of membership went to the second district, and was presented to that district through Mrs. Gossage, who responded in a spirited speech. All were glad to have our sister from the Black Hills with us.

Mrs. Blackman, of Madison, gave a paper upon mothers' meetings containing much valuable suggestion and an attractive list of topics for discussion. She advised the publication of the prepared programs occasionally as a means of interesting the public in these meetings.

A delightful little poem entitled, "Weighing the Baby," composed by Mrs. H. E. Underwood, of Northville, was, by request, read by the author. It is evident that the temperance workers of South Dakota are gifted with much talent. Several of the songs sung were the original productions of Rev. M. Pyle, of Pierre. The song entitled "Hold up the Light," by Mrs. Cranmer, was adopted as the state song to be sung at the coming Convention at Baltimore.

A call was made for all those who were in attendance at the inception of the work at Chamberlain ten years ago to come forward and be presented to the convention. Mrs. Myers, Mrs. Spears, Mrs. Pickler and Miss Swartz took places upon the platform and were greeted with the Chautauqua salute accompanied by a smile on the lip and a tear in the eye of many an appreciative woman before them. It was with sorrow that the announcement was received from Miss Swartz that she could no longer serve the union as state superintendent of evangelistic work, a position she has nobly filled for ten years.

When the time came for the election of officers, Mrs. Cranmer, who has been state president for three years, said that the condition of her health would not permit her to be a candidate. Her devoted followers, however, reëlected her by a unanimous vote. Mrs. Cranmer thanked the convention for this evidence of their confidence but declined the office. As a token of their love and continued loyalty the convention then elected Mrs. Cranmer honorary president.

Mrs. Emma P. Myers, who has so long served as corresponding secretary, was reelected, but insisted on withdrawing her name from before the convention for any position on the official board which was assented to with reluctance. Mrs. Eugene Steere, state treasurer, was also determined to hold office no longer; but when Mrs. Maud Carter, of Pierre, was elected treasurer and at once resigned, Mrs. Steere was prevailed upon to accept a reëlection for another year.

Mrs. Lulu Ramsey, of Woonsocket, was elected president and accepted the office in a brief, graceful, earnest speech which won for her the hearty allegiance of all present. Mrs. Anna R. Simmons, of Huron, whose report as vice-president showed much solid, hard work done for the union, was enthusiastically reëlected. Mrs. M. I. Kalder, of Woonsocket, was the choice of the convention for corresponding secretary. Miss Kara Smart, of Sioux Falls, was elected recording secretary to succeed her mother, Mrs. Ruby J. Smart, who recently removed to Boston and who will be greatly missed.

Mrs. Cranmer kindly donated $125 due her on salary to the state treasury as a token of love to the union.

The White Cross and White Shield department was reported by its superintendent, Mrs. Stevens, of Pierre. The practical outcome of Mrs. Stevens' efforts has been the organization of a league for the purpose of establishing a rescue home for fallen women. The ladies of Pierre, under the leadership of Mrs. Estabrook, recently issued a woman's edition of the Daily Capital, the proceeds of which were donated to this charity, and with the handsome subscription of other Pierre citizens, the home will be founded and supported this year by the appropriation of $200 made by the union in confident expectation that it will soon be made a state institution.

A paper by Mrs. Underwood upon social purity won sincere applause and was ordered published. Among other instructive papers must be mentioned that of Mrs. Eva Myers, entitled, "What Shall we do to Retain Prohibition?" and one by Mrs. Sheldon upon prison and jail work.

Jane R. Breeden,
Recording Secretary, Pierre.

NORTH DAKOTA.

CROWN OF THE YEAR'S WORK.

The sixth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of North Dakota convened at Hillsboro, September 13 to 16, with one hundred and five delegates present besides a large number of visitors, all of whom were royally entertained by the large-hearted, hospitable people of this pleasant little town, the very name of which calls forth many sacred memories and associations to all white-ribboners. Our program was an unusually fine one, and from beginning to end was replete with good things and pleasant surprises.

The convention was held in the opera hall which was tastefully decorated with flags, banners and flowers. The platform was made homelike and inviting with pretty carpet, beautiful upholstery and floral decorations.

At an early hour Friday morning the convention opened with consecration services. The gavel used by our state president, Miss Preston, was made from wood taken from the old Crusade church in Hillsboro, Ohio.

The reports of state officers, county and district presidents spoke of a steady advance along the many lines of work, not only encouraging but flattering. We have gained in our local unions 434 active members and over 500 Loyal Temperance Legioners, all of whom are keeping time in their onward march to "Saloons, Saloons, Saloons Must Go." There has been raised during the year $1,124.59 for general work. This does not include any spent in local work nor the $500 and over secured in pledges for enforcement.

During the pledge pastime over nine hundred dollars was pledged for the coming year, three hundred of this being for a building fund for our Florence Crittenton Home, toward helping to build a laundry, thus giving the inmates employment, and rendering the Home, in time, self-supporting. The report of the committee was very encouraging. Mrs. H. L. Campbell, president of the Home Board, gave a history of the Home, and Mrs. Jennie A. Benedict, secretary, followed with a report of the work and the needs of the Home. Mrs. Benedict's report showed most excellently the noble work that our women are doing in this department of work.

Friday evening came the welcomes by Mr. Halland, in behalf of the city, Rev. Mr. Pringle, in behalf of the churches, and Mrs. Della S. Hyde, in behalf of the local union, and the response by Mrs. Mattie Meacham, all of which were bright, spirited, scholarly and entertaining.

The president's annual address was unusually interesting. Among the many good things she said, and deserving special mention was, the "new woman is at least 2,700 years old, and the reason so much is said of her now is because she is getting so numerous."

Saturday afternoon, Governor Allin being present, he was presented to the convention and was greeted with the Chautauqua salute. Miss Preston, in presenting him, remarked that it was not every state that could boast of a governor who was both a Prohibitionist and an equal suffragist.

Saturday evening was "honoraries' evening," the subject under discussion being equal suffrage. Governor Allin and ex-Governors Shertridge, Burke and Miller, also Hon. Gill and Walter Muir were invited to be present and deliver short speeches. Ex-Governor Shertridge was ill and unable to be present. Speaker Gill telegraphed his regrets and expressed a hope for temperance enforcement and equal suffrage. The other gentlemen also sent regrets with kindly words and sympathy. Governor

Allin gave a short address expressive of his faith in temperance and the right of woman to franchise. A rising vote of thanks was tendered him.

Hon. W. G. Hubbard also spoke shortly and to the point in favor of equal suffrage. Hon. Chas. A. Pollock gave a short talk upon enforcement, and superintendent Emma Bates read a paper upon "Temperance Instruction in our Public Schools." Mrs. Florence Pottle gave a rendition of a chapter from "The Fool's Errand." It was a fine effort and was greatly appreciated by the audience.

Sunday morning the churches were all closed and there assembled in the hall a large audience to hear the annual sermon delivered by our gifted state evangelist, Miss Louise Crummy, who took for her text "The Fruit of the Spirit is Love." Sabbath afternoon the children's mass-meeting conducted by Mrs. Pottle, superintendent of juvenile work, called out not only a large number of small children, but grown up children as well, all of whom were greatly enthused.

In the evening the hall was filled to overflowing with earnest people intent upon hearing Rev. W. G. Hubbard, whose theme was "Higher Life for Nations." Mr. Hubbard is president of the Peace Association of the Friends of America. He held his audience by his common sense arguments in opposition to war and standing armies, spiced here and there with witticisms and laughable pleasantries. In comparing the life of different nations and countries he found in every case where women were respected and honored, there was to be found the highest civilization.

An able paper was read by Mrs. May Hewitt Tousley, on the "Legal Status of Women in North Dakota." Mrs. Tousley is a bright, promising woman, and the paper so ably edited by her speaks for itself. The convention unanimously adopted it as our state organ for the next year, and we feel assured of its success.

Mrs. Slater also read a fine paper upon "Footprints of the W. C. T. U." The convention showed their appreciation of their president by appropriating a certain allowance of money to be used for an assistant when most needed.

The memorial exercises were conducted in a very impressive manner by Mrs. Alice Phelps, president of Walsh county. A special memorial was held for our promoted comrade, Dr. Anna S. Hill, of Fargo, who left us only three days before the opening of the convention. Her death was unexpected to most of us, but we rejoice in the fact that it was a most triumphant one. Conscientious and untiring in all good works she had made for herself many warm friends, not only in Fargo, where she lived so many years, but among the white ribbon sisters all over the state.

The gold medal contest Monday evening was the crowning event of the most enthusiastic and most successful convention in the history of our state. Master Lewy Jackson, of Langdon, carried off the medal amid the applause of an enthusiastic audience, he being the only boy among the five contestants.

Hunter, Cass county, won the banner for the largest per cent of increase in membership, and the Wahpeton Y's carried their banner home again for another year.

Mrs. Hattie K. Pierson, secretary of Young Woman's Branch, was unanimously re-elected for the next year. She was unable to be present, owing to poor health, much to the regret of all.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of the old officers, with the exception of treasurer. Mrs. Beecher declining to accept it again, Mrs. Barbara Halcrow Wylie, the live president of the Drayton Y's, was unanimously elected. The convention gave a rising vote of thanks to our retiring treasurer for faithful and efficient services.

From beginning to end most excellent music was rendered by the sweet singers of Hillsboro; also by Miss Myrtle Nesmith, of the Valley City Normal, Mrs. J. O. Smith, of Casselton, and Miss Myrtle Reed, of Amenia.

Since the close of the convention the executive committee have appointed Mrs. Tousley as Y organizer.

News in a Nutshell.

MRS. ESTHER MCNIEL, the veteran Crusader, eighty-three years old, was made a life delegate of the New York state convention.

A NEW union at Leavittsburgh, numbering twenty-three paid up members, is the latest report from Miss C. S. Burnett, working in Ohio. An L. T. L. was also arranged for and superintendents elected for ten departments. Miss Burnett has been elected by her district as delegate to the National Convention in Baltimore.

A SEPARATE and artistic program was issued by the ninth district W. C. T. U. for the grand gold medal suffrage contest given in connection with their nineteenth annual convention at Lake City, Mich.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH, the well-known colored evangelist, is considering the establishment of an Industrial Home for colored orphan children. Her great heart is stirred to its depths by the needs of her people and she believes that if the children are trained to be intelligent workers many of the phases of the negro problem will be solved.

EVERY state and territorial W. C. T. U. is authorized by the American Temperance University of Harriman, Tenn., to send to it two students per year free of tuition. The same privilege is conferred upon the Good Templars. It is the earnest wish of the institution that the officers of said organizations should at their earliest convenience make the appointments.

THAT a young woman may be a successful pastor has been demonstrated in the ministry of Rev. Mary Moreland, ordained as the pastor of the First Congregational church, Wyanet, Ill., which she served long and faithfully. Not only in Wyanet, but in towns round about, her services at weddings and funerals were greatly in demand. She is now pastor of the Union Congregational church at McLean.

A COURSE of twenty-seven lectures in Lancaster county, Pa., has just been completed by Mrs. L. E. Bailey. She organized two new unions, and added fifty-seven new members. That county invites her to return for another month. Mrs. Bailey will spend the month of October in New Jersey, and November in Queens county, Long Island, N. Y. She will bring to the National Convention her sheaves of five hundred new members this year.

THE dauntless president of the W. C. T. U. in Texas is a thoroughly acclimatized Southern woman of Northern birth. She is a native of Wisconsin; was educated in Genesee Seminary, Lima, N. Y., where she took the valedictory in 1871. Her life as a teacher has been spent in Florida, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Texas. She has now lived and worked for fifteen years in Texas. These facts are brief and pointed and carry with them materials for a most interesting philosophical equation concerning the work and ways of progressive women in the United States.

SOME changes were made in superintendents at the Nebraska state convention. The department of health and heredity, left vacant by the death of Mrs. Battles, was given to Mrs. Dr. Martin, of Fremont. Mrs. Claflin, of the Sunday-school work, resigned and Mrs. J. R. Craig of Beatrice was put in her place. Of the new department of Christian citizenship, Mrs. O. H. Jones of Hastings was made superintendent; of Temperance Temple, Mrs. Emma Wellman of York, in place of Mrs. Northup, resigned; of Temperance Hospital, Mrs. Flora Cassell, Hastings; of hygienic cooking, Mrs. Ida E. Davies, Nebraska City.

IN his recent address at Clyde, O., Hon. G. R. Malone, a prohibition orator of Michigan, spoke earnest words of commendation for our organization, part of which follows: "Were I a resident of Ohio I should be more proud of this organization than of any other society which honors this great state. I should rejoice that I could fairly claim this state as the birthplace of one of the greatest Christian organizations of the world, an organization which has already sent at least six missionaries round the world to girt the very earth with their glorious emblem of white ribbon, so that wherever the Holy Bible has gone, wherever the Christian religion has gone, there has gone with it, side by side, as a mighty factor in the purification and salvation of the world, that greatest of all non-sectarian Christian organizations, the W. C. T. U."

AN indefatigable Virginia worker, Mrs. Mary W. E. Newton, has spent six months of the past year visiting unions and organizing in new fields. During that time she has delivered ninety-one public addresses, held twelve parlor meetings, organized twenty-five W's, five Y unions and five L. T. L's and secured the names of seven hundred and fifty new members. She reports that the work among the unions is often kept up by the undaunted few "yet good results are shown at the close of the year." Following her address before an Episcopal congregation, the rector, at whose invitation she was present, made a short, ringing speech of indorsement, and fifty-five names were secured for membership. At the present time nearly every respectable woman in the neighborhood is wearing the white ribbon. This organizer's achievements are encouragement to others of equal faith to keep up the good work in the sunny Southland.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Avenue, Chicago.

The following testimony from one of the most eminent members of the regular staff of physicians, given in a public address before the last class of graduates of the training school, is a high compliment to the work of education which the hospital is doing among the medical profession. Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson said in the address referred to: "I had always supposed I was a temperance woman; I never used alcohol myself and never gave it except in cases of dire necessity. I had always been opposed to its administration in chronic cases, but I felt free to use it in acute cases, when the patient was bordering on collapse. I have learned now, however, how thoroughly we can meet exigencies of all kinds without the use of alcohol in any form, and that we have at our command remedies that are better. Thus, I may say to-night I am indebted to the National Temperance Hospital for a new view of therapeutics, and in accepting a position on the staff I have received fully as much as I have given."

While we place this work of education as first in importance, and the principal reason for the existence of the National Temperance Hospital, growing out of it, and incidental to it, is the relief and cure of the patients who are here treated.

The number of patients treated the past year were 151, of whom have been free patients, a state superintendent of L. T. L. work, two National organizers, a district president. A number of other white ribbon women are among those who have received rest and treatment within the past few months.

Appreciative and commendatory letters are often received which come as cheering recompense to those who are laboring to make such expressions of approval possible.

One patient writes: "I leave here to-day, and would like to express my heartfelt thanks for the kindness extended to me through this excellent hospital. I am glad I came here to see for myself the appointments of this home, for home it is, not a mere hospital."

A San Diego woman who was pestered, as many people are, by other folks' chickens scratching up her flower bed and littering her yard, hit upon a novel scheme for conveying a gentle hint to her neighbors. She tied a lot of small cards with strong thread to big kernels of corn, and wrote on the cards, "Please keep your chickens at home." The chickens ate the corn, and carried the message to their owners in a fashion that was startling and effective.

An Irishman and a Frenchman were one day having a dispute over the nationality of a friend of theirs. "I say," said the Frenchman, "that if he was born in France, he is a Frenchman." "Well," said Pat, "if a cat should have kittens in the oven, would you call them biscuits?"

Little Harry, a bright three-year-old, a regular wide-awake, made up of fun and comicalities, occasionally astonishes his friends. A few evenings ago, when the stars were exceedingly brilliant and sparkling like so many diamonds, Harry's mother took him in her arms and walked to the door. While there she called his attention to the stars, and endeavored to impress upon his childish mind a simple lesson respecting them. Harry listened attentively, gazed long and earnestly, then suddenly exclaimed, "Mamma, I see the stars, where's the stripes?"

Attention has been called to the fact that Freligh's Tonic advertised in another column of this paper, besides being one of the best preparations known for exhausted conditions of the brain and nerve power characterized by loss of memory, etc., at the same time does not engender a taste for anodynes and spirituous liquors, but on the contrary produces a distaste for them.

Home Hints.

Lemon Honey: Two whole lemons grated. Two cups of sugar, one half-cup of butter, five eggs. Boil five minutes.

Apple meringue: Boil very tart apples, after having pared and cored them; rub the pulp through a colander and sweeten to taste. To a pint of the pulp stir in lightly the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Flavor with the juice and grated rind of one lemon. Serve cold with cream.

The use of tea leaves for laying the dust when sweeping carpets is an old time custom and a good one unless the carpets are of delicate coloring, when it will stain them. A better way is to frequently dip the broom into water in which there is a little ammonia, shaking it well and sweeping lightly. This will prevent the dust from rising and at the same time brighten the carpet.

When your catsup is almost ready for bottling, put your supply of corks into hot water, that they may get soft. Fill the bottles, press the corks in as far as possible, then cut them off almost level with the top of the bottle. Have ready a cup of melted sealing wax, (there is a quality on purpose for this use) into which dip the neck of the bottles sufficiently to perfectly seal them.

For a delicious peach dessert soak one-half cupful of gelatine, a cup of sugar, a dozen halves from a can of peaches, with a little of the peach liquor, for one hour. Pour on a cup of boiling water and pass it all through a strainer, then stir over the fire until the gelatine is all dissolved. Set aside to cool. Whip a cup of rich cream until very light, add a pinch of salt and when the gelatine and peach mixture is cool enough to congeal stir the cream in quickly, one spoonful at a time. Turn into a mould, wet in cold water and set in cold place to stiffen.

It is most economical to buy laundry soap by the box and let it get well dried before using.

A pretty and inexpensive whisk broom holder consists of two circles of pasteboard, about the size of a saucer, covered with some pretty art silk. The circles are fastened together at the sides and ribbon strings are put on to hang up the holder. Or, if more elaboration is required, make the outside piece of each round of white linen, on which should be embroidered a Dresden china design in silk of a delicate shade, or there may be a Marie Antoinette ribbon design in gold color. Each piece should then be lined with silk matching the leading shade in the embroidery; then the holder should be finished in the manner described above. These holders are easily made, are very pretty, and the design is the newest of any that I have seen.—The Golden Rule.

Celery is invaluable as a food for those suffering from any form of rheumatism, for diseases of the nerves and nervous dyspepsia. So says The Housekeeper. From the same source we give this quotation: "Tea," said a noted Chinaman more than a thousand years ago, "tempers the spirits, harmonizes the mind, dispels lassitude, relieves fatigue, awakens thought and prevents drowsiness, lightens and refreshes the body and clears the perceptive faculty." Tea acts at once on the nervous system, and some nervous invalids cannot drink it with impunity. It always allays bilious headache, and causes a feeling of exhilaration.

A delicious chicken salad is this: Cut one cup of cold cooked chicken or turkey into third-inch dice, and one cup of celery into thin slices. Put the whites of three hard-boiled eggs through a potato vicer, and then the yolks in the same way. With a silver knife pare and cut into pieces about the same size as the bits of chicken enough mildly acid apple to fill a cup. Mix all together quickly, and season slightly with salt and pepper. A cup of mayonnaise is to be used, of which add enough now to moisten the mixture. Put the rest of the mayonnaise into a small cup in the center of a platter or round shallow dish, and bank the salad around it. Cut an orange in halves across the carpels. Place one-half the orange over the cup of dressing, and decorate the edge with the rest of the orange, cut in quarters, and some sprigs of parsley.

Publisher's Notes

All who have ever seen or listened to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge will remember the grief with which they heard the announcement of her sudden death in Chicago, last October, while in the very midst of her busy labors for temperance and for humanity. And now her hosts of friends will eagerly welcome this memorial volume, written by her friend and pastor of twenty years, Rev. A. M. Hills, who knew her not only in her public life, but in her religious life, and in the sanctities of home and church and intimate friendship. His portraiture reveals a woman of singularly sweet spirit, strong intellect, firm convictions and absolute courage in carrying them out; a woman of culture and refinement and courtesy; a most womanly woman, even if she did possess a man's power of logic, of argument, public speaking and of statesmanship. She was called the "statesman of the W. C. T. U.," and she well deserved the name. She was superintendent of petitions and legislation; six years president of the Ohio union; seventeen years recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U.; corresponding secretary of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and performed all these duties with distinguished success. Not only this, but she often supplied pulpits, preaching gospel sermons of great and convincing power, and winning many to the better life. With-al she was modest, seeking to hide rather than to parade her doings, and it was by her works that she was known. Her home duties were most beautifully performed, and it was only after her children were all grown, and she was, indeed, a grandmother, that her more public life began, but the home fires were always kept burning bright in her heart, and her husband always stood back of her for her comfort and support. Her life was one hid with Christ in God, and this was the secret of her success. All of her great gifts and graces were consecrated to His service, and He blessed the offering, and used it for the good of her fellow men. She was so much a part of the great woman's temperance movement that the story of her life is almost the history as well of the W. C. T. U. The book will be found of exceeding interest. ### BIBLE READING FOR NOVEMBER.

Mary in Cana.

BY MRS. JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

White-ribboners do not need to be told that this reading contains a rich spiritual feast, for all know Mrs. Willing, and many have been helped upward by her Bible studies, and by her own firm grasp upon the Rock of Ages. We cannot refrain from giving our readers a foretaste: "The miracle at Cana was only the marvel He had been working every summer since creation's dawn, hanging clusters on vines and filling grapes with rich, healthful, living juice. No death, no fermentation, no decay—nothing that could lead to excess or ruin could come from the hand of Him who was the Life." The chief lesson to W. C. T. U. women, however, in "Mary in Cana" is the "omnipotence that lies within reach of our own obedient trust."

Price, 1 copy per year, 12c.; 10 copies to one address, $1.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR NOVEMBER.

In response to a pressing demand we reprint for next month Mrs. Helen G. Rice's Responsive Reading on the work of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

This has proved so helpful in the past that L. T. L. workers cannot get along without it, and we are constantly receiving orders, which, as the supply is exhausted, we are unable to fill. We shall issue a specially large edition of this valuable reading, to be ready by November 1.

Price, 1 copy per year, 10c.; 13 copies to one address, $1.

The Daily Union Signal will not be published at Convention this year, but in our regular Convention number to be issued November 7, you will find a full report of each day's proceedings with the wit and wisdom of the five days' sessions. Price per hundred $2.50. Single copies five cts.

We are registering orders now for this special number.

The Young Crusader is one of the brightest and best edited children's temperance papers published. Should be in every Sunday-school in the land. Send for sample copy. Price per year, 25 cents; in clubs of ten or more, 20 cts; in clubs of fifty or more, 12 cents. Sample packages for distribution, 100 to one address, $1. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

To newly appointed superintendents of literature: If you will send to us notification of your appointment signed by the President or Secretary of your union, we will promptly send stickers and other credentials. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

Three little white leatherette booklets by Anthony W. Thorold, that are full of sweet, sound philosophy, are "On The Loss of Friends," "On Children," and "On Being Ill." With the philosophy is kindly counsel that may well be taken to heart.

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York. Price, each 25 cents.

The Song of Hiawatha. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, with illustrations from designs by Frederic Remington. The beautiful song that will charm young and old by its mournful, rarely sweet cadence for unnumbered decades, is well adorned in this new book-dress of fine paper and clear type, enriched by the exquisite illustrations from Mr. Remington's artist-hand. A most charming gift for holiday times.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York. Price, $2.00.

Cornish Stories. By Mark Guy Pearse, author of "Dan'el Quonn and His Religious Notions."

All who have read "Dan'el Quonn" are prepared for the quaintness of these stories, —quaint and weird, touching and laughable, even as the people of Cornwall—the "common" people—have a picturesqueness with their exterior roughness that makes a pleasing combination to the student of human nature.

Hunt & Eaton, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York. Price 70 cts.

Katharine's Yesterday. By Grace Livingston Hill. A Christian Endeavor badge in gold, decorating the attractive cover of this volume prepares one for the wholesome, helpful stories between the covers, —stories of Christian faith and works. Christian Endeavor literature is growing, —may it speedily crowd out from the shelves of the Sunday-school libraries the books that have little or none of Christian utterance in them.

Lothrop Publishing Co., Boston. Price $1.50.

The Wise Woman is one of Clara Louise Burnham's taking stories of social life. This wise woman made society serve her instead of serving society, though one not in the secret never suspected her of such "schemes." She recognized worth of character, the true aristocracy, even when its hands were soiled by the endeavor to earn the daily bread and salt necessary to life; she recognized also that society's smile was something that this aristocracy of character might do without but would be benefited by, so the Wise Woman takes the reins in her cunning grasp and directs affairs so that her two protégés—a sister and brother—become leading factors in a circle that had frowned upon them, much to the "circle's" private but unacknowledged surprise. This is, however, but one of the strands of the brightly woven tale. Mrs. Burnham's family of four in this story, Mrs. Ormond, her two daughters and her son, are a study of characters that is most interesting and not without instruction, and the minor details of the narrative are so carefully wrought that the whole is a finished production wholly satisfying to the "gentle reader."

Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston and New York. Price $1.25.

The Coming of Theodora. By Eliza Orne White. Welcome, indeed, is anything new under the sun, or anything approaching newness. The story in hand touches upon a phase of experience in home-life that might seem too sombre for the artist's pencil, but this author has been brave and successful. Theodora is the sister of an artist whose wife is also an artist, and the home of these two dabblers in paint is a charming scene of disorder where love reigns and smiles upon faded tapestries and children's buttonless garments. Theodora comes into this home, strong, capable, order-loving, adoring and adored by the artists. Little by little order begins to ascend the domestic throne, but love's wings droop and tears fall now and then. Theodora keeps on her way of reform, heroic, devoted, systematic and the home is beyond reproach. But love resents the intrusion and poor Theodora is routed. Throughout the tragedy, humor flashes brightly and there are no coarse lines suggestive of "quarrels;" every touch is fine. There is a love story, too, for some one loves capable Theodora, and here is where Eliza Orne White shows her bravery, in the denouement of the love chapter, bravery again crowned by success, for the critic cannot find fault with the outcome.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston and New York. Price $1.25.

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

Now that the winter evenings are fast approaching, old and young need some good book that will instruct as well as amuse, to pass away the evenings. Below we give a partial list of books suitable for all:

A GREAT MOTHER. By Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Minerva B. Norton. There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to this volume. It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose. Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions. Bound in silver and gray. Price, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE. By Mary Allen West. The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow! There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual. To this end Childhood, Its Care and Culture was written. In a letter to Miss West, Madam Willard wrote: "If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose to have this. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Bound in cloth, marble edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES of White Ribbon women (official) contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. Beautifully illustrated, containing forty half tone, cabinet size portraits. One hundred and twenty-five pages neatly bound in cloth and paper. Will interest all White Ribboners. Send for it. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By Lyman B. Sperry, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn. Author of Concerning Narcotics, Confidential Talks with Young Men, etc., with introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day. 16mo. cloth, price, 75 cents.

BEFORE HE IS TWENTY. Five perplexing phases of the boy question considered. By Robert J. Burdette, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Edward W. Bok, Mrs. Burton Harrison and Mrs. Lyman Abbott. With portraits of the authors. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. "The boy of the period is unquestionably interesting. He is more so than was his brother of a century ago. . . . It means much, particularly to parents who are charged with the responsibility of a training that must adjust itself, in a greater or less degree, to the time their boys are born, live and shall live. . . . It is for the purpose of presenting the wisest and best concentrated modern thought on the different phases of the boy of the period that the articles in this little book were conceived."—Preface. Price 75.

HOW I LEARNT TO RIDE THE BICYCLE. By Frances E. Willard. In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development. Seven full page, half-tone illustrations. Beautifully bound in buckram cloth, tastefully designed cover in ink and silver. Price, 50 cents.

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS. An Autobiography of Frances E. Willard. Prepared by special and unanimous request of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention of 1887, with an introduction by Hannah Whitall Smith, contains over 700 pages. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Prices, bound in cloth, $2.25. Half morocco, gilt edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $3.75.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS. By Frances E. Willard. The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"My Sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author. A writer says,' It is the most entrancing of all histories. To the cultivated and appreciative reader of every age, sex and sect, there is spread out here a rare and rich feast from the enjoyment of which he must arise a purer, stronger and better nature." Price, paper, 10 cents. Handsomely bound in cloth, 75 cents.

A WOMAN EVANGEL. By Eva Kinney Griffith. A picture of temperance work along the lines so familiar to all W. C. T. U. women. The story will interest all readers—its Gospel temperance meetings, ostracism because of political conscientiousness, downfall due to moderate drinking—all are true to life. Send for it. Price, $1.25.

THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By Hannah Whitall Smith, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," paper, board and illuminated cover, 12mo, 35c. "To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nations' citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

A GIFT OF LOVE. By Rose Porter. Love texts for 365 days. Long 18mo. Daintily bound, white cloth silver top, boxed. Price $1.00.

A GIFT OF PEACE. By Rose Porter. "Peace" texts for every day in the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day. Uniform with a "Gift of Love." Price $1.00.

BOYS AND OTHER BOYS. GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By Lucy A. Scott. Just the books to give needed advice and help to the boy or girl in the critical early teens. Not "goody-goody" but clear, strong, faithful, interesting. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK. A selection for each day from the best writers among women. Edited by Anna A. Gordon. Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. Handsomely bound. Price, $1.00.

HYGIENE OF THE HOME. By Susan Burr Barnes. A valuable guide along the lines of home keeping. A good book for housekeepers and mothers. Cloth bound. Price 75 cents.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND. By Mrs. Mary H. Hull. This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the Child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm. Bound in cloth. Price, $1.00.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. Contains the favorite hymns of White Ribboners everywhere. It is rich in words and music. Can be used at Devotional Meetings, Evangelistic Services, Gospel Temperance Meetings, Memorial Services, Prohibition Rallies, etc., etc. Price 35c.

MARCHING SONGS NO 3. NEW. Fresh from the press, full of bright, sparkling tunes, suitable for Senior and Junior Legions. 96 pages and cover. Price 15 cents. Numbers 1 and 2. 10 cents. Compiled by Anna A. Gordon. The collection includes temperance songs for use in Kindergarten and Kitchen Garden Schools, songs which teach Sabbath observance, kindness to animals and other kindred principles which it is wise to instill early into the minds of the "cold water army" if we would have them embodied in the law of the land.

Signal Notes.

There are 143 women's colleges in the United States.

Purity workers in Iowa are arming themselves for the age of consent campaign before the state legislature in January.

Of the four hundred and fifty-one universities and colleges in the United States, three hundred and ten are co-educational.

From October 14 to 20 the Salvation Army observed its annual self-denial week. An earnest appeal was sent out by Commander Ballington Booth to the friends of the Army in America for assistance in this work.

Washington white-ribboners are rejoicing in the fact that the saloons and gambling houses in the vicinity of the Soldiers' Home, owing to the bill forbidding saloons within a mile of that institution, have folded their wings, like the Arabs, and silently stolen away.

The total enrollment of pupils in schools and colleges of the United States for 1893, according to the report of Dr. Wm. T. Harris, United States commissioner of education, just published, was 15,083,630, or twenty-two and one-half per cent of the entire population.

The National Free Baptist Convention lately in session at Winnebago City, Minn., passed an eloquent resolution in favor of equal suffrage after a brilliant discussion resulting in a vote of 57 for and 18 against. Several of the eighteen voting "no" explained that they were not opposed to suffrage for women, but to the discussion of the question in a religious body. Strong temperance resolutions were also passed.

Utah, which is so soon to become one of the United States, will bring a population of 247,324 and taxable property of $97,942,-151. Gov. Caleb West, in his recent annual report to the Secretary of State, says that it will be of infinite satisfaction to the whole country that the movement begun in 1886 to obliterate the divisions, remove the bitterness and heal the strife existing in Utah, which have so long prevented its entrance, is about to be consummated in its admission as a great and prosperous state.

The Chicago Tract Society, whose aim is to fill the home with good books, held its sixth anniversary meeting in the First Methodist church, recently. The work accomplished has been visiting families, distributing tracts, circulating volumes by sale or gift, addressing public meetings in the interests of the society's work, which is an offshoot of the parent, the American Tract Society; 9,916 Chicago homes have been visited, nearly 3,000 of whom were found destitute of Christian books, and many did not even have a Bible.

The Woman's International Maybrick Association has been formed for the release of an American-born woman, Mrs. Florence E. Maybrick, who, as is well known, has been in penal servitude six years in an English prison on the charge of having poisoned her husband with arsenic. That she is entirely innocent is believed by many hundreds of people on both sides of the water. There is no court of appeal in England, consequently this association of women has been formed to give the facts in the case to the people by free lectures and published statements, thus bringing about release for the unfortunate woman. Twenty-five cent contributions are solicited for the work and should be sent to Mrs. Ida Trafford Bell, treasurer Maybrick Association, 319 W. 45th street, New York.

The outlook for the Moody Bible Institute was never more encouraging than at the present time. It is expected that there will be over three hundred students during the fall term. There are no vacations. The work of the Institute is in progress during the entire year, but special lecturers come from time to time. Among them Rev. Andrew Murray, of Wellington, South Africa, was there recently for two weeks, lecturing on the higher life. Rev. Webb-Peploe, Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, of London, gave a series of lectures from September 26 to October 2, inclusive. From October 22 to November 22 Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., will also lecture at the Bible Institute once a day. These, as all lectures, are free to the public. For the benefit of interested friends, pastors, Christian workers and missionaries, passing through Chicago, Mr. Moody announces that he has reserved one of the new houses to accommodate any such at a charge of five dollars per week. Those who cannot stay longer than one day will be accommodated.

Young Mothers

should early learn the necessity of keeping on hand a supply of Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk for nursing babies as well as for general cooking. It has stood the test for 30 years, and its value is recognized.

I have given Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm a very severe test as a medicine for diseased kidneys, and it has proved entirely successful. WHY is the Remington Typewriter seen everywhere?

Because it is simplest in construction, easiest kept in order; therefore most durable and economical to buy; easiest to operate, therefore less fatiguing to the operator, and, being quickest also, it is the most economical to use. It is the up-to-date modern typewriter, retaining the essential features of the No. 2, which created the typewriter business.

Why is it in such general use?

Because the Remington Typewriter has had the benefit of twenty years' experience in building typewriters; the benefit of the experimenting of experts; the employment of unstinted capital; and the result is a machine embodying the latest ideas for turning out the most and the neatest work in a day with the least effort, a machine with no equal.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Much to the relief of all good citizens, it has been announced that no prize fight will take place in Arkansas.

Home missionary workers were well represented at the forty-ninth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association in Detroit.

Utah Democrats in convention at Salt Lake City have denounced the attempts at political interference on the part of Mormon church leaders.

A Mothers' Convocation, under the auspices of the Chicago Kindergarten College, was addressed by leading exponents of kindergarten last week.

Mgr. Nugent, a Roman Catholic prelate of England, noted for his prison reform work and steadfast advocacy of the cause of temperance, is visiting the United States.

Dr. Parkhurst presided Thursday at the third annual dinner of the New York City Vigilance League, which is organized in the interests of good municipal government.

The eleventh Ohio Equal Suffrage convention in Ashtabula last week decided to direct its efforts towards general suffrage instead of municipal suffrage as the next stepping stone from the school franchise.

A decision adverse to the Nicholson law has been made by a judge at Rensselaer, Ind., who has decided that remonstrants have a right to withdraw their names at any time before the board of commissioners announced its finding.

WE wish to call the attention of Sunday-school workers to the Quarterly Temperance Lesson supplement of the Young Crusader, a publication especially prepared for the use of superintendents, teachers and senior students on Temperance Sunday, November 24. Expositions of the lesson by well known workers, hints and helps for the observance of the day by Mrs. Irvine, National superintendent of the department of Sunday-school work, and a responsive Scripture reading, are some of the valuable contents of this supplement. State superintendents of Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legion work should order packages early that they may be distributed in ample time before November 24.

THE souvenir programs presented to the members of the convention by the W. C. T. U. of Baltimore, are things of beauty and will be preserved in happy recollection of one of the most successful National Conventions ever held. They are artistically gotten up, handsomely illustrated and contain a map of the city, descriptions of its points of historic interest and other information of value to the visitor.

---

MRS. L. D. CARHART, state W. C. T. U. treasurer of Iowa, is the Prohibition party nominee for state superintendent of public instruction. An interesting incident connected with her candidacy is that her son casts his first ballot this fall, and as he intends to vote the Prohibition ticket straight, he will have the unique privilege of casting his maiden vote for his mother—an honor which does not fall to the share of every young man, and of which consequently young Mr. Carhart is very proud.

---

THE cause of the protected home is steadily winning its way. It means much that the most distinguished of American novelists, William D. Howells, whom we once feared as an opponent, has proved to be one of our truest friends, the discipline of life having led him to see that his early conservatism was not so good as that larger view of brotherhood now so apparent in his articles. He has given his name to the petition for woman's ballot for the state of New York. The same could be said of many lesser lights in literature as well as in statesmanship. The flowing tide is with us!

---

NEVER has the National W. C. T. U. been more royally entertained than during the convention in the "Monumental City." The women of the South are, it is well known, ideal hostesses, and Baltimore's beautiful homes were thrown open with the most lavish and gracious hospitality to the women representing the white ribbon organization and some five hundred American homes. To the county W. C. T. Unions of Maryland were the delegates and visitors indebted for the bountiful and appetizing lunches served each day in the commodious basement rooms of Music Hall. Indeed, the members of the convention, especially those who visited the far-famed markets of Baltimore, do not wonder why that city is called the "gastronomic center of the United States." But besides ministering to the necessities of the inner woman the ladies of Baltimore did not forget the more æsthetic pleasures. Drives were arranged for and the guests escorted to beautiful buildings, famous monuments, and to the magnificent parks for which the city is so justly celebrated. In short, the universal verdict of delegates and visitors is that they had a "splendid time."

---

THE Maryland W. C. T. U. may well be proud of its headquarters, which are located in Baltimore. A commodious three-story building, used in early days for a bank, and therefore, constructed in most substantial style, is the busy hive of state and local white ribbon activities. Upon the first floor is the reception room, where the state secretary holds forth. A large bookcase is filled with literature for sale, while a table with chairs scattered about, books and papers and pictures of temperance leaders on the walls, give a home air to the large, cheerful room. In the rear is the headquarters for the noon prayer-meeting, which has a large attendance. The second floor is devoted to kindergarten work, and on the third floor a laundry is conducted, the proceeds of which are turned into the treasury of headquarters. It is superintended by a typical "new" woman, a gracious Southern girl, who spends her evenings studying law. A Sunday-school is conducted at headquarters, also a men's Bible class, Mothers' meeting, Boys' League, Loyal Temperance Legion, and a Monday night gospel meeting at which the Woodbridge Y's sing—all these in addition to the regular local union meetings and state work.

THE Kansas state W. C. T. U. convention held an "Open Parliament" for the consideration of the question, "Will the enfranchisement of women affect the enforcement of law?" Mrs. Laura M. Johns, president of the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association and a loyal white-ribboner, was invited to open the discussion. As she could not be present she sent the excellent paper which is printed in our contributed columns under the title of "Woman Suffrage in Kansas." It is full of good points for workers and is worthy of wide circulation.

THE UNION SIGNAL of November 7 will be devoted entirely to a report of the National Convention. In view of the fact that there was no DAILY UNION SIGNAL this year, the Convention issue will be in wide demand, and we trust that our friends, being forewarned, will also forearm themselves by sending orders early for extra copies. Surely there is no better method of bringing about the arrest of thought among the host of good people who have so far taken but little interest in the issues of our "peaceful war" than by presenting them with copies of THE UNION SIGNAL of November 7. "This convention is the crown of all our conventions," said one of our leaders, and THE UNION SIGNAL report will reflect many a glow of inspiration and sparkle of temperance wit from this notable occasion. The Y's will be on the lookout for the November issue of Young Women, which will also be a convention number, and carry to the faithful young stay-at-homes cheering echoes from the great National gathering.

---

PHYSICAL culture and dress reform had a large share of attention from our delegates who assembled in conference at Baltimore under the leadership of Mrs. Frances Leiter, National superintendent of physical education, and Dr. Mary Wood Allen, of the purity department. Miss Lydia Newcomb, of Pennsylvania, gave force to her apt remarks on voice culture by showing the methods used in training the voice to most correct speech and the relation of proper dress thereto. Miss Helen Potter, who is superintendent of physical culture for Massachusetts, stirred her hearers on the subject of dress reform, foreseeing the desired goal from the introduction of bicycle knickerbockers. Everybody agreed with her that no uniform attire could be adopted for both stout and thin. Training the body is her remedy for the inroads of age. This conference was among the most interesting of the many side-lights of the Convention, and showed the determination on the part of our workers to preserve "the well-balanced physique which aids in the conservation and concentration of force."

---

ANOTHER point is scored for the bicycle—from the Prohibition standpoint at least. An enterprising worker in the state of New York is utilizing the wheel in the making of Prohibition votes. His methods are unique and he succeeds in getting a hearing with voters in the towns he visits (sometimes two or three in one evening) without renting a hall or passing the hat. For instance, he says, "The committee of a town wrote me that they could not have any meetings this fall; times were too hard and they saw little good from meetings. Two days later dodgers appeared in their village announcing that 'The Bicycle Pioneer' would speak in their streets that night. About seven o'clock I rode into town alone, blew my own bugle and lighted some red fire in one of the streets. I have spoken there before in a church, after good advertisement, to one hundred women and fifteen Prohibitionists, but now I hold two hundred and fifty voters for forty-five minutes, part of the time with a band playing a block away." Is there not a hint here for Prohibition workers all over the country? For, as this energetic speaker (the Rev. William Ferguson of Oneida county) himself says, what he is doing there can be done in every county of the state and in every state in the nation.

AUTUMN SONG.

BY REV. HENRY ADELBERT DELANO, D. D.

The trees are bare and sad without,
  But garnered fruit is safe within;
The fields have not but stubble left,
  While good ripe grain is in the bin.

The empty nest swings silent now,
  And hushed the song of summer bird,
For all the inmates have gone on
  To summer climes of which they heard.

The leaves lie scattered, sear and brown,
  And tree tops, like the ghostly masts
Of wrecked ships, stand in solemn awe
  Of cold November blasts.

But fires will blaze and lights will burn
  Around the sheltered, happy hearth;
God's snow will come and tender warmth
  Will wrap the frozen earth.

The mellow genial sky is gone,
  And sunsets golden turned to gray,
But purple, pink and amethyst,
  Throw shadows on our way.

The green has faded from the fields,
  The meadows turned to blight and mould,
But down the lane the aster waves,
  And near the glen, the rod of gold.

Death is fruition, fruit is seed,
  Decay is life, and turmoil—peace;
The harvest gathers all, save this,
  The secret, God will not release.

He keeps the old receipt of life,
  We only know the balm,—
That after life's brief winter day,
  Comes His eternal calm.

UNCLE SETH'S "NEW WOMAN."

BY MYRA GOODWIN PLANTZ.

"If she's coming on a wheel, she can stay to hum," said Mr. Billings, decidedly.

"Oh, she's one of the new women you read about," said his son, Bob, with a scornful laugh.

"New fiddlesticks. On wheels, without dresses, wanting to vote and not work," was the angry rejoinder. "I tell you she can't come to this house and put nonsense in Sallie Ann's head. I won't have sich doings."

"Pa, she's your own sister's child," reminded gentle Mrs. Billings, soothingly. "Besides, she is on her way, and no letter or telegraph would reach her now."

"She won't harm me, pa," said Sallie Ann, indifferently. "She can't put me out with her newfangled notions."

"Well, let her come," sighed Mr. Billings, seeing his niece was spinning his way in spite of his objections. "Perhaps we can show the misguided child that it is her duty to be a modest, domestic woman, as her own ma was brought up to be before she struck the city and all these new idees. They say the girl supports her ma since her pa died, but in a downtown office, and I'd see our Sallie Ann in—"

Just where the farmer's daughter never knew, for at that moment the family was startled by an apparition at the front gate, and a lovely young lady came wheeling gracefully up the path. The letter had "lain over" in the village post-office till market day, and the young lady had not, so was there to speak for herself. She had on a neat, dark blue suit. True, the skirt was a little short, and the jacket and linen collar a trifle "mannish," but she was altogether charming and womanly. From under the blue sailor hat a face looked out that was beautiful with the flush of cheeks rosy with exercise and eyes bright with happiness.

"Oh, what a pretty place!" cried this young "new woman," giving a graceful little jump from her wheel. "How kind of you to be on the porch watching for me! Uncle Seth shall have the first kiss, because he is mamma's own brother."

The Billings family did not indulge in this mode of demonstration, not for fear of microbes, but of sentiment, so Uncle Seth had not been kissed for years. Now, as it was administered, he liked it, and Bob regretted that his cousin stopped her sweet way of greeting when she reached him.

"You are very welcome, Mildred," said Mrs. Billings, the first one to recover herself. "Pa, you and Bob lift in that bicycle, and we will set up supper."

Before her aunt had done speaking Mildred had whisked the wheel up on the porch.

"Your back!" screamed the aunt.

"Oh, with my telescope, it is only as heavy as a good sized baby," laughed Mildred, as she took off her small valise.

"I suppose your trunk is coming in a wagon," said Sallie Ann, hoping to see "heaps" of city finery.

"I have all that is necessary here. One does not want to bother with clothes on a vacation," replied the young woman, as one who had learned how to rest without making it the hardest kind of work.

At the table Mildred won the heart of her aunt by her vigorous appetite and evident appreciation of the substantial country supper.

While her relatives were taking notes on the "new woman," Mildred was quietly making her own discoveries. She knew her uncle owned his large farm, with its ample barns, and fine stock, and the poorly furnished house was a surprise. The parlor, opened by courtesy for the guest, was damp and cheerless, with faded carpet and ungainly haircloth furniture. In the kitchen was order, and a certain cheeriness that goes with the room most used, for Aunt Hannah was a woman of the old school who spent much of her time on her knees scrubbing—not praying—for the family, and at the shrines of the pie-board and the kitchen table. Both the elderly and young woman wore spotless dresses, but as ill-fitting and unbecoming as possible. Mrs. Billings combed her hair back in a tight knot, but Sallie Ann had a fringe of heavy bangs over her bright eyes. Both women had the weary, unsatisfied look that comes from a life of uncompromising physical toil. Bob was a handsome young fellow, but there was an expression on his face that troubled Mildred. She wore a little silver cross on her watch chain and, when she happened to remember it, a tiny white ribbon, and it had become second nature to "lend a hand" when any one needed help. The next morning a neat gingham waist and large white apron transformed the traveling suit into a pretty home toilet, and Mildred began to help with the morning work as a matter of course.

"We did not expect you to work," remonstrated Sallie Ann.

"Why not? I don't have to be at the office till nine, and I am through at six, so I help mother do the work. Of course, I learned to cook before I studied stenography. You know I hope to have a few years of college life yet, and am saving for it. But we've learned to simplify housework to save our strength and time for other things. We have white oilcloth on our kitchen table, and rag carpet on our floor. They are cheap to change when soiled, and save worlds of scrubbing. We easily change papers on shelves, and use a patent sweeper. We have given up white skirts and elaborate underwear, having fine woven stuff that is nothing to wash and does not need ironing. And of course we have water in the house. You must coax your father to give you the price of his last binder, and you can get water in the house and have it get out, too, without taking your spinal column with it."

"Great notions these!" cried Uncle Seth, who had been an unobserved listener. "You had better read the woman's chapter in Proverbs. That model woman was not afraid to work with her hands, 'She looked well to the ways of her household, and ate not the bread of idleness.'"

"Yes, but she had all the new ideas, Uncle Seth," said Mildred sweetly. "She kept hired help, even if she did rise early to set her maidens to work. And she was a regular business woman, for she considered a field and bought it—I simply write out the contracts; and she made fine linen, and delivered girdles to merchants and imported food from afar. Perhaps she ran a store in connection with her real estate office. She understood Delsarte, as we call physical training by gymnastics, for she girded her loins with strength, and strengthened her arms. She was in philanthropy, for she stretched out her hands to the poor, and reached forth her hands to the needy. She was a speaker, for she opened her mouth with wisdom, and it isn't likely she wasted it all on her husband, though his being known at the gates seems to have some connection with his having such a remarkable wife."

"And her husband praised her," suggested Aunt Hannah timidly, for her heart was very hungry for that necessary adjunct to a perfect wife.

"Well, she did not ride a bicycle," chuckled Uncle Seth.

"No," admitted Mildred, "but it was even then suggested. The wheel she 'laid her hands to' then was a spindle and now it is a safety."

Uncle Seth remembered he was needed at the barn, and the three women had their own little laugh at his expense.

"One thing we have found to help in the household problem is that cooking need not be the burden it was once, and yet one can live just as well. We like home-made bread, but we find a deserving woman who makes it beautifully, glad of the little profit. And we have about given up pies, for fruit is no more expensive, not even oranges and winter grapes, and so much more healthful. Then many of the canned goods are better than we could do ourselves. Anyway, the thing desired is not to kill mother with a rolling pin. You look so tired, auntie, dear."

"I'm just beat out with the work, for all Sallie Ann is always at it. Your uncle thinks the modern improvements all nonsense in the house, and from a windmill down, just the thing outside," was the reply that fired Mildred's heart with indignation.

The two workers were glad to take her suggestions, and Bob surprised himself into making a kitchen sink, and a shelf over the stove, and even offered to make a woodshed by the kitchen door. All these changes made the first week pass quickly and pleasantly, and at the end of that time Sarah, as Mildred insisted on calling her, came in with a beaming face.

"You've done so much for us, I'm glad we can give you a little fun. There is to be an apple party at the Browns, and they know just how to have everything nice. The only thing is, Bob, I mean Robert, won't let me keep company with Dick Worrel, so we'll have to crowd three in our new buggy."

"We've had some fine rides that way, and I think it's cozy. If that Dick is the young man who had that trouble some time ago, Robert is just right," said Mildred.

"Dick's father is the richest man in the county, and Dick is such good company, every one but Robert forgives him. He was young and wild then, and a girl gets left out here if she has no company," said Sarah, who had a secret liking for the "fast" young man of the neighborhood.

"Then I would be left out till the judgment day, before I would go with a young man not as pure and good as I," said Mildred, her eyes blazing with scorn for her weak cousin.

"Bob never takes me anywhere," said Sarah sullenly. "If I could manage him as you do, I wouldn't care for Dick's company."

"I only treat him as if I cared for him," said Mildred with unmistakable emphasis.

"I am going to pet him, too," said Sarah, softening. "I do set everything by him, but he always was a tease. I notice you don't mind that so he stops. But you let him wait on you as if you were a princess. I thought from your wheel, you were a new woman, and wore trousers, or bloomers,"—here modest Sarah stopped to blush. "But you dress like other girls, only look more stylish. But perhaps the reason you are so particular about your company is you don't believe in getting married."

It was now Mildred's turn to blush, as she held up a slender finger with a ring. "That is just why I am so particular for myself and every girl I care for. The most terrible thing that could happen to a good girl would be to marry a bad man. My friend is all he can ask of me, but we have to wait till he gets through law school, and then has some one to practice on. That new woman you have such dread of is simply a newspaper creation. Women will always be women, I guess, though a few have thought bloomers more convenient than skirts for a bicycle. The new part is women are trying to be and do their best, and help make the world happier and better. I'm glad I put in my pretty pink silk waist for the party," turning with a woman's quickness from reform to becoming uniform.

"I haven't a thing to wear," sighed Sarah, after the manner of women of all generations.

"You have a nice black skirt, and I can make a beautiful party waist out of that old changeable silk skirt your mother showed us, and I will if you promise to have nothing to do with Dick for a month and think the situation over carefully and prayerfully."

Sarah closed the bargain by getting the handsome old skirt at once and the "new" young woman gave her ideas more valuable than how to dress becomingly as they talked and sewed together.

"The bicycle girl," as she was called, was a favorite at the party, for she entered into the innocent gayety with the same spirit she manifested in more serious things. At supper, however, she had to seem peculiar, for she quietly refused the cider that was part of the apple party. She noticed that her cousins drank freely, Sarah from the sweet cider made that day, but Robert joined Dick Worrel and a few others in seeing who could drink the most of the apple juice that had grown hard and sour with age. It was late when the three young people were well started towards home. The horse was restless and Robert nervous, complaining of a splitting headache. About half way home, Mildred noticed that her cousin had dropped his head on her shoulder as if half asleep. At that moment the horse shied at a shadow, and the buggy was on the edge of a gully, so before Mildred could catch the lines the light vehicle was on its side, the young people in the ditch, and the strong young horse loose from the wreck, and on his way to the stable.

Fortunately a spring wagon was close behind and the young ladies were picked up more frightened than hurt. Robert was groaning with what proved a cut in his head, but he got over that wound sooner than he did the mortification of being the cause of the wreck.

The next morning after doing all she could to cheer up Robert who was not able to sit up with a head suffering from trouble within as well as without, Mildred followed her uncle to the place of the accident.

"It goes ag'in the grain to see my new two hundred dollar buggy a wreck when crops are middling light," said Uncle Seth dolefully.

"Does not this road need a better foundation?" asked Mildred.

Uncle Seth colored under the direct gaze of this thoughtful young woman.

"The truth is, Mildred, we farmers work out our road tax instead of paying money, and having a good road made. This is part of my section, and I meant to put a good foundation of stones in that rut and fill in with dirt before the bad weather and grain hauling come. But I just plowed, and left it, thinking neighbor Smith might put in the foundation when it comes his turn here, and now see that wreck for my pains."

"Uncle Seth," and the girl's voice trembled and her eyes grew misty in her earnestness, "don't you think you ought to put some sure foundation stones under Robert's feet? Isn't cider risky ground for him, and isn't the company of that fast young man, if he is a rich neighbor's boy, dangerous for both of your children? Couldn't their lives be filled with the best of things before there is another wreck on your hands?"

Uncle Seth looked at Mildred in a dazed sort of way and then said, "We've always used cider but it is gaining on Bob. He wants to go to school, but I haven't seen my way clear. If Sallie Ann don't stop going with that scamp, I'll—"

"Oh, uncle, give her what she wants at home, books and magazines and an organ, and permit her to join the young people in town in their Endeavor society and temperance work, and let her have an opportunity to earn something herself. If she could only have a chance to be some one or do something, she would soon give up the idea of marrying a man beneath her. Robert, if he has an opportunity, may make more than good country roads, though that is not to be scorned, you see. He may become a man who will make better laws and see that they are enforced and make the world have fewer soul-wrecks. Men are worth saving, for they are so needed now to cope with evils too great for women to master."

Perhaps Mildred was quoting from a lecture she had heard not long before, but no matter. It impressed her old uncle and as she whisked out of sight on her wheel, in a cloud of dust, he muttered, "She is a mighty smart girl and I would not care if our Sallie Ann was more like her, and if Bob would pick up with such a pert kind of a woman."

In a few days Mildred was saying good-bye. Robert whispered, "No more cider for me," and Sarah said in a low tone, "Things look different since I've known you. I won't go with any bad man again."

Aunt Hannah folded the sweet young girl in her arms and said softly, "You've brought us all blessing, and made the work lighter, but the best is you've helped the children more than you know." Uncle Seth said nothing except, "Come again, little girl," but he watched the graceful figure on the wheel until it disappeared and then he turned to the family with, "Ma, I want you to go to town to-morrow and get a new parlor carpet and things to make the front room nice for the children, and I will see there is a fire there this winter. Sallie shall have a pianer and music lessons as soon as I haul off the grain, and Mollie Small must come for the winter and give you a chance to get out of the kitchen for a spell. Bob, you can go to the Kirkland Academy, and then to college if you still have a hankering that way. You might get a wheel so you could come home over Sunday. I've changed my mind about the new woman, and I don't care if Sallie has a bicycle. But my old woman is good enough for me, and, children, I draw the line on one thing, I'll never risk your Ma on a wheel."

There is no sin in shrinking from what is painful, save when it resists the clear will of our Father.

The essence of faith in God is to say: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt."

God's will is always infinitely better for us than our own.

Be sure that it is something more than surface feeling, something more than impulse; it is good, honest, sober, considerate, patient principle, stayed up by prayer, that alone can remain awake, and outwatch the stars, and wait through the darkness, and conquer temptation.—Selected.

SOME REASONS WHY STATE UNIONS SHOULD HAVE A PEACE AND ARBITRATION DEPARTMENT.

BY W. G. HUBBARD.

President American Peace Association.

Twenty-one states have organized a peace and arbitration department in W. C. T. U. work, with state and county or district superintendents. Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop Center, Me., is superintendent of the National and of the World's peace department.

There are twenty-three states that should organize this fall. Why?

1. First, war is one of the greatest evils that afflicts the nations. It is one of the greatest products of sin. Thomas Dick says fifteen times the population of the earth has been destroyed by war. Christ says, "Put up thy sword" (Matt. 26:52). "Love your enemies" (Matt. 5:44). And further, because war is a great producer of intemperance.

Drunkenness greatly increases during war times. From 1860 to 1868 the breweries and distilleries increased four hundred per cent in the United States. "War and intemperance are twin demons, born in hell."

2. There is great effort being made by the military spirits of the United States to militarize this country, aping after the old war-ridden nations of Europe. Military drill has been introduced into eighty-six colleges, and a large number of high schools. The legislature of New York passed a bill introducing it into the schools of the state, and requiring every boy over twelve years to take the drill. Governors of other states have met together in New York city to discuss plans for introducing military drill into the schools. A kind of a military craze has taken possession of some of our Americans, and they are trying to make a military camp of the United States, as all Europe is to-day.

It is high time the W. C. T. U. should take up the matter and head off this contagion that is poisoning the minds of our hitherto peace-loving people. What is there to be done in this department? Full instructions and documents may be had of your National superintendent. But I will outline. 1. Obtain documents from Mrs. H. J. Bailey, from the American Peace Society, No. 3 Somerset street, Boston, and from the Peace Society of Friends, Richmond, Ind., and distribute them. 2. Let the superintendents give talks to schools and conventions on love, and on the evils of war. This will be easy when they have read the documents. 3. Ask the ministers to preach a sermon on peace and arbitration, promising to furnish them with documents upon the subject if they will comply. The Peace Societies will help you in supplying ministers with the necessary documents. County superintendents should earnestly request every minister in the county to preach a peace sermon during Peace Sunday, third Sunday in December, and many of them will do so.

There is probably no department of W. C. T. U. work in which so much can be accomplished with so little outlay. It is work for the Prince of Peace. Who will help it along?

FROM BRAMPTON TO BREMEN.

BY OTTILIE HOFFMAN.

President of the W. C. T. U. of Germany.

Seafarers tell us of seeds carried by the ocean waves from one isle to another, where they spring up, bearing fruit by their innate power. Some of your readers may perhaps be interested to hear of a seed that Brampton, or, rather, Naworth, sent from the north country side over the sea to German shores, to Bremen, one of the old Hanse towns, which, like Hamburg and Lubeck, still owns, under the sovereign rule of the German Empire, her old republican institutions, and thus, by the enterprising, independent and patriotic spirit of her citizens and her wealthy and thriving condition, is an excellent advocate for the advantages of Home Rule, possessed, in some degree, by all the German states comprising the empire.

In one of her public places there is a beautiful statue of St. Ansgar, one of the early Christian missionaries to Bremen, who ransomed many slaves. He is represented compassionately bending down and taking the yoke from the shoulders of a slave. To many of our fellowmen suffering under the worst thralldom existing—that of sin and shame through drink—the temperance cause is a redeeming St. Ansgar.

A native of this old city, I had the good fortune to go to England, and having been, from the beginning of Lady Carlisle's temperance campaign, an eye-witness of its sore need and of the welcome it received in the community, I signed the pledge in the pledge-book of one of my pupils at Naworth Castle, and resolved to put my hand to the plow for the temperance cause in my own country as soon as I should be able. A coffee tavern, the first in Germany, had been flourishing in Bremen for eight years, but the work had gone no further.

Last summer there was a great industrial exhibition, for which temporary buildings of no common size and structure had been erected. When they were to be taken down in the autumn it so happened that no place was near where the workmen employed could get anything warm, while opportunity for getting brandy was not lacking. This seemed a favorable moment for the introduction of practical measures for our cause. I won the committee of our greatest women's association in Germany, the Vaterlandische Frauen-Verein, which has branches in all other towns, to coöperate with me. We quickly transformed a pretty pavilion of the exhibition buildings into a coffee tavern, which we opened on November 1. Large cups of coffee and milk and rolls were sold for ½ d; broth and a plate of substantial pea or bean soup for 1 d; sausages for 1½ d. The place was crowded in no time.

In the spring, when building, the workmen had drunk freely, and their excesses and rude behavior had quite alienated the sympathies of the public, so that many of our friends questioned the possibility of our undertaking the management alone with only the women we had engaged to help us. However, we trusted their good sense and feeling, and our hopes were amply justified. Their behavior was excellent, courteous and grateful for the trouble we took. We handed out all the provisions ourselves. Ladies of our association were in attendance from eight in the morning and all helped with great zest. We lent them books, gave them political pamphlets, temperance tracts, took money for them to savings banks, had plaster, carbolic acid and bandages always ready, which we had to use almost daily for the little injuries.

In their dinner time leisure we had many a talk with the men on social and political subjects, and it often was a pleasure to see how their sometimes apathetic faces brightened in time. Many of the mechanics and electricians had been great travelers and liked to tell of the foreign parts they had seen. Some spoke English, and those that did were almost sure to have some companion whom they taught in the evening. Some had seen better days, telling us in private that drink had been their ruin; many of the unmarried ones went in couples as close friends and brothers, accepting no work but together.

We reached many. Some of the principal carpenters whom we had known before, told us of the striking difference they found between the state of things before and after the setting up of our coffee stall, between the riot and drunkenness in the spring, and their now orderly behavior; and one fact was particularly encouraging. During the erection of the buildings there had been many serious accidents and losses of life; the taking down of the buildings was considered more dangerous, yet there was only one serious accident in the first few days, followed by no other. The men of the fire brigade, some of whom had always to be on the spot in case anything should occur, repeatedly expressed their surprise, and attributed it to the substitution of the little coffee pavilion for the canteen with its large supplies of brandy and beer. Christmas we celebrated singing hymns under the Christmas tree, followed by a short, stirring address and the "Angel Trio" from Elijah by three beautiful voices, and the giving of little useful presents. Some of the rough men answered, speaking very well. Our pavilion, built mostly of glass, through which the lights shone afar, was then the only bright and pleasant spot in the field of devastation and ruins, which, together with ice and snow, often made access difficult, surrounded by a beautiful dark wood and park at some distance from the town. The winter was very severe and battled against us in many ways but only called forth double exertion, and all went on briskly till the work in the "Burgerpark" was finished March 14.

But long before it was over, as early as January, we had had temperance meetings where good music and good speeches, partly instructive, partly amusing, were provided, and so here a pretty large audience of four or six hundred always met. February 12 we formed a temperance association. As many of the workmen left Bremen in March, the number of our members is yet small, nearly two hundred, but continually increasing.

We have several temperance and two small total abstinence societies existing in Germany, but our leaders of the cause, one of the foremost of whom is Herr. A. Lammers, of Bremen, believe more in legislation than in private effort to strengthen the cause; consequently, till now, little or nothing has been done to arouse the interests of the poorer classes who are more addicted to brandy. While with regard to legislative measures our leaders hope that after the next session of our Reichstag, when an important law against drunkenness will, we trust, be passed, we shall be ahead of England in this respect. Our leaders are more inclined to take Norway's example than that of England. Norway, half a generation ago, was perhaps the most drunken country in Europe; now the consumption of spirits is only three and one-half quarts a head as against six in England, and I regret to say, even more in Germany, while other countries are still worse. Many of our Liberals, of course, prefer the English way of educating public opinion and bringing about social reform by private and individual effort, followed by legislation. However, if our leaders for the temperance cause should succeed now, when public opinion is comparatively so little educated on the subject, in bringing about important legislative restrictions, they will certainly have done well.

But to go back to practical work. Two days after the close of our first coffee kitchen we opened another, which at the request of the workmen had been built in the meantime in the fields, where smaller buildings and sheds for an agricultural exhibition in June were being put up. It was something like a Swiss hut, and with pictures, mottoes, books and shelves of old china, flowers and the bright little kitchen at its end, looked very comfortable. It was done on the same footing and answered as well, although the number of men employed was smaller and the sixteen public-houses in the streets nearest took away a good many. Yet in the end it became even more successful than our first stall had been. It was quite self-supporting, even paying the expenses of its building, because the place during the exhibition week was always overcrowded all day, from half-past five in the morning, when the men who had care of the cattle and had to remain on the spot all night came for their coffee, and the whole thing answered so well that the committee of these agricultural exhibitions which take place every two years in different towns all over the country, expressed their wish to have in future a coffee-kitchen like ours at every exhibition. It also is a very good means of distributing or selling temperance tracts in all directions.

Our pretty rustic hut which some of our temperance committee had vied with one another in decorating as nicely as possible and making a garden, with seats and tables before it, had to be taken down July 4th. On July 7th a cheap people's coffee-house was opened in the park where we had had our first stall. The workmen had during the winter expressed a wish for it, and at our request a handsome building—partly wood, partly stone, was given for that purpose by one of our merchants, and we hope it may prove a benefit to the working classes. Owing to a previous agreement with the people's park committee we could not get the management into our hands, but the giver placed it expressly under the superintendence of our young Temperance Association in which we hope next winter to form a total abstinence branch, which, by the general sympathy given to it, has even now become in at least a small measure, a factor of some good among us; and we earnestly hope for more when in September the great German Temperance Association "against the abuse of alcoholic liquors," will meet in Bremen, when important and interesting meetings and lectures will take place, and when we hope to open another coffee tavern near the harbor and near some factories.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN KANSAS.

BY LAURA M. JOHNS.

When the experiment of municipal woman suffrage is under discussion it is usually talked about just as though all other suffrages had always been profitably used; as though men voters had never made any mistakes, never used any but high plane methods and always made an unquestionable success of voting. And furthermore, our experiment in partial woman suffrage is discussed as though there existed no reason that woman vote at all except that she do it better than men and accomplish more good with the ballot. All these peculiar features of our case must be remembered in talking about the advantages of municipal woman suffrage.

If our voting is to be measured up with the voting of men I insist that it should be said that the suffrage of woman ought to have less required of it instead of more, and that its shortcomings are excusable as those of our brothers are not, because men have had long experience, practical training, the prestige of custom and the friendliness of public opinion, besides the stimulation of selfish considerations which are almost wholly absent in the case of women voters in the cities of Kansas.

Nevertheless the fruit of woman's enfranchisement in our cities is good. The results are good to women themselves in the widening of their thought and interests, and in the greater self-determination and self-respect it brings to them. It brings them to greater sex respect and higher self-valuation. Women have not generally thought well enough of their own claims and abilities. They have been too ready to share the contempt of men for woman's powers and characteristics.

The municipal ballot is advantageous to women in Kansas in strengthening and multiplying many fold their moral influence. The men who exercise the powers that make for evil much desire that woman may be satisfied to use only moral influence. That class of men are not much afraid of woman's moral influence on election day. For on that day the influence they expect and the influence that is potent is that which can express itself at the polls.

Our degree of suffrage has not been as strong to enforce the prohibitory law as some think it ought to have proved itself, for the reason that all the enforcement of that law does not rest in the hands of the city official. The best of work in this direction by a city officer, elected by sobriety loving women, can be stopped short of success by the county attorney, whom women may not help to elect.

In our first class cities all power to effect enforcement of prohibitory law, or any other coming under police supervision, is removed from the hands of the voters and vested in the governor, who has the power to appoint police commissioners. In many cities the voting women have made themselves felt as a strong factor for good in the election of men who see to it that joints are closed and houses of prostitution shut up. Our modicum of political power makes us stronger to affect legislation, even though we cannot make or unmake legislators.

Whether or not the exercise of municipal suffrage is a help to getting full enfranchisement is a mooted question. If our amendment had carried I would think that municipal woman suffrage had been helpful—that the slice had helped to get us the whole loaf; but as it is I am inclined to think the question resolves itself into the balancing of the friends we make in city elections and the foes we make on the same occasions. We always defeat somebody, and somebody always lays that up against us to take it out upon us when we come up to ask for the full ballot. To be sure we always make some friends by our good works, but somehow those same friends were not as active as our foes, and they were, at least large numbers of them, willing to trade on the amendment for any advantage they could thus bring to their respective parties.

An important advantage of the municipal woman's ballot is its educational influence upon women and men, and particularly upon the young. It helps boys to the conclusion that their mothers do "belong," and that they may be of almost as much importance in the world as the fathers. It helps to clear the boys' minds of the notion that "the male is the race," as Goldwin Smith so arrogantly and insultingly put it. To make the municipal ballot of greater advantage to all concerned women should use it. Whether there is one ticket or more; whether the right candidate is sure of election or not; whether the election is important or not, our women should go out to vote. They should vote on principle. The menace to our government is the carelessness and the neglect of the average voter. Let women with their little bit of the suffrage set an example of that "patriotism of peace" which attends, without fail, to the performance of this high duty of citizenship.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

Dear Union Signal:—"Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest." That is what we have been doing latterly in England as regards our American sisters, only it has been in the plural. Two weeks ago Miss Willard and Miss Gordon bade farewell and sailed away to the west. To-day Mrs. Clara Hoffman follows them, going aboard the St. Louis, of the American line, from which, last Wednesday, Mrs. J. K. Barney stepped on to our shores at Southampton. Yet another has come and gone within a few days—Miss Jessie Ackermann— after a health recruiting quest in Iceland. So the forces gather and scatter, each doubtless building "after a plan," and possibly "better than she knew."

Mrs. Hoffman has been speaking at a number of large meetings in various parts of England and Wales. After the Convention in June our general election rather hindered some expected meetings, but was itself turned to good account, and Mrs. Hoffman did capital service at a series of election meetings in support of candidates pledged to the Direct Veto and other temperance measures. The vigor and humor and logic of her addresses was greatly appreciated wherever she has been. During the past weeks she has been kept closely at work, holding a meeting, and sometimes two meetings, each day right up to the eve of sailing for home.

Mrs. Barney is doubly welcome, for her own sake and for the sure promise of great good which may be drawn from the accomplished facts of her last year's visit. She comes now at a most opportune time. The recent parliamentary election, while it was by no means of as evil omen for the temperance cause as our opponents would like to think, has had one effect which will prove a real blessing. More attention is sure to be given than has ever been before to the primary principles of the reform and all temperance people are agreed that the education of the public mind in these principles is the paramount duty of the hour.

Thus Mrs. Barney will begin her work here amidst an expectant people, and there are few indeed better fitted by natural ability and by the indwelling grace of the Spirit to do effectively what just now needs to be done. We are hoping for great results especially among the Christian public, too many of whom in all our communities are, unfortunately, on the wrong side. Mrs. Barney is so booked before she arrived for meetings and missions filling dates pretty well up to Christmas, and others in the new year.

It has been represented in some quarters that the general election, with the defeat of the Liberal government, was of a character to dispose of temperance reform in this country for a generation. Those who thought, or affected to think so, interested liquor-sellers on the one hand, and faint-hearted or false friends on the other, must by this time begin to discover their mistake. It may indeed be that for a year or two, or more, no prospect will appear of pressing successfully the veto question—the high water-mark of temperance demand—but many other points will be pressed, and even legislatively it does not follow that something may not be done.

In the meantime all the ordinary and some special agencies of temperance activity have been in full swing. Within the past two weeks four events of importance directly concerning the temperance world have taken place,—a series of meetings in the north of England connected with the Northern Temperance League, one of our most vigorous combinations; a similar series in South Wales, celebrating the fifty-eighth anniversary of the second oldest temperance league in the country; a whole week of meetings at Grimsby on the east coast—the autumnal gatherings of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, which vigorously and efficiently conducts the best work among the children, of whom over two millions are members. And lastly, a National Temperance Congress, convened by the National Temperance League, held at Chester, on the western side of England.

Thus literally east, west, north and south have been stirred by the many-sided temperance questions being presented by many speakers in many ways. Of these, and numerous other indications of activity and progress there is no need to speak in detail, except of the last named—the Chester Congress—and of this I hope to send you some account by next mail.

This month will see among other events, the annual meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance at Manchester, and no doubt these meetings will be, as in past times, a rallying point for all the best and most vigorous workers, and will put beyond question the reality of the continued demand for the veto power. Henry J. Osborn.

"A RETROSPECT."—CORRECTION.

Dear Editors Union Signal:—Please allow me to correct a slight error as to fact. In The Union Signal of August 8, 1895, editorial, "A Retrospect," begins thus: "It is well known that a preliminary committee for the purpose of organizing the Ohio Crusade into a National W. C. T. U. was formed at Chautauqua in August, 1874, by Mrs. Jane Fowler Willing and Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller."

I have waited several weeks thinking one of the ladies named might correct the error, but they may not have seen it, and my friends insist upon the correction. The paragraph quoted leaves the impression that the two ladies named were the active movers, agents or planners in the formation of said committee—which was not the case.

They were named for their positions by the writer, who was the organizer, mover, agent or founder, premeditated and with plan aforethought. Not only so, but I was also an active member of that committee, corresponding with temperance workers in all the states, using them as friends to work up the Cleveland Convention of 1874. I chanced to be the only one in the committee who held an active relation to the other National temperance organizations.

I went to Chautauqua with the purpose in my heart and plan in my pocket to organize the movement just as it was formed. I still have the original plan which shows the skeleton of the work as it now exists, financial plan included, of which several others have claimed authorship. No matter, so the good work goes on!

I had begged Mrs. Bishop Simpson (who can testify to all these facts) to allow me to name her as chairman. She positively declined. She aided me in the securement of the Tabernacle for the first meeting. We were both guests of Mr. Lewis Miller, who vouched for the orderliness of the meeting.

Dr. Vincent (now Bishop) had some doubts about the proprieties of an Ohio Crusader. Hence, it was that a regular Sunday-school worker and teacher was named in the public announcement to take charge of the temperance meeting. Prior to speaking in that meeting I had opportunity of making oral prayer, in which I asked for a spirit of unifying power. Mrs. Russell, of Washington, D. C., kneeling near me, is accustomed to speak of this as the very first inspiration of the National movement. I knew differently.

My extempore speech, telling of the Crusade; introducing the subject of wider organization; arguing the necessity of form; the suitableness of the place; its interstate and international character; the high tone of the Christian people present, was so apparently spontaneous that it passed into history of the movement as an inspiration.

Before taking my seat I moved for the committee on organization, and named Mrs. Willing as chairman. Otherwise I would have been the parliamentary chairman. For prudential reasons I did not wish a conspicuous place. I was known to be one of the organizers of the Prohibition party, and actively working with it. I was therefore "gibbeted on the crossroads of public opinion," and it was better for the cause that I should keep in the background, and hence I worked in my plan so suggestively and piece by piece that I was almost unseen by the public eye. I have been constantly identified with the movement in a private way, not desiring official relation.

I wish to say further that I found Mrs. Ingham at Chautauqua after the preliminary meeting, and impressed her into the service. She invited the convention to Cleveland, and did heroic work for it. Nor has she gone off with the "Nons," as is sometimes supposed. A relative bearing the same name is responsible for the misapprehension.

Faithfully yours,

M. McClellan Brown.

THEODORE WELD AND HIS WIFE, ANGELINA GRIMKE.

Dear Union Signal:—Theodore Weld was called the St. John of the Abolitionists. He converted J. G. Birney, who freed his slaves and was the first candidate of the Liberty party for president. He also converted the students of Dr. Lyman Beecher's Theological Seminary to immediate emancipation, and helped to found Oberlin.

Garrison in his Liberator said, "The Almighty has raised up in the person of Theodore Weld one of the most powerful advocates of truth and liberty that the world has ever witnessed." Whittier said of him, "One of the ablest and one of the best men I ever knew." Weld wrote "Slavery as It Is," the book which inspired Uncle Tom's Cabin. Mrs. Stowe, before she wrote her immortal work, slept with it under her pillow by night and kept it in her work-basket by day. He also wrote "The Bible Against Slavery," and has always believed that the Bible was against intoxicating wine in God's house and out of God's house. He lectured on temperance before he lectured on anti-slavery. As soon as the Prohibition party was formed, with his life-long friend, Whittier, he became its staunch supporter, and the cause of woman's emancipation owes much to Theodore Weld. At eighty years of age he wrote one of his ablest lectures, "Man's Disparagement of Woman in All Times and Climes." Mary A. Livermore, who introduced him to the W. C. T. U. Convention at Boston, said: "When speaking for abolition Mr. Weld was greeted with jeers and hisses, rotten eggs and brickbats, but when speaking for woman's enfranchisement he is everywhere greeted with the kindest courtesy."

Mr. Weld passed away last February. His wife was Miss Angelina Grimke, the daughter of the Chief Justice of South Carolina, who freed her slaves and came to the North to live. She wrote an appeal to the Christian women of the South on the subject of slavery, and was the first woman to lecture in this country. This was the beginning of the great uplift of woman all around the world. She was descended from the Huguenots, and to die for God's truth would have been exultant joy to this daughter of the martyrs. "She not only faced death at the hands of stealthy assassins and howling mobs, in her loyalty to truth, duty and humanity, but she encountered unflinchingly the awful powers of the mighty, consecrated leaders of society, the scoffs and sneers of the multitude, the outstretched finger of scorn and the whispered mockery of pity, standing up for the lowest of the low."

Wendell Phillips said: "I can never forget the impulse our cause received when the Grimke sisters doubled our hold on New England. I well remember evening after evening, listening to eloquence, such as then had never been heard from a woman. Angelina swept the chords of the human heart with a power which has never been surpassed. When I think of her there comes to me the picture of the spotless dove in the tempest, as she battles with the storm, seeking some place to rest her foot."

After Mary A. Livermore heard Miss Grimke address the Massachusetts legislature, she never doubted woman's right to use her God-given powers in whatever way her Maker should direct. On the evening that Pennsylvania Hall was burned, Angelina Weld rose amid the crash of windows, the hurling of stones, and the yells of the infuriated mob, yet so spellbound did her pure presence and words of burning eloquence hold that vast assembly, that for an hour scarce a human being stirred.

In 1837 the ministers of Massachusetts issued their Pastoral Letter against women speaking in public, to which the poet Whittier replies:

"O what are ye who strive with God.
Against the ark of His salvation."

And for "Carolina's high-souled daughters" he prayed:

"Oh, ever may the power which led
Their way to such a fiery trial,
And strengthened womanhood to tread
The wine-press of such self-denial
Be round them in an evil land,
With wisdom and with strength from heaven,
With Miriam's voice, and Judith's hand,
And Deborah's song for triumph given."

PROHIBITION AND THE G. A. R.

Editor of The Union Signal:—As an old soldier I wish to add a word along the line of the thought expressed by the communication in your issue of October 10, on "Louisville Surprised."

Those who claim that the boys in blue are a lot of "beer guzzlers" do not know the true worth of those who fought for the old flag. The writer has done a great deal of traveling in the last few years, and he finds the ranks of the Prohibition party full of those who fought for the preservation of the Union.

At Grand Rapids, Mich., there is a strong Good Templars' lodge in the Soldiers' Home, and he had an opportunity to see the stuff that the boys were made of in a recent visit to that city.

Not long ago there was a soldiers' reunion at Owosso, Mich., and one who was present told us of an incident that occurred there. One of the saloons of the city had been decorated with the sign: "Headquarters of the G. A. R."

While the boys were having a good time on the campground some one took the platform and told them that he had seen such a placard in the place named. At once a shout of disgust and indignation went up from hundreds of throats, and a cry was made to "fall in and tear the cursed thing down."

In five minutes that whole camp was ready for a raid, and those who know the old soldiers know that something would have happened at that saloon. They took it as a personal insult that any man would dare insinuate that the headquarters of a body which has no stain on its banner should be in a saloon. Finally, some of the cooler headed ones secured quiet long enough to have a motion put requesting the commanding officer to detail a guard to go and demand the removal of the sign, and if it was not removed at once to tear it down.

The officer and his squad called on the offending saloon-keeper and informed him that if the placard were not at once removed, they would not be responsible for the results.

It came down.

I think that no other saloon-keeper of the beautiful city of Owosso will post such a lie again.

Comrade E. A. Whitwam.

AN INCIDENT.

Dear Union Signal:—Reading the account in your paper of Lady Henry Somerset's celebration, without liquors, of her son's coming of age, brings to mind a little incident of another prominent woman taking this same stand in Washington a while ago. Her husband was a congressman of note from Brooklyn. When her time for entertaining came she decided to set an example in not having liquors in any form at the supper. I was present when a reporter appeared to interview her as to details of dress and decoration for the grand affair. She said, in answer to his inquiries, "I will give you all you ask of everything if you will head your article in large letters, 'A reception without wine and liquors.'"

The reception and supper were grand. The large lettered heading appeared in the principal paper of the city which she and her husband so nobly represented, and the details which followed were read with far more interest because of her courage amidst so much fashion and display in this first city of our land. There are many such, and these noble acts ought to be known to the public.

Mrs. Harriet B. Bucher.

Dear Co-workers:—Is it not true that the answering of

special difficulties

is as broadly helpful as any other work done in our department? Believing this I am glad to answer them from time to time as best I may.

Question.—As a very special difficulty I would like to ask how women teachers can teach purity to boys, as Dr. Mary Wood Allen advocates in The Mother's Friend? Even if we attempt it with our girl pupils will we not meet opposition from parents?

Answer.—Dr. Mary Wood Allen has kindly sent the following reply to the above query:

It is no doubt true that opposition from parents will be met with unless parents are themselves educated to understand not only the need of instruction of the young, but also to realize that knowledge of sex does not of necessity mean knowledge of evil. The truths of sex taught with scientific accuracy and with delicacy can be made to elevate the thought rather than to degrade it. If in any community it seems impossible to institute the teaching of the children it may be possible to undertake the education of the parents. A practical experiment is worth more than any amount of theory. One woman teacher impressed with the great need of instruction of the young, began to carry out her plan by inviting the mothers of her pupils to meet with her and hold a mothers' meeting. She prepared herself to present the subjects in a practical way. After the first meeting she felt that she had made a great mistake, and was almost inclined to give up the plan. The mothers had been silent and listened with such sober faces that the teacher imagined they were disapproving of her ideas. However, she persevered and in two years the meetings have grown in wonderful power, and the mothers say it was not disapproval they felt at first, but surprise at the innovation. They have been aroused to their duty and they now instruct their own children and the whole moral tone of the community has been raised. Now the mothers no longer sit silent and listen to the teacher, but they come with papers prepared to read, with questions to ask, with suggestions to make. What teacher has done, teacher may do.

Q.—Will you kindly give form for a letter of introduction for a white-ribboner moving to another town? Also model for card or letter of removal.

A.—The W. T. P. A. supplies these needful articles in two cards, one entitled Traveling Card, the other Removal Card. These serve every purpose, though they may, of course, be reinforced by a personal letter from the hand of the president or secretary, such letter being simply after the usual form of introduction, the degree of formality used, length, etc., being matters for individual decision.

Q.—What must we do in order to amend our Constitution for our own use?

A.—See Roberts' "Rules of Order," section 45, page 118.

Q.—Who is the proper person to write credentials for delegates?

A.—Credentials should be written by corresponding secretary, bearing the signatures of the president and her own.

Q.—Should not the secretary of a local union address the chair before reading her report?

A.—It is mere courtesy as well as parliamentary etiquette to address the chair.

Q.—Is it constitutional to appoint honoraries as superintendents of departments?

A.—I have not heard of such appointments. Honoraries cannot hold office and have no vote. There is nothing to prevent their serving on committees.

Q.—Ought a W. C. T. U. president sell milk and butter to a saloon-keeper?

A.—Why not? Selling honest wares may be a purely impersonal matter. Such a thread of connection between a white-ribboner and one of "our friends, the enemy," might be the beginning of the end of his business.

Q.—In case of the absence of the president from the monthly business meeting, who is constitutionally qualified to take charge?

A.—The secretary calls the meeting to order and a chairman is appointed in regular form. Among the list of vice-presidents in each union one ought to be a first vice-president and thus qualified to fill such vacancies as may occur by the president's absence.

Ever yours in fellowship,

Mother Experience.

DREAM AND REALITY.

BY KATE L. DEWITT.

I lived the life of a poet's dream—
Not of the real, but what doth seem
Most beautiful, true, grandest and high—
And the years flew swiftly, aimlessly by.

But I heard a call in this stricken land
And it touched my heart and set my hand
To gleaning the harvest with patient care.
And the idle dreams sped unaware.

Perchance, to-day I have turned aside
And backward glanced to the olden tide,
To the soft repose of a quiet life,
Free from the toils of a righteous strife.

The elysian fields of long ago
Seem an empty waste I do not know,
And gladly I turn to God's work begun,
With prayer for grace till it be done.

A W. C. T. U. CONVOCATION.

BY MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT.

In many localities the triumph of our principles halts and lingers because the "arrest of thought" has not yet come to the mass of the people whose influence and assistance is needed to help our cause along. Conversion can only follow conviction. A knowledge of the truth must precede conviction, and how can truth be learned unless some one teaches it? In order then to convert the people to our principles, the W. C. T. U. must come to them as a teacher, and very patiently, very wisely, very persistently, very thoroughly must she drill the truth into the lethargic conscience ere conviction comes.

In order to sow the seed the ground must be prepared. Let us take a definite locality and prepare for the harvest and remember that the nature and extent of the harvest (save perhaps in exceptional localities) will depend upon the thoroughness of preparation, and the care with which the whole work is carried on.

We have a field where churches are established and Christian activities are prosecuted with more or less vigor, but concerning what should be the dominant issue of the day the public conscience is asleep. Rest assured that no other organization is more capable of thoroughly arousing it than is the W. C. T. U.

To this end then let us have a "W. C. T. U. Convocation," or a "Conference of Reform Forces," or an "Inquiry Meeting—Searching for Truth." It matters not so much what the meeting is called, but what it turns out to be does matter decidedly.

First fix the date for a day which will not conflict with the "missionary meeting" or the "aid meeting" or any other meeting in any of the churches. Arrange to have the Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League, the Good Templars and as many societies as possible represented on the program. By so doing you secure the attendance of members of each society who perhaps would not otherwise come.

Personally invite each pastor and secure his pledge to be present. Give each pastor a topic to discuss in ten or fifteen minute speeches, unless there should be too many, in which case choose representative men. Carefully select other topics and assign them to the most capable representatives of the various societies which you have invited to take part, or request several to speak on the same topic, thus, "The Next Step in Anti-Saloon Warfare" could be discussed by several speakers and the various views brought out would prove interesting and helpful.

Assign each one so many minutes, and when time expires ring the bell. Thus, all are served alike, and while you may miss something good from one speaker you may possibly save another from becoming tiresome.

If possible have printed programs (not necessarily elaborate or expensive) and send a copy to every one within the radius through which the influence of your meeting will probably extend; tack them up in the post-office and the stores and on the bridges. Get the local papers to notice the preparations for the meeting, give a synopsis of the program, and send a reporter to write it up.

If there is a musician, or a sweet-voiced singer near by, who is not specially interested in temperance work, give them places on the program, and if possible secure their attendance during the entire day. Have plenty of our own white ribbon, no-license, prohibition literature on hand for distribution, and call attention to it publicly, arousing curiosity by reference to some particular leaflet.

Secure some one who reads well to read some short, interesting selection from THE UNION SIGNAL. There are hundreds of short articles that any audience could listen to with pleasure and profit, and which would instruct concerning W. C. T. U. principles and arouse interest in our work.

Have thoroughly arranged in your own mind exactly what you want to do. Keep the program in your own hands, and follow it. See that it is varied, bright, instructive and entertaining, and when fully arranged allow nothing else to intrude and rob your invited speakers of their allotted time.

It will add interest if you can secure two or three letters from prominent persons at a distance, or some one eminent in reform work, setting forth very briefly their views upon some given subject. Keep these in reserve, and read them at the proper time as a pleasant surprise to your audience.

If possible, arrange to have luncheon in the church or hall in which the meeting is held. This can be managed by the local union, planning to furnish hot tea and coffee, and stating on the programs and in the notices that those attending are requested to bring a basket lunch, but that tea and coffee will be furnished. This will help to make it a social affair, promote interest and retain many for the afternoon, who, if obliged to leave for luncheon, might not return. Save some of your best sharpshooters for your last guns. This will hold your audience until the last.

Invite the chairman of the good-citizenship committee to give a ten minute address on "The Duty of a Christian Citizen Toward the Saloon," and invite a warm-hearted, level-headed, motherly woman to speak ten minutes on "The Duty of the Christian Citizen Toward the American Home."

Place in the hands of those who seem capable such topics as the following, time limited to ten or fifteen minutes. Be sure that each one has his topic in hand two or three weeks before the meeting, thus giving plenty of time for thorough preparation.

"The W. C. T. U. as a disturber of the peace."

"The forward movement of the saloon and its results." (A good topic for some one with a head for statistics.)

"What has the W. C. T. U. done for me?" A symposium. "W. C. T. U. education vs. saloon education. Which do you support and how?"

"How I was converted to woman suffrage." A symposium. "The saloon, the pet child of the Republic—Uncle Sam's duty toward it."

"A nation's suicide."

"The W. C. T. U. as an eye-opener."

"Why I am a white-ribboner." (Can be well used as a symposium.)

The above are merely suggestive and others will readily present themselves to any bright program manager. "The next step in anti-saloon warfare," is a good topic to be discussed in ten minute speeches by a representative from each local society or church.

Arrange carefully beforehand who are to take part in the symposiums and have every name upon the programs. Limit time in the symposium to two or three or not over five minutes. This will give variety and teach those who speak to condense their words and speak to the point. Have the program interspersed with a stanza or two of some good, stirring, old hymn sung by the entire audience, standing, and led by some full throated man or woman who sings with the spirit and the understanding also. After a symposium on "Why I am a white-ribboner," a stanza of

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love," comes in very effectively; and after "The forward movement of the saloon," the first and second stanzas of "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," well sung, will key your audience to a pitch of enthusiasm that will put them in touch with your strongest speakers. By all means have good music and plenty of it. Don't fail to present the claims of the W. C. T. U., and armed with pledge cards, pencils, white ribbons and leaflets, canvass the audience thoroughly for new members. Don't neglect the brethren—win all the honorary members possible.

Be sure to show THE UNION SIGNAL from the platform, enlarge upon its merits, give it a good endorsement, or during lunch hour and at every opportune moment secure new subscriptions.

Having prepared the ground by the weeks of agitation and effort preceding the meeting, do not fail to make the best use of the opportunity offered when the meeting finally occurs. If anyone fails you at the last moment be prepared to fill that place yourself, and sow good seed, drilling it deep into the stirred consciences before you. See to it that nothing is left undone to secure stronger organization, more earnest Christian fellowship, and united, concentrated action against the saloon. The harvest will not all come at once. It will follow the meeting as the truths heard there are carried home and presently germinate, stirring heart and hands into action. We must be content to work and wait.

"We sow the golden grain to-day,
The harvest comes to-morrow."

Lastly, begin your meeting and end it promptly at the hour appointed; close with the doxology or "God be with you," and the benediction by a pastor; and from its first inception until the last word is said, keep praying for the blessing of God upon it all.

PARADING PHYSICAL DEFORMITIES.

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

A woman teacher in a college a few miles from Philadelphia wrote to me several years ago in regard to the conspicuously displayed pictorial advertisements of an alleged physiological monstrosity on exhibition at a dime museum in the city, desiring that I should interest myself to have the placards removed. Conceding the propriety of her appeal, it occurred to me that were the representation proposed to be made to the authorities united with by one or more of our surgeons of high reputation, it would have the greater weight. An eminent practitioner was therefore seen, but, though admitting it were well that the placards should be suppressed, he did not incline to personally identify himself with the effort. Since then a law has been passed by the Pennsylvania legislature inhibiting exhibits such as referred to. The text of this act "to prohibit exhibitions of physical or mental deformities in certain public places," is as follows:

"That on and after the passage of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit in any public hall, museum, theater, or any other building, tent, booth, or public place, for a pecuniary consideration or reward, any insane, idiotic or deformed person, or any imbecile, and whoever shall exhibit such mental or physical deformity shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or suffer imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, or either, in the discretion of the court." (I was not personally instrumental in furthering the passage of this very proper act.)

One day last month two women came to my office on behalf of a poor young man, a friend of theirs, who had been a great sufferer from a trouble which had reduced him to a very emaciated condition. He had received treatment from a specialist, who was also the agent of a firm supplying a preparation alleged to be a curative of the complaint; had been benefited by the treatment and medicine; had permitted the agent to take a picture showing his physically reduced condition, and which permission the agent had improved upon by having a much enlarged picture made, exhibiting it in his show window, thereby drawing many persons to view it. The sensitiveness of the young man had naturally been much hurt at this exhibition of himself as a "mere skeleton," but being very poor and without influential friends he seemed to have no redress. I told my callers that I thought his case should obtain prompt relief, and if they would wait I would address a letter to our superintendent of police, advising that he send for the agent, have a quiet talk with him, and get him to remove the picture. This was accordingly done, resulting satisfactorily as indicated.

Now I have the following pertinent point to make. Concerning the parade of physical deformities, to wit: that Christian women who have any regard for simplicity of attire and the general fitness of things, should appeal to newspaper publishers against the distressingly distorted, hideously deformed figures which are made to do service in the "latest styles" columns. These exhibit a standard of waist attenuation or constriction which it were a crime to attempt to imitate in practice, being modeled according to a pattern which may be aptly defined as a "physiological monstrosity."

If every Christian who trims his lamp and keeps the oil of grace up to its full supply is such a blessed benefactor to others, what a terrible thing it is for a Christian to let his light burn low or go out entirely! A traveler who once visited a lighthouse in the British Channel said to the keeper: "But what if one of your lights should go out at night?" "Never," said the keeper, "never—impossible! Sir, yonder are ships sailing to all parts of the world. If to-night my burner were out, in a few days I might hear from France or Spain, or from Scotland or America, that on such a night the lighthouse in the channel gave no warning, and some vessel had been wrecked. Ah, sir, I sometimes feel when I look at my lights, as if the eyes of the whole world were fixed on me. Go out—burn dim—never, sir, never!"—T. L. Cuyler.

IF I WERE YOU.

If I were you and had a friend
Who called a pleasant hour to spend,
I'd be polite enough to say,
"Ned, you may choose what games we'll play."
That's what I'd do.

If I were you, and went to school,
I'd never break the smallest rule;
And it should be my teacher's joy
To say she had no better boy.
And 'twould be true,
If I were you.

If I were you, I'd always tell
The truth, no matter what befell,
For two things only I despise—
A coward heart and telling lies;
And you would too,
If I were you.

If I were you I'd try my best
To do the things I here suggest;
Though since I am no one but me,
I cannot very well, you see,
Know what I'd do
If I were you.

THE BOY THAT KNEW SOMETHING.

One day a new scholar walked into our temperance school. He was a fine little fellow, bright, intelligent, respectful. He paid careful attention to the work of the school, and after he had secured a catechism he knew his lesson every time. He did not try to show off, but he knew more than we suspected, and it came out on occasion. The lesson was about alcoholic drinks as medicines, and the question was asked, "What complaints they were given for?" Frank's hand went up among others.

"Well, Frank, for what complaints have you known it offered?"

"For seasickness."

"That was on shipboard?"

"It was when I was coming over from Scotland."

"Were you seasick?"

"I was, and a lady offered me some brandy."

"What did you say to her?"

"I told her, 'No, thank you.' But she said, 'You better take it. I am sure it will do you good.'"

"What did you say then?"

"I said, 'No, thank you.'"

"Why did you not take it?"

"I knew it would do me no good."

"Indeed! Where did you learn so much?"

"In the Band of Hope I attended in Leith, Scotland."

"Tell us something you learned there."

"I learned that every disease is better cured without alcohol than with it."

Then we looked up that sentence in our catechism, and I said, "Boys, let us make that our diamond sentence." So now they recite that in concert when called for, and we hope they will all remember to act upon it. The gusto with which they repeat this diamond sentence in concert is charming.

We have other choice sentences too, and a variety of exercises, but they enjoy the regular lesson quite as well. This, too, they recite in concert, though if we could have teachers we would arrange them in classes, and have individual recitations, as they do in Sunday-school. We know very successful bands conducted in that way. Some of them have been built up by Sunday-school teachers who commenced with their own classes.

Our Scotch Frank takes his lesson with the rest and enjoys it keenly. What he had previously learned does not make him feel proud nor act foolishly. He must have been very wisely trained in that Scotch Band of Hope. We have also had scholars from English Bands of Hope that showed the good teaching they had received. The other day I met an English lady who said that the churches in England are doing grand work for the children in their Bands of Hope, for most of the churches have them in connection with their Sunday-school work. We might well have more in this country. I wish all the scholars in our Sunday-schools might know as well as Frank does that alcoholic drinks can never do them any good when taken for any purpose. They might begin at once by learning that declaration of our great text-book, the Bible—"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." There is a deal of temperance teaching in the Bible if we are willing to see it, and the boys and girls that know "something" can readily be made to see it.—The Youth's Temperance Banner.

HALLOW E'EN.

Hallow E'en is the evening preceding Hallow-day, or All Saints' Day, which is celebrated November 1, in honor of the conversion, in the seventh century, of the Pantheon at Rome into a Christian place of worship. Pope Boniface IV dedicated this day to the Virgin and all the martyrs.

No other day in the year has so many strange customs attached to it as October 31. It is the great holiday for witches, devils and fairies, and high carnival they are supposed to hold.

The birthplace and home of the weird Hallow E'en festivities are North England and Scotland. Nuts and apples are consumed in enormous quantities. In the north of England it is sometimes called "nut crack night."

Apples are used in several ways on Hallow E'en, the two most popular being, perhaps, the attempting to take a bite out of an apple suspended by a string from the ceiling without touching it with the hands, and ducking for apples in a tub. This last feat is much more difficult to perform than it at first appears to be. The tub is full of water, the apples, with and without stems, floating temptingly on the top. It does not look as if it would be at all hard to pick one up with the teeth. But at the first attempt to seize it the tantalizing apple ducks its head under the water, only to show its blooming cheeks on the opposite side of the tub a moment later.

In Scotland the first ceremony of Hallow E'en is the pulling, by each of the young people, of a stalk of kale. Each must pull the first stalk he comes to in the garden. Its being big or little, short or tall, straight or crooked, will foretell the size, shape and height of the future husband or wife. The amount of earth that clings to the root is thought to indicate the fortune or dowry.

Children born on Hallow E'en are said to be able to see and converse with fairies, witches and other supernatural beings, which reminds me that I once went to a delightful impromptu and informal Hallow E'en birthday party. The invitations were sent by telephone and messenger on the very morning of Hallow E'en, and all arrangements and plans for the evening's enjoyment were made on short notice. The rooms were lighted by candles instead of gas; pumpkin jack-o'-lanterns stood in unexpected places about the halls and rooms. The mantels were stacked with brightly polished apples, and fancy dishes of nuts and raisins, grapes, oranges, figs, dates and home-made candies were set everywhere about the rooms, and every one was expected to help himself to anything he wanted at any time. Apples were suspended from the gas fixtures, the "inggies three" were there, and many quarts of chestnuts.

At half-past eleven we turned our faces homeward, to arrive in time to see, if possible, some of the strange sights which are supposed to appear on Hallow E'en.—Selected.

465. World's W. C. T. U. Convention.

Dear Boys and Girls:—The story is told of a famous sculptor who once showed a visitor the treasures of his studio. In it were many mythical figures. One of these was so peculiar as to attract special attention. The face was hidden by being covered with hair and there were wings to each foot.

"What is his name?" asked the visitor.

"Opportunity," answered the sculptor.

"Why is his face hidden?"

"Because men seldom know him when he comes to them?"

"Why has he wings upon his feet?"

"Because he is soon gone, and once gone he cannot be overtaken."

What do you think, boys and girls,—was the sculptor's idea of opportunity a right one? Look in the dictionary and find the definition, "A time favorable for the purpose." That opportunity signifies time would account for the wings, and failure to recognize the suitableness of the time makes opportunity's face to be concealed.

Now, if opportunity is so glorious a thing to seize and make use of, we ought all to learn to know it, of course. Let me whisper to you the secret by which opportunity will never be able to give you the slip. It is PREPARATION. Now look that up in the dictionary and see how much it means. "Preparation is intended to prevent evil or secure good," says the dictionary man. Just what you want, isn't it? In school or at home learn to make ready by using every good thing that comes to you.

By being prepared, and that means on the watch, too, no opportunity will be lost in later years through your ignorance in not recognizing it and you will become a power and a live factor in helping others to make the most of themselves. Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

THE GREAT CONVENTION AT BALTIMORE.

Nearly four hundred delegates were present at the first session of the National W. C. T. U. convention, representing forty-three states and very soon thereafter the number ran up to over five hundred. Seventeen years ago when the National met in Baltimore there were but one hundred and forty-seven delegates. The membership was then rated at twenty thousand and now it has an enrollment of over three hundred thousand. These figures show something of the success which has attended the union.

Hardly had the 8:30 o'clock meeting closed before every seat in the immense Music Hall was filled, so eager were the crowds to get a glimpse of the famous president of the World's and National W. C. T. U., Miss Frances E. Willard, LL.D. At the close of Miss Willard's address a white silk banner with golden stars, presented by Madame Demorest, of New York City, was brought forward by Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin and handed to Miss Willard. This was gaily waved while Miss Willard's niece, Mrs. Baldwin, sang "The White Ribbon Star Spangled Banner," a beautiful poem written by Miss Kate Lunden, a Scandinavian who did not learn the English language till twenty years old, and which was printed on the back of the National program.

The flag to which the song referred is of pure white silk, with fifty golden stars representing the states and territories in which the union is organized. When the flag was presented and Mrs. Baldwin began to sing, all those on the platform rose to their feet and in the center of them a remarkable group was formed of which Miss Willard was the central figure. At her left was Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, the noted English reformer, and on her right "Mother" Thompson, the leader of the Hillsboro Crusade; while behind them Miss Jessie Ackermann, round-the-world missionary, recently returned from Iceland, waved over the heads of the trio a little silken American flag which she had carried one hundred and fifty thousand miles in her missionary tour; Mother Thompson in the meantime waving the white flag with enthusiastic vigor in spite of her eighty years of age, and the audience waving their handkerchiefs while they stood and joined in the last line of each verse. This was a striking scene.

Some of the forcible and characteristic sayings in Miss Willard's address were: "Ninety per cent of the boys now have a cigarette in their mouths—or wish they had. The men are decreasing in stature and the women are increasing. More men, according to the total number, do not drink at all than ever before in the history of the world. The only real world, after all, is the world of the human heart. Dying is but going from this strife land to the life land." She rejoiced that the men had put down the lottery business and organized a labor investigation committee, a thing we women have wanted for twenty years. "In the widening field of athletics all stimulation is discounted. The bicycle is the most influential temperance reformer of the time, and milk is the favorite beverage of those who ride to win. What the world waits for is not the new woman alone but the new man. 'One swallow does not make a summer,' and one parent by the hearthstone does not make a home. We need to stop singing the old ditty, 'What is home without a mother?' or put in its place, 'The father alone can make the house home.' If he spends his leisure time in what is now popularly known as the 'Working Man's Club,' a disguised name for the dramshop, and his wages are lived on by the proprietor, a new woman will be necessary to keep the home together, unless he himself becomes a new man."

Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, National corresponding secretary, made her first report. Mrs. Stevenson was given a rising vote of thanks with a Chautauqua salute when she had finished reading. She said: "Last year at Cleveland we made organization our watchword. The itemized reports show 105 unions organized in the course of the year, with 2,794 active and 509 honorary members. The total of new members secured by the organizers in both new and old unions, as recorded in official blanks, is about 5,000. This by no means exhausts the record of the new members secured."

Mrs. Helen M. Barker, who since her election by the Chicago Convention of 1893, has been treasurer of the National union, also made her report. An increase in numbers in the National union's membership was shown over last year, although the present fiscal year only covers eleven months, against thirteen months included in last year's report. Pennsylvania is the banner state, although New York gained so largely that it would have been the banner state had it not been for the fact that a large number of members with dues were reported to the National treasurer after the close of New York's fiscal year and before the close of the National fiscal year.

The total receipts of this year were shown to be $23,038.96; total expenditures, $18,059.37, leaving a balance in the treasury, after all bills are paid, of $4,979.59.

For the weightier matters of Miss Willard's address and the full particulars of the great Convention, our readers must await next week's UNION SIGNAL—our special Convention number.

AN IMPENDING CONFLICT.

The liquor power is quick to recognize a temperance law with teeth in it. It bears with surprising equanimity any amount of laws which read well on the statute books, but whose execution is attended with such degree of difficulty that the violators thereof need fear conviction and punishment only now and then; laws attended with so slight inconvenience that it is better policy not to draw public attention by resistance. A very modest and retiring man is the individual rumseller.

Sunday closing in the cities means cutting off a liberal seventh of the weekly income which is worth fighting for. With what glee must his Satanic majesty view the serious proposition to submit a commandment of the Decalogue to the popular vote of corrupt cities!

The Nicholson law is causing the politicians of Indiana a good deal of trouble. It is a measure which the people can take hold of and make use of. The old evasions and perjuries and misuse of the courts do not protect as they once did. It gives the prohibition Archimedes ground for his lever, and the liquor element has pronounced its ultimatum—it must go. The capitol city has been carried in an election by the party which is confidently expected to declare against the law, although this will much embarrass some very decent men who strongly persist in belonging to such a party; while leaders of the opposite faction will, it is said, insist in executive session upon giving a pledge to repeal the Nicholson law in obedience to rum rule, or give up all hope of carrying the gubernatorial election. The tender mercies of the politician are apt to be synonymous with those of the wicked and we can but be apprehensive of the result. What degree of comfort can a Christian man experience in either of these political parties?

In another state, two eminent members of two great evangelical churches contest for the governorship. One openly declares that, if elected, the demands of the "Liberal League," which is indorsed and promised financial assistance by the National Liquor League shall be granted.

The other, when questioned by the Methodist conference, says he thinks, "that men have been growing more charitable toward the views of other men;" like Pontius Pilate washing his hands of the matter, he is willing to leave it all to the legislature where he considers that it belongs, and he sees "no reason why the will of the people properly and fairly expressed through their chosen representatives should be ignored or set aside."

In other words, if the national rum power, by the use of all its corrupt and illegitimate means, shall succeed in electing a legislature to work its will, he, a professed and active Christian, will sign its measures! What are the reflections of Christian men in the political fellowship which has created these venal leaders?

There is another party in the field which stands in uncompromising opposition to these ungodly demands. It has a right to every Christian ballot in that great state, and the world waits to see what the various Christian organizations of that commonwealth have meant by their declarations and resolutions which have seemed to ring so true.

Many a man nowadays makes devotion to his particular political faction a substitute for patriotism. Instead of using his political relations as a means to a desired end he seeks to invest them with permanence, and renders to them the allegiance due the government itself. Instead of regarding party simply as an engine to work his will, useless to him when it no longer does so, it becomes to him as a living, sentient thing which he loves—which his disloyalty would wound—which it would be treason to desert, even though it does not go the way he would have it.

A very curious thing indeed is party idolatry. It is the cause of a very vicious state of things. Men smother their individual convictions for the sake of party success. They may differ widely, but nobody steps over the traces when the tug of war is on. The demoralizing thing is that this is not confined to economics but questions of conscience, integrity, moral principle, go down beneath the Juggernaut car of party interest.

All that hinders the establishment of the prohibition principle as applied to the liquor trade is the fact that the men who believe in it belong on the one hand to a party whose majority maintains the monstrous proposition that sacred personal liberty includes freedom to do that which imperils society, or, on the other, to a party which cannot sacrifice its liquor minority without suffering at least temporary loss of power.

We have expected the break to come through the alliance of all these men who acknowledge the righteousness of the prohibition idea, but the process is to be less direct. There are few bee-line courses in this world. Even our prayers are answered with curious indirectness. The bitterness of long continued opposition is not so easily overcome. A general disintegration from various causes must first destroy the bond of union and weaken old ties. When the final recast of forces does take place, right will be arrayed against wrong, and there is nothing to supersede the struggle for salvation from the powers of hell combined in one great universal liquor league.

THE WORKING OF THE LEAVEN.

Our readers will doubtless remember the coincidence that a year ago the state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ohio and the Ohio State Liquor League met at the same time in Cincinnati. They will also remember that the mayor of that city welcomed both organizations. This sleight-of-hand political feat was scarcely more amusing than the utterly noncommittal and meaningless address with which the mayor of Cleveland later welcomed the National W. C. T. U. Convention to that city. We rejoice to learn that there is one mayor in Ohio who dares refuse to welcome a liquor association. The same Liquor League has recently had its annual meeting in Springfield, Ohio, and Mayor Mast declined the honor (?) of making said association an address of welcome. His action, of course, aroused great indignation on the part of saloon supporters, and the gentleman who made the address exhausted the language in finding terms of abuse for such "cranks" as Mayor Mast.

It is good to see that our enemies themselves being the judges, the cause of Prohibition is rapidly gaining strength in the state where recently the presiding elders of the Methodist church called their brother ministers to decisive warfare. The president of the Liquor League of Ohio in his address says:

"I have been through the mill and will predict that unless the liquor men, who have millions of dollars invested, come closer together, become more thoroughly organized, discard all petty jealousies and work as a unit, there will be legislation railroaded through the next legislature that will wipe seventy-five per cent of the liquor dealers out of the business.

"Few of you are fully aware of the powerful organization that has been effected throughout the state by Rev. Howard Russell, devoted entirely to this view of your business. He was our most bitter enemy in the Ohio legislature two years ago. He, with his aides, came near pushing legislation through the house of representatives that would have meant death to the liquor traffic. Since then he has tripled the strength of the Anti-Saloon League."

When we spoke of the action of the presiding elders some time ago, we said that if the Christian people would rally to the support of these men as they should, the liquor traffic in Ohio was doomed. Evidently liquor men are reading the handwriting on the wall. All honor to the Rev. Howard Russell, who has done such noble and effective work for the cause of prohibition. His friends, however, need to provide him with a bodyguard who shall be in constant attendance upon his person. Experience has too sadly proved that, though a great honor, it is a most perilous one for a man to be recognized as an active and effective opponent of the liquor traffic.

Since our editorial on "Temperance in Atlanta," there has been a new development in the matter of allowing the saloons to remain open until midnight. A member of the council proposed an ordinance permitting any saloon to keep open until twelve o'clock which should pay sixty-five dollars per month for the privilege, the money to be expended in hiring extra policemen for the city. The member who made the proposition said that there was not money enough in the city treasury to properly police the city during the exposition, and urged their duty to protect the lives of the people who would flock to Atlanta during that time. The almighty dollar triumphed and the council passed the ordinance. But the mayor, who lays no claim to being a temperance man, vetoed the bill on the ground that the people of Atlanta had clearly shown that they did not want the saloons open until midnight and that this was no proper way of raising money for the city. No attempt was made to pass the ordinance over the mayor's veto. Verily, a wonderful city is Atlanta, when the manifest wish of preachers and other "cranks" actually outweighs the money of the liquor men! All honor to Mayor King and all honor to Georgia Prohibitionists who make their sentiments felt so strongly that even the supporters of the liquor traffic feel compelled to respect those sentiments lest worse things come upon them.

THE FIRST NATIONAL PURITY CONGRESS.

All of the meetings of this congress were of a very remarkable character, and the gathering was the first of its kind. Every phase of the general work was reviewed, and theories and practical results were carefully compared. The congress was attended by immense audiences, composed of the most intelligent and refined people of the cultured city in which it was held. Young men and maidens sat side by side with philosophical age, and listened attentively to sentiments new to many of them—recitals which started the tear and stirred the heart to purer life, and for a sacrifice of self for the betterment of those with less favorable environment.

Among the many important papers presented it is hard to choose. Mr. B. O. Flower, editor of The Arena, said he believed the abolition of drink would result in an inconceivable diminution of immorality, and he condemned the guilty silence called modesty, which withholds proper knowledge from children instead of thoroughly instructing them.

In a paper written by Mr. Elbridge T. Gerry, of New York, president of the Society of Cruelty to Children, the following were noted as prolific sources of child prostitution: Factories, which were still regarded as mills where material is ground out of which prostitutes are made; the schools; vanity—love of dress and desire to make money easily; the stage, pernicious leg drama; posing as models for artists; girls selling flowers, papers, etc.; picnics and dime museums.

Mrs. Mariana W. Chapman, president of the Brooklyn Woman's Club, read a strong, thoughtful paper on "Equal Suffrage as Related to the Purity Movement." She asserted that women were the greatest sufferers from the social evil, and that primarily whoever uses a ballot will use it to protect himself. Vice can best be checked at the ballot-box. The women of Kentucky with voice and pen besought the men to stand for the honor of Kentucky. Where the gulf is greatest between men and women morals are the lowest. Wage-earning women need more power to protect themselves.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, one of our noted W. C. T. U. women and one of the leading purity workers of the world, having been introduced, said in part: "Legalized vice puts women on a lower plane—a matter of commodity in which men are the gainers. I could not bear to think that any state regulation of vice would ever obtain here, where women can move about so freely, protected by the honor in the American man's heart, for after all, that must ever be the chief protection for women.

"Nothing can prevent the state regulation of vice but such agitation as this. One good thing the W. C. T. U. does is to keep things stirred up. There should be no protection of the liquor traffic or other evils. We will have the liquor traffic as long as we have prostitution." We may add with equal truthfulness that we will have prostitution as long as we have the liquor traffic.

The sentiments and convictions of this truly great Purity Congress crystallized in the following affirmations offered by President A. M. Powell, and were unanimously adopted:

1. That chastity, a pure, continent life alike for man and woman, is consonant with the best conditions of physical, mental and moral health.
2. That prostitution is a fundamental violation of the laws of health, degrading and destructive to the individual, a menace to the home and to the nation.
3. That state or municipal regulation of prostitution is morally wrong, is worse than a sanitary failure, is cruel and unjust to women, creates a shocking traffic in girlhood, and is an incitement to debauchery.
4. That the state should punish by imprisonment, rather than by fine, organized prostitution, procurism, the keepers of houses of prostitution, and the rental of houses of other dwellings for such purposes.
5. That facilities be provided for the treatment of venereal diseases as readily as for all other diseases in all hospitals under the control of municipalities or other public bodies, as well as in those supported by voluntary contributions.
6. That homes should be everywhere established by municipal and state, as well as voluntary aid, and as agencies for the reclamation and rehabilitation of erring girls.
7. That all possible effort should be made to educate aright public opinion, and to maintain a high, equal standard of morals for both men and women.
8. That the hearty congratulations of this National Purity Congress are hereby extended to Josephine E. Butler and her European co-workers of the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice on their crusade for the abolition of the odious system of state-sanctioned debauchery, and the promotion of personal and public morality.

The ice which has bound the public conscience on the subject of purity has been broken, and we may look for a flood of saving warmth and power to deluge our land.

Mrs. Ellen Battelle Dietrich had a timely and thoughtful paper at the recent Woman's National Council in Atlanta, representing the committee on divorce. Her account of the history of divorce as made known by recent investigations, was exceedingly interesting. It is now admitted that the first form of divorce was what is known as the matriarchal, that is, the power of divorce lay entirely in the hands of the woman, the father had no rights to his children. A change came about which completely reversed this condition of things and placed all family power in the hands of the man. This was caused by the custom which obtained of men capturing in war maidens whom they held as wives but at their own option could divorce. From that time, men have held, in most unfair degree, the control of divorce customs. The committee on divorce represents no stated views as to the grounds upon which divorce should be granted. Its sole purpose is to obtain for women an equal power concerning divorce laws. It seems the height of absurdity, yet it is the truth, that there is now in our country what is known as the National Divorce Reform League which is managed and controlled solely by men. The object of this association is the very desirable one of securing uniform divorce laws over the country. Women are allowed to become associate members and to contribute five dollars annually, but, although the League has secured the appointment of commissions in twenty-three states on uniform divorce legislation, not a woman has been made a member of one of these commissions. The absurdity, the amazing presumption of men taking it upon themselves to settle this matter, is beyond the power of language to characterize. It is well that some association of women is making it its business to try to secure equal say for women in a matter which is quite as much theirs as any one's else.

The "ever feminine" is largely in evidence at the Atlanta Exposition. The series of Woman's Congresses was fittingly opened in the Assembly hall of the Woman's Building, October 7, by the National Council of Women, a body representing twenty organizations and seven hundred thousand women. It was presided over by Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson. The King's Daughters convened on the 14th; the National American Woman Suffrage Association, Miss Susan B. Anthony presiding, occupied the 17th; Daughters of the American Revolution the 18th; Colonial Dames, the 19th; World's Fair Board of Lady Managers, with Mrs. Potter Palmer at its head, the 22d; National Woman's Press Association has from the 22d to the 26th. Then came the Educational Congresses which will occupy October 26 to 30. Household Economics will be discussed the 30th and 31st; the General Federation of Women's Clubs has November 1 and 2, and the Association for the Advancement of Women the 4th; W. C. T. U. day is November 5; Women Librarians are to tell about their work in the United States; Women Bee Keepers will be heard from; the Daughters of the Confederacy will speak for the women of the South, and the various Press Clubs and religious councils have assigned to the "sisteren" prominent places on their programs. The congresses will close December 31, with a meeting of the International Folk Lore Association.

An important change in the constitution of the World's W. C. T. U. has been inaugurated in the form of a notice to the World's executive committee presented by Mrs. H. J. Osborn, of England, Mrs. Helen M. Barker and Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman of the United States, and warmly supported by Miss Willard. This notice is in effect that the officers of the W. W. C. T. U. shall be nominated by the World's executive committee, but that these nominations shall be subject to the action of the convention. This is done in order that our great World's union, having grown to such international importance, may conform in its autonomy to the most acceptable and recognized system of electoral privileges.

Lydia Maria Child added this to the beatitudes: "Blessed are the missionaries of cheerfulness."

The Japanese Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in 1893. Its motto is, "This one thing I do." Its headquarters are at Tokyo.

A comic fatality seems to pursue the opponents of equal rights for women, impelling each of them to choose the most incongruous argument possible. Whenever woman suffrage is under discussion in the legislature the representatives of the liquor interest are loud in their fears that it would impair the happiness of the home. Four years ago a number of members of Congress were interviewed for a symposium on suffrage in a New York paper. Among them was Breckinridge. He declared himself unalterably opposed to woman suffrage, because "it would affect the present relation between husband and wife."

The Wesleyan conference which declined to admit women, permitted the introduction to the president and conference of the Baroness Langenau of Vienna, vice-president of the W. C. T. U. in Austria. The Baroness has given generously to Methodist missions in London and in Austria, and the brethren did not seem to fear lest the "deterioration of Methodism" might result from her presence on the platform. Further comment would be superfluous. The immense galleries of the auditorium in which the conference was held were more densely crowded during the debate on the admission of women than at any other hour. The Methodist Times truly says that it is an instance of the fact with which all philosophic students of history are familiar—that the deep native impulse of the people is on moral issues much more prescient and trustworthy than the logical processes and their rulers. Official persons and privileged classes are generally the very last to discern the signs of the times.

Some one has proposed to add to the attractiveness of Young Men's Christian Associations in England by annexing smoking rooms thereto! The remedy for such unattractive associations is not tobacco but religion.

There is no enthusiasm in England against the House of Lords except among the trades unions, and even they are by no means a unit on this subject. This is a fact that whatever we may think about it speaks volumes in favor of the titled classes in Great Britain. If they were not full of good works for those depending upon them we should have such a rising as would raze their castles and manor-houses to the ground.

Rev. Mr. Talmage, in one of his sermons thus outlined the "Gates of Hell:" Gate the first, impure literature; gate the second, the dissolute dance; gate the third, indiscreet apparel; gate the fourth, alcoholic beverage. "The wine cup is the patron of impurity," he said, speaking of the last "gate." "The officers of the law tell us that nearly all the men who go into the shambles of death go in intoxicated, the mental and the spiritual abolished that the brute may triumph. Tell me that a young man drinks and I know the whole story. If he becomes the captive of the wine cup he will become a captive of all other vices; only give him time. No one ever runs drunkenness alone. That is a carrion crow that goes in a flock; and when you see that beak ahead you may know the other beaks are coming. In other words, the wine cup unbalances and dethrones one's better judgment and leaves one the prey of all evil appetites that may choose to alight upon his soul. There is not a place of any kind of sin in the United States to-day that does not find its chief abettor in the chalice of inebriacy. There is either a drinking bar before, or one behind, or one above or one underneath. These people escape legal penalty because they are all licensed to sell liquor. The courts that license the sale of strong drink, license gambling houses, license libertinism, license disease, license death, license all sufferings, all crimes, all despoliations, all disasters, all murders, all woe. It is the courts and the legislature that are swinging wide open this grinding, creaky, stupendous gate of the lost."

On Duty.

PENNSYLVANIA.

FIRST AMONG STATES.

Hurrah for the old Keystone state!
Hurrah for the old Keystone state!
Singing "Glory to God in the Highest,"
Three cheers for the old Keystone state!

This was the triumphant song that swelled into a mighty chorus as the "tried and the true" gathered at Harrisburg, October 11, to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the grandest organization of women ever formed. Every heart beat high with pride and eyes shone with the light of victory, for had we not won Miss Willard? Had we not reached the goal for which we had been striving and come up to the state capital to celebrate the attaining of our majority, with a paid-up constituency of twenty-one thousand?

Mrs. Hammer came to us out of the shadow of her deep bereavement, a light upon her face such as they wear who have stood upon the Mount of Transfiguration, her eyes fixed, not upon the grave of her departed, but upon the mansions where they will be reunited.

The consecration meeting of Thursday night set the keynote for the convention. The church was in holiday attire, with waving palms, festoons of white and yellow, and Old Glory gleaming out radiantly from pillar, arch and balcony, ribbons white everywhere. Sixty-seven neat bannerettes waved above the pews showing where the different delegations were to sit, and as Mrs. Chambers announced that every one of the sixty-seven counties of the state was organized and had its regularly appointed delegates, the convention rose and sang, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

The first day was taken up with the routine business of the convention, reading of reports and appointment of committees.

WELCOMING THE DELEGATES.

The evening session was a brilliant affair. Upon the platform were seated, beside our own state officers, Governor and Mrs. Hastings, Mr. Benjamin M. Nead, representative for Mayor Eby, Rev. Mr. Graeff representing the ministerial association, and Mrs. Maggie Stees, representing the Dauphin county W. C. T. U.

Governor Hastings first extended greetings. "We all know what you have been doing and want to know more about you," he said. "Your order is of age to-night—twenty-one years since you first organized. What a great record you have made! What a world of good you have accomplished! What a vast amount remains for you yet to do."

The greeting of Mr. Nead was earnest and eloquent. Mrs. Stees' welcome in behalf of her county had the sparkle of humor and flash of wit that is characteristic of our women. Mrs. Olive Pond Amies, state recording secretary, gracefully and eloquently responded for the state W. C. T. U. and Miss Luella Crawford for the Y. The music was of a high order, and every one pronounced the occasion most delightful.

SATURDAY'S SESSIONS

were crowded with important business. There were flashes of wit, music sweet and grand, short, complimentary addresses from clergymen and notable visitors, a Bible-reading by Mary Sparkes Wheeler, the solemn noontide prayer, presentation of banners, echoes from the World's Convention at London, an able address by C. Wesley Burns, state president of the L. T. L., and enough good things to fill a page. In the evening came the deep, forceful address of Mrs. Louise Rounds, Illinois' president.

After the address followed

THE GOVERNOR'S RECEPTION.

His private carriage conveyed Mrs. Hammer and her aids to the state house where she, with Mrs. Stees, assisted Governor and Mrs. Hastings in receiving. The rooms were beautifully decorated with palms and potted plants, streamers and bows of white ribbon. Refreshments were served and all the treasures of the state capitol thrown open for inspection. "Never before," said a spectator, "did the doors of the state house open to receive such a representative body of citizens." After nearly two hours of most delightful and informal sociability the ladies gathered around the galleries and upon the staircases leading from the main entrance hall, and led by Mrs. Erdman, and accompanied by the orchestra, sang, "Pennsylvania, the Gem of the Nation," a hymn which was especially prepared by Mrs. Hammer.

Our leader bade our noble host and hostess a graceful farewell and added that she hoped we might all assemble there again, to rejoice over the victory of prohibition and have this same governor on a new platform.

Sunday morning Mrs. Louise Rounds preached the convention sermon. A large number of pulpits throughout the city were filled by women, to the general satisfaction of the various congregations.

A MAMMOTH L. T. L. MEETING was held Sunday afternoon addressed by Miss Anna Gordon and others. Mrs. Emily Marlin also gave an address Sabbath afternoon.

Miss Willard was to speak in Grace M. E. church in the evening, and long before the hour for opening crowds large enough to fill half a dozen such churches blocked the sidewalk and street. Mrs. Annabel Morris Holvey, who filled the Ridge Avenue M. E. pulpit in the morning, was called to speak to the overflow meeting.

THE ADDRESS OF MISS WILLARD

was one of her best—nothing else remains to be told. It was Miss Willard with her beautiful ideas, her heart-searching appeals, her inimitable manner. It was our leader come to us as the reward for having gained the most new members of any state in the Union, and we felt that no laurel crown could be half so acceptable. After holding her audience in the main building for an hour, she graciously consented to give a short address to the overflow meeting, which was highly appreciated.

BUSINESS SESSIONS.

On Monday morning the women settled down to business, none the less earnestly for having been carried up to the heights all day Sabbath. Miss Willard looked in upon us and gave a short address of encouragement and commendation. Mrs. Rounds followed with an impressive Bible reading. Forty delegates were elected to attend the National Convention at Baltimore. The annual election resulted in retaining Mrs. Hammer as president. Mrs. Rebecca Chambers having declined reëlection, Miss H. Frances Jones, of Philadelphia, was made corresponding secretary; Mrs. Olive Pond Amies, recording secretary; Mrs. Wm. H. Woods, treasurer, and Mrs. J. F. Hill, vice-president-at-large. Among the notables present beside those already mentioned, was Miss Ruth Schaffner, who had been in Iceland during the summer. She gave in a few words some of the delights of that trip and its happy results for white ribbon work.

Mrs. Lucy Thurman, of Michigan, made an eloquent address in behalf of her race. Mrs. Narcissa White-Kinney brought greetings from Oregon to the women of her native state, among whom she worked so faithfully for years. A large number of clergymen came with and assurances of coöperation. One minister told us he was in attendance upon the M. E. Conference that took two hours to discuss the advisability of giving Miss Willard a few minutes in which to speak to the conference, and at last decided that they did not have time to do so. It is needless to say that he did not vote with that degenerate brotherhood, and he lived to reap the reward of his noble and generous attitude towards women by having this world's "uncrowned queen" speak from his pulpit to the largest crowd that ever gathered in any church in Harrisburg.

Mrs. Lacy, of Warren, presented some startling fac concerning the Armenian atrocities, and showed to the convention pieces of the "hunger bread" upon which the refugees were forced to subsist.

Twenty-eight superintendents presented reports of department work, all showing marked improvement and an ever deepening interest.

Monday night was

and our young girls formed a picture fair to look upon. Special music had been prepared by some of the city's finest vocalists. Miss Crawford gave a recitation, "A True Incident of the Crusade." The principal feature of the evening was an address by Miss Frances H. Ensign, of Madison, O., upon "The New Woman." It was bright, animated and witty.

The convention closed at noon, Tuesday, with a beautiful Bible reading by Mrs. Hammer.

COLORADO.

A ROYAL (GORGE) CONVENTION.

Colorado is such a terra incognita to Easterners, that I am sure the host, who, speeding to the Pacific coast, have looked with awe at the sublime scenery of the Royal Gorge have seldom given a thought to the lovely town just at its entrance which opened its hospitable doors to welcome the sixteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Colorado, October 2d.

Canon City is set like a gem in a mountain horseshoe through which flows the rapid Arkansas, and here grows with a luxuriance unknown this side of the Californian valleys every variety of luscious fruits and berries known to our zone.

Just the week before the arrival of our white-ribboners, "Fruit Day," the harvest festival of these happy people, had been celebrated, when from a huge pavilion, they had poured with generous profusion the products of their orchards and vineries into the laps of ten thousand visitors.

Not less cordial were they to us when assembled in a commodious church, beautifully decorated in our honor, with our beloved president, Mrs. Eva C. Higgins, in the chair, we received the welcome of the city through Mr. Atwater, the churches, through Rev. Mr. Thompson, and the local W. C. T. U. through Mrs. Alice J. Harris; all of them lovingly appreciative of our work and promising us hearty sympathy and coöperation for the future.

Mrs. Wrigley of Denver, replied in her own sparkling manner, and the choir with exceptionally good taste followed with a true white ribbon song. Mrs. Graham, of Ohio, closed the program with an address on the "Great Convention," full of suggestiveness and information.

At one of the earlier sessions so many "Crusaders" were introduced that there was a suspicion created that we were all Buckeyes, and a rising test being called for, we found there were, in our body, fourteen who participated in that famous uprising of outraged motherhood, which preceded the birth of our organization, five of whom were in the original Ohio movement.

Owing to the fact that we have a "corner" on climate, our ranks are more frequently enriched from the skilled workers of other states than might otherwise be the case, and we were glad to note many such in this convention. One of these (Mrs. Howell, for many years of New York) we have sent as our delegate to the National, for, unfortunately, our eight hundred and forty-six members entitles us to but one.

The reports, considering the sparsity of our population and the financial stress under which we labor, were most encouraging and our president's annual address even better and more inspiring than heretofore. We missed from our councils the familiar presence of our secretary, Mrs. Teetor, and were glad to return her greeting from the far east. Her place as state corresponding secretary has been supplied since she left by Mrs. Howard, of Denver, from whose report I glean the cheering item, that our unions have raised and expended during the year $9,464.30, and that, too, when reports were only received from thirty-five unions out of sixty-six.

The departments most widely taken up are the evangelistic, mothers' meetings, L. T. L. work, medal contest, literature, scientific temperance instruction and cottage home.

We have also sustained a state paper, which, owing to the self-sacrificing labors of Mrs. Howard and Mrs. S. M. Likens, closed the year without debt. Six free reading rooms and one employment bureau have also been successfully maintained, while five hundred and six gospel temperance meetings have been held and twenty-four lectures given.

The secretary notes that before the ballot was given to the women, only two prohibition towns existed in the state, while now there are eight with more sure to follow, a result surely to be credited to the work of our citizen sisters.

The struggle of the week was upon the adoption of a new constitution more in harmony with the National, and as it was considered sentence by sentence, we were all ready to sing the doxology when it was finally adopted.

Among the notable changes made were the division of the state into nineteen districts, and the consequent discontinuance of county organizations; the exclusion of superintendents from the executive committee, and the substitution of the informal ballot for open nominations.

The state penitentiary is located at Canon City, and the earnest local superintendent of prison work, Mrs. Lutz, arranged for a meeting in the prison chapel. It was a never-to-be-forgotten scene, and when our gentle president asked all among those six hundred prisoners who could do so, to repeat the twenty-third Psalm, our hearts were all touched by the response that came from all parts of the room.

Addresses were made by a number of our ladies, a prison choir and orchestra of no mean ability furnishing the music, with the notable exception of "Wait, Mister Postman," sung by a sweet little girl in white, a part of the program which seemed to me more intensely enjoyed by those homeless men than any other.

A few years ago an attractive young woman related from this same platform, to a similar audience, Victor Hugo's matchless story of "Les Miserables." She filled two hours with breathless interest, and since that time six copies of the book are in constant demand in the prison and it is always included in every new addition to the library. There is a flourishing school sustained by the prisoners, the college graduates among their number composing the "faculty."

At the close of the chapel service carriages were found in readiness to take delegates through the beautiful valley that they might feast their eyes on orchards still glowing with the unforbidden fruits of this genial clime, though, as usual, the unfortunate executive committee "couldn't play" because they had to work. However, in common with the rest of us, they partook at hospitable tables, of the October crop of strawberries, delicious as if it were June, and were made welcome to delightful homes in such hearty fashion as made those four days in Canon City a most happy vacation.

On the evening of October 3 was held the gold medal contest for the benefit of the local union, and although it rained the house was full and presumably the local white ribbon purse. Three of the recitations were exceptionally fine, "The Home versus the Saloon," as given by Miss Harrison, winning the prize, presented in a very happy speech by Mrs. Telford.

Through the mud next morning we plodded to the election, and the customary renomination of Mrs. Higgins had hardly been made, when she arose and very sweetly but very firmly declined to serve us in the capacity of president another year, her health being very much broken already by the cares and responsibilities of the office she has filled so long and so acceptably.

Regretting not only this action but the necessity which compelled it, we were yet glad to know that we had one among us thoroughly qualified to fill this important position. It was not, therefore, surprising that when Mrs. Mary G. Telford, of Grand Junction, was nominated, we all recognized the coming woman, and elected her president on the first ballot by the decisive majority of 68 to 17.

The other officers elected were: Mrs. M. A. Cassell, of Denver, vice-president; Mrs. Alderdyce, of Pueblo, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Hicks, of Highlands, recording secretary; Mrs. Sprague, of Denver, treasurer. Well as we have loved Mrs. Higgins, we know that the interests of the state will be safe in the hands of Mrs. Telford, who is well and favorably known from one end of it to the other. She is an able presiding officer, as well as a writer and speaker of marked ability, and we look hopefully forward to a year of progress and achievement.

IOWA.

PROGRESS AND PLANS FOR ANOTHER YEAR.

It was not my privilege to attend the state convention, which was held in the large, elegant new M. E. church at Marshalltown, October 8–11, and no copy of the proceedings has reached me, but correspondents unanimously declare that it was fine. One hundred and eighteen delegates were in attendance. The old officers were reëlected: President, Mrs. Marion H. Dunham; corresponding secretary, Miss Belle H. Mix; recording secretary, Miss Addie Estey; treasurer, Mrs. L. D. Carhart.

New departments were taken up, as follows: Politics and Christian citizenship, evangelistic training schools combined with evangelistic department, unfermented wine in connection with Sabbath observance, parliamentary drill and physical culture.

We are to petition the legislature to raise the age of protection to eighteen years; for equal suffrage, for a compulsory reformatory for incorrigible girls over sixteen, and for compulsory education and manual training in public schools.

Hon. John P. St. John, of Kansas, gave a brief address to the convention on Friday morning, to the great pleasure of all.

The convention was favored with the presence of Mrs. C. F. Grow, business manager of the W. T. P. A., and of Miss Clara A. Stephens, formerly editor of our Iowa Signal.

A bright young woman from Cedar Falls left her school to attend the convention, and was so well plased with what she saw and learned that she will try and organize a Somerset Y in her school. Would that this might be done in scores of similar schools.

We are to have a state paper of our own, edited by Mrs. L. D. Carhart. White-ribboners of Iowa are requested to make a note of this, and to write Mrs. Carhart at Marion, Ia., for further information.

The blessed old Willard union of Charles City has been resurrected by Henrietta Skelton; has taken a fresh, strong lease of life, and begins the year with more than thirty members, all loyal to their first love, the National union, with Mrs. Catherine Beach, founder of Cottage Home, in Denver, Col., for president.

Unions have been organized in Decorah, Arlington, Garden Grove, and a Y at Strawberry Point, by Mrs. C. H. Howe, who, I am glad to report, has been secured for our state lecturer and organizer another year. She has gained over three hundred new members for us the past year.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton and Mrs. Unruh will devote some time to work here after National Convention.

Politicians are stretching and straining every attainable cord to secure a governor and a legislature that shall blot out prohibition and give us a license law, and a law for the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, while conferences and assemblies of Christian men are resolving strongly against these evils. But we shall see on the fifth of November whether they are as strong at the ballot-box as in resolutions.

Proud Iowa! "God forgive her! She's a-kneelin' with the rest," at the hideous, cloven feet of Bacchus and Gambrinus.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

A SCORE AND TWO YEARS OF LABOR.

The W. C. T. U. of New Hampshire held their twenty-second annual convention in the city of Franklin, Oct. 1, 2 and 3, and never in the history of this organization has it been accorded a more whole souled welcome.

This wide-awake little city is located in the valley of the Pemigewassit, and upon the beautiful hills overlooking its junction with the Winnipiseogee, where the busy Merrimac is formed and started on its journey to the ocean, a river said to turn more spindles than any other in the world. With sunny skies above us, surrounded by an atmosphere of the most cordial hospitality, the white-ribboners of New Hampshire had every inducement to take up the work of the convention with clear heads and happy hearts.

The convention opened in the Christian church whose attractive interior was made more beautiful by lovely plants and the banners of the various counties and unions. Our dearly loved president, Miss C. R. Wendell, presided, and about one hundred and twenty-five delegates and superintendents represented the one hundred and more unions in the state besides many visitors.

The address of welcome from the local union was given by Miss Clara E. Rowell, an address so sincere and perfect that our satisfaction in the welcome was fully equaled by our pride in her abilities. She has been for many years a valued state officer. She was followed by the Rev. J. H. Bliss, who welcomed the convention in the name of the city and the churches, and by the city marshal, S. H. Robie, who stated that the leading citizens were opposed to the liquor traffic and that there were no open saloons in Franklin.

In the concise and able address of our president, Miss C. R. Wendell, of Dover, we were gladdened by the work accomplished, and stimulated to good work for the future. The report of Miss C. N. Brown, corresponding secretary, plainly showed a growth of interest in the work. A chorus of young ladies furnished delightful music under the direction of Mrs. Mary A. Richardson.

On Wednesday and Thursday the exercises of the convention were held in the fine opera house at Franklin Falls. Of the twenty-eight departments of work undertaken in the state, twenty-five were represented by papers and able addresses by superintendents. Lack of space forbids mention save in a most general manner. There has been great growth of interest in "work among railroad men," under the superintendence of Mrs. Cummings, of Hudson, and Mrs. G. B. Haley, of East Barrington, has been very active in securing homes for homeless children.

The agent for our state paper, The Outlook, Mrs. Abbott, of Rochester, so ably presented its needs that its subscription list was nearly doubled during the convention. "Temperance Literature," Mrs. Bowers, of Nashua, "Jail and Almshouse Work," Miss Kidder, of Newport, "State and County Fairs," Mrs. Bean, East Rochester, "Legislation," Mrs. Carpenter, of Concord, and "Non-alcoholics in Medicines," Mrs. Fitts, South Newmarket, were all finely presented.

Mrs. Loyne, of Jefferson, gave a short address upon the needs of her department, "Work among Lumbermen." Dr. Ellen Wallace, of Manchester, presented "Hygiene and Heredity," in an effective manner; Mrs. E. W. Rowell made an earnest appeal for the careful training of the young. The matron of "Mercy Home," Miss Hurd, of Manchester, gave a description of the home life, and some of its needs. Most enjoyable music was furnished by Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Renvaf and Mr. Baker, of Franklin.

A report of the World's Convention in London was given by Mrs. Kate Brown, of Whitefield, who attended as delegate. She expressed great satisfaction in the reception accorded by our English sisters, and pictured in a bright and happy manner the many receptions and excursions provided for the entertainment of the visiting delegates.

Mrs. E. M. Keith, of Worcester, superintendent of work among railroad men in Massachusetts, was presented to the convention, and made a stirring speech. Mrs. S. A. Blodgett, of Franklin, who has been the promoter of the movement to secure a state board of charities, gave an interesting account of her success.

Telegrams of greeting were exchanged with the Massachusetts and Connecticut conventions, also the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, then convened at Manchester. A great treat was afforded the delegates by the Franklin union, which provided carriages for a visit to the Franklin Orphans' Home. This institution is most ably managed by the Rev. Mr. Noyes and his wife. It was once the home of Daniel Webster. The buildings are admirably fitted for the work, the large new building used as a nursery being especially fine.

The committee on resolutions presented many valuable resolutions, which met with the approval of the convention. To Mrs. Calley, president of the Franklin union, and Miss Mary Rowell, chairman of the reception committee, our heartfelt thanks are due for their successful efforts in behalf of our entertainment.

Thursday evening the state banner was given in charge of the Francestown union, as they have more than doubled their membership during the past year. The L. T. L. banner is still held by the L. T. L. of Henniker. Fine music was rendered by a ladies' quartette, under the direction of Mrs. Parker, of Franklin. The closing event of the convention was a brilliant lecture by John G. Woolley upon the theme, "Wine is a mocker." He was listened to by a large and interested audience.

OHIO.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Ohio state union met in its twenty-second annual convention at Lima, October 4 to 6, Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, president, in the chair. After the opening Scripture lesson and prayer, the credentials were collected, showing members present 223.

The president gave her annual address, which was masterful and all comprehensive, and would honor any National Convention. After noting the advance made by reform hosts during the year, and pointing out clearly the open doors, and those needing to be pushed a little in the year before us, she gave a clear note on single tax which will surely lead her constituency to a careful study of that great question. The Ohio women are justly proud of their president, whose consecration to the work of Christ's kingdom is so entire that her active efforts in its behalf have not abated though she has passed through the deep waters of affliction since we last met in state convention.

Many fraternal delegates and visitors were presented to the convention and gave messages of good cheer. Rev. Mary J. Borden, president of New Mexico, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, National secretary of the Y Branch, New York, Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, Mr. F. W. Woodbridge, Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, the ministers of the city, the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and others were among our visitors, and on Thursday the Silver Lake Quartette, which sang for us in their inspiring fashion.

Mrs. Abigail J. Hadley, state superintendent of peace, spoke instructively for twenty minutes on that much needed topic and presented the "peace flag," our national colors bordered with white, recommending that it be placed on every schoolhouse, and the children taught its deep significance.

The report of our state paper, The Ohio Messenger, showed it to be on an entirely self-supporting basis.

The World's convention—a symposium by our ten delegates to that great meeting was a delightful feature, gave to us a vivid picture of the convention and every enjoyment connected with it. These papers gave such pleasure they were ordered compiled and published in pamphlet form. Mother Stewart, the distinguished heroine of the World's great meeting, was unable to be with us because of severe illness and from her sick-bed sent a touching letter which closed with asking all to unite with her that day in the pledge that in the year to come "We will preach Jesus more earnestly, work more faithfully, and try harder to win souls to Christ than ever before."

The addresses of welcome were so cordial and happy, the responses so fine, it is hard to pass them without notice. The annual address was given by Mrs. Helen M. Gougar of Indiana, subject, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Liquor League." A spirited feature was the discussion on school suffrage, led by Rev. Henrietta G. Moore. Speeches were limited to three minutes, were timely, clear cut, interesting and instructive, and showed that Ohio women have much ability in discussion.

All who voted last spring were requested to stand, then all who wanted to but had not the opportunity. The audience largely rose. Inquiry showed that many present had been elected to school boards; others reported women elected in their towns and cities. Ohio W. C. T. U. women are aroused on the question of woman's ballot and will welcome full suffrage.

A birthday thankoffering service was conducted by our state evangelist, Mrs. R. J. Trego, who gave us a full presentation of "giving" from a Bible standpoint, worthy to be repeated in all the pulpits of our country for the instruction of the people. Our state president had prepared beautiful little silk bags of all colors, drawn up with the daintiest little ribbons, to receive the offerings which consisted of a penny for each year that God had blessed us with life. The financial return was sixty-seven dollars.

The corresponding secretary's report showed an increase in sentiment favorable to woman's enfranchisement in all parts of Ohio, also an advance in regard to the general work of our organization, the active circulation of petitions to raise the age of protection for girls to eighteen years, which effort is to be the campaign work for the coming winter. It showed also an increase in the number of noon rests for working girls, rescue homes for girls and children, "Helping Hands" for unemployed men and women, and where little children may be left and cared for during working hours, free kindergartens, and reading rooms with circulating libraries.

Evangelistic services in jails and infirmaries have maintained deep interest. Demorest contests are still justly popular, taking deep hold of the people. Public drinking fountains have been established in many towns. L. T. L's have multiplied, organization has been pushed with success. Probably one thousand new members have been added, but owing to the failure of some of our old unions to pay their dues before the treasurer's books closed we are deprived of the credit due for this increase.

The treasurer's books made a fine showing—all the running expenses of the year paid from the current expense fund and $90 in the treasury.

A new constitution for state, district, county and local unions was adopted not differing very materially from the old. Superintendents of departments gave reports full of interest, showing progress in their fields.

The Loyal Temperance Legion was accorded representation in state convention. Departments of school savings banks, finding homes for homeless children, and parliamentary practice were established, also work among miners. The state union will again hold a school of methods at Lakeside next summer. The department of training schools for evangelists, adopted by the World's Convention, was presented by our state evangelist and awakened a deep interest. Material aid was voted to the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the International and Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta.

Y evening was a charming program. The address was given by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, National secretary of the Y Branch. A solo by our state recording secretary, Miss Anna M. Pollock, the Mrs. Alice Harris of our state union, was one of the delights, and not less so was a fine exhibition of club swinging by Miss Rose Leiter, daughter of our National superintendent of physical education.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, of Xenia, was elected president for the tenth time, Mrs. Antoinette H. Clevenger, who for nine and a half years has been corresponding secretary, was elected vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Anna W. Clark, of Columbus, corresponding secretary; Miss Anna M. Pollock, recording secretary, and Miss Emma L. Goodwill, of Canton, treasurer. Mrs. Estelle J. Purdum, who made such an efficient treasurer for four years, was elected secretary of the board of trustees.

A beautiful memorial service in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, our former state president, Miss Henrietta Barbara Monroe, our former recording secretary, Mr. Hammond, husband of Our Messenger editor, and fifty-two others of our departed active and honorary members was conducted by Mrs. Trego.

Reports of resolutions and plan of work committees were strong and practical, and if carried out by the local unions, will greatly advance the cause in Ohio.

An address on "What American Citizenship Should Mean," by Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, was a fitting close to a convention that had been full of good things from beginning. Miss Moore first called attention to an interesting coincidence, that on the platform beside her sat three women, who in homes of their own, in remote parts of our country, had tenderly cared for her when she made her first lecturing tour to the Pacific slope. One of these was Mrs. Dr. Morse, then territorial president of Montana, a Baptist minister's wife; one Mrs. Amanda A. Strong, then president of East Washington, a Methodist minister's wife; one Mrs. Mary J. Borden, president of New Mexico, a Congregational minister's wife, herself an ordained Congregational minister. As the four stood side by side before us (Miss Moore herself an ordained minister of the Universalist church), the thought uppermost in our mind was how closely has the Woman's Christian Temperance Union cemented together the hearts of the true followers of the Lord Jesus regardless of denominational lines.

Antoinette H. Clevenger.

The unions in Mansfield and Richland county, O., have enjoyed lectures the past months from Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, round-the-world white ribbon missionary, and from Mrs. Dora Webb, state superintendent of purity. A second union has been formed in Mansfield, called North Side union, of twenty members.

VERMONT.

TWENTY-FIRST CONVENTION.

The extreme heat of the last days of September was followed by cooler weather, which was very gratifying to the members of the Vermont W. C. T. U., who assembled in Rutland to hold their twenty-first convention. The Congregational society opened wide their doors to admit delegates and visitors to their church, which was beautifully decorated with flowers and autumn leaves. Each day at noon and at five o'clock refreshments were served in the church parlors.

The opening services comprised a meeting of the various committees and a workers' conference, conducted by Miss Lucy H. Hitchcock, in which many interesting and helpful points were brought out of much value.

The Vergennes union have secured rooms, where a prayer-meeting is held once in two weeks, and already results are seen in the increased spirituality of their members. Interest is manifested by those outside of the union, many of whom take part in the meetings. Mrs. Reeder, of Starksboro, an Ohio Crusader, was present, and spoke of her work in Cleveland, where she then lived.

Several members spoke of the flower mission work, of taking invalids to ride, of sending delicacies and flowers to the sick and afflicted.

A reception was held in the church parlors. The mayor of the city, Hon. J. A. Shelden, was present, and was introduced to the county presidents and delegates. A very pleasant hour was enjoyed by all.

The services of welcome evening in the audience room were opened by singing, Scripture reading and prayer by Dr. Phillips, pastor of the church. Words of welcome were spoken by the mayor, he being the second mayor in Vermont to welcome the W. C. T. U. Welcomes were extended by pastors of the several churches, by Mr. W. H. Fuller, secretary of Y. M. C. A., and by Mrs. L. A. Case, of I. O. G. T. Miss Agnes Still, of the Somerset Y, spoke in a very happy vein, and at the close of her remarks invited the mayor to become an honorary member of the Y's.

The responses were by the county presidents who spoke encouragingly of the work in their respective counties. Miss Alice Crocker sang a beautiful solo.

A consecration service was held by Mrs. L. D. Dyer, on the opening morning. The convention came to order by reading responsively the Crusade Psalm. Mrs. F. W. Shedd, of Rutland, welcomed the convention in a pleasant manner, which was responded to by Mrs. E. B. Lund, of Burlington.

The address of Mrs. Ida H. Read, state president, was full of interest. She said in part: "Twenty years ago this week a little band of women gathered in the chapel of this church to hold the first annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Vermont. If seems very fitting to gather in the same church to celebrate our majority convention.

"In 1875 thirty-eight delegates were present; now one hundred. Then fourteen unions were represented; now one hundred and twenty-five. The minutes of that meeting were printed on four pages; the record of our twentieth convention covers one hundred and nineteen pages.

"Since that day great changes have come to us as a nation and as a state. Twenty years ago twenty-two states had taken up this temperance work; now fifty states are organized.

"Evangelistic work was never more to the front than now. I find on the sunrise side of our Green Mountains as well as towards the sunset, up in the northern counties and down in the sunny valleys in the south, we are more and more realizing the need of evangelistic work.

"And what shall I say of our Loyal Temperance Legion? The enlistment of our children in temperance effort is the most helpful and hopeful part of this great organization. A great responsibility rests on us this year to know how the children are taught in the schools of Vermont under our scientific temperance instruction law. The educational committee at the legislature said last year that if the children were not taught the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the body, as thoroughly as they were taught arithmetic and grammar, we could insist on the compulsory part of our law being restored at the next legislature. Every union should have a superintendent of this department, our schools visited and a correct report given to our state superintendent of work done.

"Physical culture, one of the newest lines of work, needs our help. The most promising feature is the advance in sentiment among the educators of our state. Five of our prominent schools in leading towns have secured a special teacher in physical training."

Mrs. Read's address was replete with good sense, wise suggestions, and showed how the work is growing in importance in Vermont.

Wednesday evening Mrs. Emily McLaughlin of Boston, spoke in a highly gratifying manner to a large concourse of people.

Mrs. A. F. Smith, delegate to the World's W. C. T. U. in London, was escorted to the platform and presented with a banner, after which she gave the convention word pictures of the great meeting.

Memorial hour was exceedingly pathetic. Fourteen active and four honorary members have been taken to higher service. Mr. L. N. Franklin, of Rutland, an active temperance worker, by an accident, was instantly removed from his family and his labors. Mrs. Franklin has the sympathy of the entire state in her great bereavement.

A telegram was received from the New York W. C. T. U. in session at Rochester.

The officers for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. Ida H. Read, of Shelburn; secretary, Mrs. Gratia E. Davidson, of Newfane; treasurer, Mrs. E. M. Denny, of Montpelier; assistant secretary, Mrs. A. A. Wyman, of Cambridgeport; auditor, Miss Bertha Chamberlin, of Plainfield. During the convention a letter was received from the fraternal delegate of Canada, regretting that she could not be present.

Mrs. Read was elected delegate to the Canada convention.

Many thanks are returned to the people of Rutland for their Christian sympathy and helpfulness, their royal welcome and abundant hospitality.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Over one hundred temperance lectures have been given during the year and one hundred and sixty public meetings held.

Dr. Minnie Leavitt has lectured the past year in every union in Bennington county.

Mrs. E. A. Kenyon has done good work among the children.

The secretary's report showed that there are one hundred and twenty local unions in the state, with a membership of one thousand six hundred.

Bennington county reported one hundred new members.

Rutland county reports the largest membership.

It was voted that the name of our secretary, Mrs. G. E. Davidson, be placed on a tablet in the Temple at Chicago.

COUNTING THE YEAR'S GAINS.

The annual territorial convention of the W. C. T. U. was held September 4, 5 and 6, in the quaint little town of Socorro, which was well prepared to care for the strangers within her gates.

The delegates were received at depot by a wide awake committee (at six o'clock in the morning) and were taken, first to Mrs. Berry's to enjoy a toothsome breakfast, after which each lady was handed over to her special entertainer.

We could not have had more beautiful days, so clear, bright, warm, and the sessions of the first day developed the fact that all were very glad to meet once more to talk over the work of the year just gone and plan for the future.

The cool adobe Presbyterian church was tastefully decorated, and conveyances were graciously given to take members to and from the convention. All was done by the local union aided by some of the citizens to make the gathering a success.

Socorro feels especially blest as she doubled her membership, through the efforts of Mrs. M. P. Stamm, during our three days' stay. Some of those who take up the work there for the first time are, Miss Marguerite Johnson, Miss Hamilton, Mrs. Mayers, Mrs. Martin, and among the honoraries are, Rev. Graham, pastor of Presbyterian church, Mr. Driscoll, Mr. Stewart and others, both men and women.

The president, Mrs. Borden, delivered her annual address Thursday evening, September 5. As usual it was instructive and inspiring. In addition to her duties as president of the territory Mrs. Borden has charge of the department of good literature and has done valuable service in organizing four new unions, reorganizing two and has several points just ready for renewed labor.

The reorganization of so many unions becomes necessary on account of frequent removals of workers to other homes. She has held thirty meetings and there have been added to the W. C. T. U. ranks one hundred and fifteen members. You may have some idea of our isolation from each other when I tell you that two of the new unions are five hundred miles apart!

The L. T. L. and Demorest contest departments are receiving special attention in many of the unions, and several public libraries are supported by our ladies in the territory.

The superintendents of departments, with a few exceptions, continue their respective lines of activity. Mrs. Mayers, of Socorro, will report to THE UNION SIGNAL instead of Eva M. Tucker, the latter having charge of the press department. Mrs. C. Boucher, an enthusiastic new member of the Las Vegas union, is superintendent of Young Women's work.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Rev. Mary J. Borden, president, Albuquerque; Mrs. M. P. Stamm, corresponding secretary, Albuquerque; Miss Marguerite Johnson, recording secretary, Socorro; Mrs. M. C. Reynolds, treasurer, E. Las Vegas; Miss Eva M. Tucker, vice-president-at-large, E. Las Vegas.

A recent letter from Flora Vista reports that the eleven members which composed their union when it was organized last March have been added to until they number forty-five, twenty-two of whom are sustaining members and twenty-three are honoraries.

The officers of this union are Mrs. Mary Sizer, president; Mrs. M. Page, vice-president; Miss Edith Tully, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. P. Rumburg, recording secretary; Miss A. Hood, treasurer. A successful lawn social was given this summer at the home of Mrs. Rumburg; it seemed to interest the people generally, and the ladies received into their treasury $17.65 as one of the results. An L. T. L. is being started, also gospel meetings are to be held every two weeks as they seem to be in demand. The union hopes to report a Demorest medal contest in the near future.

News in a Nutshell.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY was prevented from attending the Baltimore Convention by the serious illness of a beloved brother who lingers on the verge of the grave.

THE W. C. T. U. of the state of Iowa does not believe in folding her arms and doing nothing, though from a human standpoint she is in a most helpless condition—politically. The unions have called a week of prayer, beginning October 30 and ending November 5. A three o'clock meeting will be held each afternoon. Pastors and churches are urged to coöperate and unitedly plead that the voters of Iowa may not longer be left to halt between two opinions concerning a legalized liquor traffic.

ON Sunday, October 20, memorial services in honor of Mrs. Sarah E. V. Emery, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of labor and capital, were held in Lansing, Mich. After the beautiful responsive service Mrs. May Stocking Knaggs, president of the Michigan Equal Suffrage Association, made an eloquent address, Mrs. Mary L. Doe then read letters and telegrams of appreciation and sympathy from Miss Willard, Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Benjamin, of the National W. C. T. U., also a letter from Mrs. Martha E. Root, for the People's party. Mrs. Fannie Holden Fowler sent a beautiful poem for the occasion. Mrs. Carrie Cole spoke of the interest that Mrs. Emery had manifested in her own home church while larger interests occupied so much of her time and thought. The Sunday-school class that Mrs. Emery took such delight in teaching gave an appropriate Scripture exercise. The pastor, Rev. Charles Legal, addressed the Sunday-school on the immortality of such a life of usefulness as Mrs. Emery lived. He also read the resolutions adopted by the Universalist state convention in regard to the valuable building site that Mrs. Emery gave to the Lansing society a few months ago, and on which a new church will soon be commenced.

BEAUTIFULLY worded and thoughtful resolutions were passed by the San Bernardino county, California W. C. T. U., in memory of Dr. James M. Sudduth, to whom they referred as "a man with 'a correspondence fixed with heaven, whose life was unbroken in its usefulness; he taught humanity lessons of the eternal value of generosity, of purity, of kindness, of unselfish piety, and builded well a monument in the hearts of his friends."

AT her home in Maine, October 6, in the early dawn of the Sabbath, Clara Kimball fell sweetly asleep in Jesus, with no suggestion of suffering; just the breathing out of her life into His after her farewells had all been said; so God gave her a blessed entrance on eternal life. Miss Kimball was one of the first Crusaders, although her work began in Chicago instead of Ohio. She had a frail and sensitive nature, yet she did not hesitate to enter upon the great work to deliver souls from the bondage and temptation of drink. She led the first noon meeting at Farwell Hall, Chicago, and through all the years since then she has been steadfastly devoted to the interests of the W. C. T. U. She was a leading spirit in the famous movement in Chicago to sustain the Sunday liquor ordinance, which required the closing of the saloons on the Sabbath. Her message to the union, given just before she died, was characteristic of her triumphant faith. "Tell the dear women I have made the acquaintance of my Lord; He is with me, sustaining and uplifting. Tell them to be brave and strong, and do their work in faith, for God is with them and will surely give the victory." To Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, her devoted sister, the hearts of white-ribboners go out in tender sympathy, praying that God may comfort and give her peace.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "In your issue of October 10, you have an excellent article entitled, 'Woman in the Church.' It is both fair and just. It will do good. It is timely. In connection with that article I desire to tell you of the election of a woman as delegate to the recent Triennial Council of Congregationalists held in Syracuse, N. Y., October 9 to 15. The Bay Association of the Pacific Coast unanimously elected Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper a delegate to that Council. Mrs. Cooper is an active member of the Congregational Club of San Francisco, president of the Women's Congress of the Pacific Coast and vice-president of the Women's Press Association, taking a deep and abiding interest in temperance work and in everything that tends to uplift this world. She has been a Bible class teacher for over forty-six years and has now one of the largest Bible classes in the country, composed of intelligent men and women of San Francisco and Oakland. This Bible class organized the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association over sixteen years ago, since which time no less than 20,116 little children have been trained in its forty free kindergartens. Every kindergarten has proved itself a college settlement in the neighborhood where it is located, with its regular visitors, its mothers' meetings and its lectures. Mrs. Cooper frequently officiates at funerals, and is, to all intents and purposes, a minister in the true sense of the term. Why should not the work of a woman like this be recognized by the church? The Congregationalists of San Francisco and the Bay counties have done themselves honor by thus giving woman credit for honest work done."

A UNION SIGNAL correspondent forcefully presents the meeting of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association in the Girls' High School building, October 4, which was addressed by Mrs. Emma F. Pettengill, president of the W. C. T. U. of Kings county:

"She emphasized the fact that she was one of the forty-five members of the Brooklyn school board and not one of 'the faction of five.' She said she was asked to give some of her views and in the course of a graceful and scholarly speech she said: 'I have a few very strong convictions; I believe in a liberal policy of education. I believe in the enforcement of law; perhaps that is because I was reared in a New England state where law was formerly held in some esteem. I regard as a step in the right direction the enactment of the Ainsworth Temperance Education Law. I am not here to argue for that law; the time to do that has gone by. It was passed by the last legislature without a dissenting vote and received the governor's signature at the request of 800,000 parents, citizens, tax-payers and voters of the state and is now upon our statute books. It has been given its place in the new course of study prepared for the teachers in our city. What more then can be asked? Nothing, save that you to whom is given the training and guidance of our children, no matter what may be your personal feelings or prejudices, shall feel behind you the pressure of the dictum of the law, and shall teach the children and the youth of our city the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics. Then you will have done your duty, and the state, through you, will have built a wise and strong breakwater for the coming generation.' Mr. Charles R. Skinner, state superintendent of public instruction, who did all he could to defeat this bill, and thereby made one of the most disgraceful mistakes ever made by a public school official, sat on the platform and heard these brave words applauded by 2,000 of the teachers and citizens of Brooklyn. The school board of Brooklyn will see to it that this most important and reasonable law is loyally enforced by our teachers. The teachers of Brooklyn will never disgrace themselves by indorsing the treasonable resolutions of the Syracuse convention."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

The large effort made the past year for the establishment of the fourth Sunday of November as the World's Temperance Sunday has been universally successful. From the local Sabbath-school to the great religious bodies, including that of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian denomination, representing thousands of Christians, an almost unanimous endorsement has been received. Now for accomplishment.

What it may mean to the cause of prohibition in this country and the world, what it may mean for the demolition of the liquor traffic can be best judged by as wide-spread demonstration.

To close the saloons and hotel bars on God's holy day is a most emphatic demonstration from a negative standpoint. Let Christian people, on the side of a positive demonstration, make the fourth Sunday of November, 1895, an epoch in the historical relation of the church to temperance.

To Pennsylvania belongs the credit of the first direct achievement in the denominational indorsement. The commendable efforts of the state superintendent, Mrs. F. D. B. Chase, resulted in an action of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, by which the plan is cordially indorsed, and the date of their annual temperance Sunday is changed from the third Sunday of September to the fourth Sunday in November, with the expressed hope thus to aid in securing a universal Temperance Sunday. Mrs. Chase, assisted by Mrs. Mahood, presented the plan at the meeting of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church. It was kindly indorsed, and the fourth Sunday of November was also named by that body as the annual Temperance Sunday.

We cordially commend the plan of the National superintendent as both practical and progressive. Local workers can vary it as they desire.

In view of the possibilities that are ours in this sacred use of the Lord's Day, in this effort to put away that which more than all else makes the day unholy, and is bringing the judgment of God upon the nations, we urge every Sunday-school and every local union to an effort on some or all lines for observing November 24. We would suggest local conferences of pastors, Sunday-school superintendents and temperance workers, that to its largest possibility the demonstration may be union and Christian.

In the early part of the year a letter from the World's superintendent was sent to each National W. C. T. U. auxiliary to the World's W. C. T. U. This letter urged the observance of the World's Temperance Sunday, giving hints and suggestions for the same.

Realizing that in many countries this will really be the initiative of the work, we are still hopeful that the day may, world-wide, be memorable for the declaration of Bible temperance doctrines.

A Boon to Embroiderers.

It is hardly more than a year ago that a progressive concern hit upon an ingenious way of putting up its justly celebrated "Asiatic Dye" Wash Silks in paper holders in such a manner that embroiderers are saved the trouble of unwinding the skein and re-winding it again on card-board, as was customarily done with the old-fashioned skeins to prevent them from roughing and snarling. The Brainerd & Armstrong Silk Co., New London, Ct., which holds the exclusive right to put up its silk in this manner, has again demonstrated its originality by the recent publication of a "Doyley and Centerpiece Book," which has chapters on Embroidery Stitches, Centerpieces, Doyleys, Ideal Honiton, Luncheon and Tea Cloths, Cut Work and Table Spreads in Denim. It contains over seventy engraved illustrations of patterns, and full information as to where they can be obtained, and the proper stitches and threads to be used in working each individual part. In a word, the book deals so comprehensively with the subject that every lady who embroiders cannot fail to find it useful.

Home Hints.

To test the temperature of the oven for baking, place within it a sheet of common white note paper. If too hot, the paper will speedily blacken and fall to pieces; if the paper turns a delicate brown, it is right for pastry; if a dark yellow, cake may be put in; if a light yellow, it is at a correct heat for sponge cake and biscuit.

Cotton may be distinguished from linen handkerchiefs by moistening the tip of the finger and pressing the fabric. If it is linen it will wet through at once, but if any cotton enters into its manufacture it will take several seconds to show the dampness through.

Celery Soup:—One cupful of chopped celery, a quart of milk, a tablespoonful of flour, butter; salt and pepper to taste. Stew the celery until soft enough to rub through a colander; to this pulp add the milk boiling hot. Thicken with the flour rubbed smooth with the butter. Add salt and pepper.

Now that it is again the prevailing mode to part the hair, some who have not very heavy hair will be troubled by the ever increasing width of the line of parting. This can be avoided by combing or brushing the hair back from the face every night. This changes the position of the hair, and makes it lie much more lightly each side of the parting when the hair is dressed.

This week we give two different rules for making chocolate caramels. No. 1. One cup white sugar, one cup molasses, one cup chocolate, shaved fine, one cup milk, one small lump of butter. Boil until it will harden when dropped in cold water. After taking from the stove flavor with vanilla. Pour into buttered tins and mark in squares.

No. 2. One and one-half pounds brown sugar, one-half pint cream, butter size of a walnut, one cake sweet chocolate, shaved fine. Boil, flavor, etc., as in rule No. 1.

"The fried chicken, for which the old negro cook is so famous, is plunged into a skillet of hot lard and fried. The chicken to be roasted is covered with slices of bacon; stewed chicken and chicken-pie are well seasoned with salt pork."

Filling for pop-corn balls: One cup of sugar, one half-cup of water, one tablespoon vinegar, one teaspoon cream tartar. Boil until it threads from the spoon. This is enough for about a dozen and a half of balls. Pour the hot syrup into the pan of corn, stir with a spoon until thoroughly mixed. Then press lightly into balls with the hands.

This bit of useful knowledge comes from the Boston Budget. Housekeepers who have put up jellies are almost invariably annoyed by the mold which comes on top of the glasses after standing awhile, even though great care has been taken to cover them in the regulation manner. A housekeeper of experience says this can be avoided by the use of paraffine wax. When the jelly has become cold, pour upon it enough of the melted paraffine to make an air-tight covering. It need not be thick, but it must be entire. This cover can be saved and used year after year, as it comes from the jelly perfectly clean. The paraffine can be bought at the druggist's at a trifling cost.

We have already given one or two good ways of laundrying one's own fine handkerchiefs, but here is still another which sounds just as practical, taken from an exchange. Keep on hand a bottle of strong ammonia, a tiny bottle of bluing, and to save the hands, a toy wash board. At night dip the soiled handkerchiefs into clear, cold water, soap them thoroughly and drop into a dish containing water with about a tablespoonful of ammonia to each quart. Let them stand over night. In the morning wash them out and rinse them in a slightly blued water. Do not ring the handkerchiefs but squeeze them as dry as possible. Spread the handkerchiefs, one above another, very smooth on a large towel, roll them up snugly and on a smooth surface continue to roll them under the hands until as hard as possible. When partly dry smooth and draw out every wrinkle and fold. Again lay them flat on a towel, cover with a cloth and pile heavy books on them. Let them lie several hours at least.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Avenue, Chicago.

Mrs. M. E. Kline, for five years president of the board, reported at the annual meeting that five thousand leaflets—"Alcohol In Medicine, Nos. 1 and 2," had been scattered during the year, as well as a large number of copies of the Responsive Reading on the Hospital and a leaflet, "The Children for the Children," by Miss Alice M. Guernsey, of which five thousand had been printed. The report for the year ending October, 1894, had also been presented at the National W. C. T. U. convention in Cleveland, and inserted in the annual minutes, as well as separate numbers being scattered by members of the board.

Very gratefully do we record the fact that at the close of another year the treasurer can report a balance in the treasury. This is due to the donations of friends of the hospital; (for which we return thanks) to the confidence on the part of the patients who are to pay for the superior medical and surgical skill and excellent nursing afforded here; and last but not least, the wise and careful management and economy of the board, and those who have been in control of the several different departments of this institution.

We believe the hospital is on a firm foundation of prosperity and success, that as it has come safely through some trying perplexities and changes in the past, so it will in the future, and continue to be a practical and successful exponent of the principle upon which it is founded.

Some improvements have been made in the hospital which have added to the comfort of the inmates and bettered the sanitary condition of the building.

Some additions have been made to the hospital temperance literature this year. No annual report was issued, but a large three page leaflet containing extracts from the reports of officers, house physician, superintendent and matron was printed in time for the National Convention. Besides the Responsive Reading Leaflet, two valuable leaflets of the Hospital series were issued. They are entitled, "Alcohol in Medicine." No. 1, "Why It Is Not Necessary." No. 2, "What Physicians Say."

Every W. C. T. U. woman should be familiar with the facts therein set forth and be interested to circulate them.

are soft, so soft they scarce can be called bones in the earlier years; gradually they harden, and furnish the frame which supports the growing body. The hardening comes from what chemists term "the mineral substances."

When these are absent we have "Rickets"—a lack of bone-tissue, which shows itself in delayed teething, profuse head-sweats, and later, if not arrested, malformations and deformities.

BIBLE READING FOR NOVEMBER.

Mary in Cana.

BY MRS. JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

White-ribboners do not need to be told that this reading contains a rich spiritual feast, for all know Mrs. Willing, and many have been helped upward by her Bible studies, and by her own firm grasp upon the Rock of Ages. We cannot refrain from giving our readers a foretaste: "The miracle at Cana was only the marvel He had been working every summer since creation's dawn, hanging clusters on vines and filling grapes with rich, healthful, living juice. No death, no fermentation, no decay—nothing that could lead to excess or ruin could come from the hand of Him who was the Life." The chief lesson to W. C. T. U. women, however, in "Mary in Cana" is the "omnipotence that lies within reach of our own obedient trust."

Price, 1 copy per year, 12c.; 10 copies to one address, $1.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR NOVEMBER.

In response to a pressing demand we reprint for next month Mrs. Helen G. Rice's Responsive Reading on the work of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

This has proved so helpful in the past that L. T. L. workers cannot get along without it, and we are constantly receiving orders, which, as the supply is exhausted, we are unable to fill. We shall issue a specially large edition of this valuable reading, to be ready by November 1.

Price, 1 copy per year, 10c.; 13 copies to one address, $1.

The Daily UNION SIGNAL will not be published at Convention this year, but in our regular Convention number to be issued November 7, you will find a full report of each day's proceedings with the wit and wisdom of the five days' sessions. Price per hundred $2.50. Single copies five cts.

ILLUSTRATIVE NOTES, 1896. A Guide to the study of the Sunday School Lessons, with original and selected comments, methods of teaching, illustrative stories, practical applications, notes on Eastern life, library references, maps, tables, pictures and diagrams. By Jesse Lyman Hurlbut and Robert Remington Doherty.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati. Price, $1.25.

A GREAT APPOINTMENT, is a story by Myra Goodwin Plantz, a member of the great white-ribbon army. Being the wife of a minister she can speak with authority of "appointments." In the heart of a lumber and mine district a young divine finds his first charge, with "only four actual members on the appointment." His comrade-in-arms is his young sister, a sunny spirited Christian. Together they set out to take this corner of the world for Christ. How they succeeded, Mrs. Plantz tells in a story of unusual brightness and strength.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati.

FRAIL CHILDREN OF THE AIR is a charming study of caterpillars and butterflies by Samuel H. Scudder, that will appeal to all who love these fragile beauties from a scientific standpoint. The author studies the mimicry of hues as practiced by these insects for their greater protection from marauders, and the consideration of "Butterflies as Botanists" is curious and interesting. Mr. Scudder leaves little unsaid about these dainty flutterers of summer days, from "The White Mountains of New Hampshire as a Home for Butterflies," through their habits to the origination of the species common to the old and new world to a study of the "Butterflies of the Past." The work is handsomely illustrated.

Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston and New York. Price $1.50.

A handsome volume comes to our Library Table bearing the attractive title, THE LAND OF THE MUSKEG. It is from the pen of Mr. Henry Somers Somerset, the son of Lady Henry Somerset, and is an account of an expedition from Edmonton in Alberta, north through Athabasca, west and south in British Columbia to Quesnel Mouth. Mr. Somerset was accompanied by A. Hungerford Pollen, whose drawings—one hundred and ten in number—enrich the vivid story of their travels and adventures. The book is not a mere matter of reminiscence but is prepared from the journal kept by Mr. Somerset during the expedition and is replete with quaint touches and amusing incidents. The descriptions of the country and "natives" are invaluable. A preface by A. Hungerford Pollen adds not a little to the worth of the work.

Published by William Heinemann, London, England.

JACK ALDEN. A story of adventures in the Virginia campaigns. By Warren Lee Goss.

Mr. Goss illustrates in this new war story the lesson of the great Civil War, with all its inspiration of patriotism, endurance, right feeling, generosity and broad charity. Many of the scenes introduced are "unexaggerated recitals of real occurrences." The characters are life-like, full of good humor, brave and honest. They are well drawn types of the rank and file which enlisted in the army under the noblest sense of self-sacrifice in the early days of the war. The descriptions of camp and field, of battle and march, of prison and escape are thrilling, and the lively humor which is generally characteristic of the author flashes its entertaining light through the conversations of the soldiers.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston. Price $1.50.

CUORE. An Italian Schoolboy's Journal. By Edmondo de Amicis. Translated by Isabel F. Hapgood.

CUORE is an Italian word signifying heart. As employed by Signor de Amicis on the title page of his famous book it emphasizes the teachings which the book indirectly brings to bear upon the young; these lessons are patriotism, genuine democracy, love and reverence for parents, sympathy and moral courage. The reader is led into the very heart of a young Italian schoolboy; the glow of patriotism kindled by recently established Italian unity penetrates every part. Stories of splendid valor and sacrifice; touches of heroism in those of humble birth, of good fellowship in those who might boast of ancient lineage; wise counsels from parents and teachers; faults corrected; life as it is in modern Italy; all are portrayed by the master hand of the author.

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

Now that the winter evenings are fast approaching, old and young need some good book that will instruct as well as amuse, to pass away the evenings. Below we give a partial list of books suitable for all:

A GREAT MOTHER. By FRANCES E. WILLARD and MRS. MINERVA B. NORTON. There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to this volume. It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose. Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions. Bound in silver and gray. Price, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE. By MARY ALLEN WEST. The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow! There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual. To this end Childhood, Its Care and Culture was written. In a letter to Miss West, Madam Willard wrote: "If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose to have this. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Bound in cloth, marble edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES of White Ribbon women (official) contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. Beautifully illustrated, containing forty half tone, cabinet size portraits. One hundred and twenty-five pages neatly bound in cloth and paper. Will interest all White Ribboners. Send for it. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn. Author of Concerning Narcotics, Confidential Talks with Young Men, etc., with introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day. 16mo. cloth, price, 75 cents.

BEFORE HE IS TWENTY. Five perplexing phases of the boy question considered. By ROBERT J. BURDETTE, FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, EDWARD W. BOK, MRS. BURTON HARRISON and MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT. With portraits of the authors. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. "The boy of the period is unquestionably interesting. He is more so than was his brother of a century ago. . . . It means much, particularly to parents who are charged with the responsibility of a training that must adjust itself, in a greater or less degree, to the time their boys are born, live and shall live. . . . It is for the purpose of presenting the wisest and best concentrated modern thought on the different phases of the boy of the period that the articles in this little book were conceived."—PREFACE. Price 75.

HOW I LEARNT TO RIDE THE BICYCLE. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development. Seven full page, half-tone illustrations. Beautifully bound in buckram cloth, tastefully designed cover in ink and silver. Price, 50 cents.

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS. An Autobiography of Frances E. Willard. Prepared by special and unanimous request of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention of 1887, with an introduction by HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, contains over 700 pages. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Prices, bound in cloth, $2.25. Half morocco, gilt edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $3.75.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"My Sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author. A writer says, "It is the most entrancing of all histories. To the cultivated and appreciative reader of every age, sex and sect, there is spread out here a rare and rich feast from the enjoyment of which he must arise a purer, stronger and better nature." Price, paper, 10 cents. Handsomely bound in cloth, 75 cents.

A WOMAN EVANGEL. By EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH. A picture of temperance work along the lines so familiar to all W. C. T. U. women. The story will interest all readers—its Gospel temperance meetings, ostracism because of political conscientiousness, downfall due to moderate drinking—all are true to life. Send for it. Price, $1.25.

THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c. "To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nations' citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

A GIFT OF LOVE. By ROSE PORTER. Love texts for 365 days. Long 18mo. Daintily bound, white cloth silver top, boxed. Price $1.00.

A GIFT OF PEACE. By ROSE PORTER. "Peace" texts for every day in the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day. Uniform with a "Gift of Love." Price $1.00.

BOYS AND OTHER BOYS. GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By LUCY A. SCOTT. Just the books to give needed advice and help to the boy or girl in the critical early teens. Not "goody-goody" but clear, strong, faithful, interesting. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK. A selection for each day from the best writers among women. Edited by ANNA A. GORDON. Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. Handsomely bound. Price, $1.00.

HYGIENE OF THE HOME. By SUSAN BURR BARNES. A valuable guide along the lines of home keeping. A good book for housekeepers and mothers. Cloth bound. Price 75 cents.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND. By MRS. MARY H. HULL. This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the Child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm. Bound in cloth. Price, $1.00.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL. Compiled by ANNA A. GORDON. Contains the favorite hymns of White Ribboners everywhere. It is rich in words and music. Can be used at Devotional Meetings, Evangelistic Services, Gospel Temperance Meetings, Memorial Services, Prohibition Rallies, etc., etc. Price 35c.

MARCHING SONGS NO 3. NEW. Fresh from the press, full of bright, sparkling tunes, suitable for Senior and Junior Legions. 96 pages and cover. Price 15 cents. Numbers 1 and 2. 10 cents. Compiled by ANNA A. GORDON. The collection includes temperance songs for use in Kindergarten and Kitchen Garden Schools, songs which teach Sabbath observance, kindness to animals and other kindred principles which it is wise to instill early into the minds of the "cold water army" if we would have them embodied in the law of the land.

Signal Notes.

Chicago has 6,274 saloons.

Protestant Europe numbers 80,812,000.

There are 260,954 women teachers and 122,056 men teachers in the United States.

There is a larger per cent of increase of school attendance than of population in England last year—three per cent.

Hungary will celebrate its millennium as a state by a whole year's commemoration of the events of interest in its long history.

There were 22,000 men's names signed to the petition for resubmission of the Kansas prohibitory amendment. Not a woman's name was appended.

A valuable new weekly periodical called Information, gives all the important news of the world condensed and arranged with all crime and scandal eliminated.

Twenty-seven Presbyterian churches in the United States have over one thousand communicants. The largest is in New York, Dr. John Hall's, having 2,544 members.

Reverend Henry, of the La Salle avenue Baptist church, Chicago, in a recent stirring sermon claimed that enough is spent in its 250,000 saloons to bankrupt this nation in thirty-five years.

Governor Renfrew, of Oklahoma, reports 275,000 population, and a taxable property of thirty-nine million dollars doubled during the year. The school population was 77,770.

It is reported that the young King of Spain does not think much of the national sport, bull-fighting, much to the delight of his mother. If her influence can obtain, the days of such cruelty are over in Spain.

That youth remain longer in school than formerly is attributed by a Chicago daily to the fact that the ratio of women teachers has increased in the upper grades. The percentage of attendance has doubled in ten years.

Among graduates in the United States, according to the latest report of the commissioner of education, the theological students lead, there being 7,838 of these, 6,776 law students, 4,911 medical, 3,394 pharmacists and 2,852 dental graduates.

As a result of government control of railways in Russia, great reductions have been made in freight and passenger rates and the number and speed of express trains. Under the new system the mileage decreases in proportion to distance traveled. A new impulse has been given railway building in the empire.

Some Endeavorers of Anita, Iowa, becoming concerned at the wholesale and wanton destruction of birds for ornamental purposes, circulated a pledge among Anita young women Endeavorers, wherein they promised not to wear birds' plumage as ornaments. The young men took a pledge not to do any more pot hunting. This movement has spread and the county Christian Endeavor convention has indorsed it.

"During 1894, as a nation," says the Advance, "we spent $609,000,000, or $5,000,000 more than all the appropriation of Congress combined, for alcoholic spirits alone. To this must be added more than $617,000,000 for beer, making a total of $1,226,000,000. This provides 100 glasses of whisky and 220 glasses of beer for each inhabitant between the Pacific and the Atlantic per year. In striking contrast with this enormous expenditure the nation received as internal revenue tax less than $160,000,000. In the light of these facts, is it too much to say the liquor traffic constitutes the age problem, politically, socially, industrially, financially, and religiously? It is the greatest question before the people."

A National Reform Institute was conducted at Shenandoah, Pa., recently by Prof. J. R. Dill, of the National Reform Association, by request of the pastors and churches of the city. The extreme importance of Sabbath observance was urged as a duty to God and a necessity to the well-being of the people. The dangers threatening our public schools were eloquently pointed out. The ideal condition of the state was described when moral law would be made the basis of all constitutional and legal enactments and judicial decisions. Christian citizenship, the labor question, temperance and other subjects were treated in masterly fashion by leading divines during the six days' session of the institute.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Masons of New York have barred saloon-keepers from their fraternity.

The centenary of the English poet Keats has been commemorated in literary circles.

New York reformers are rallying to prevent the return of Tammany to political power.

Monsignor Satolli, of Italy, apostolic delegate to the United States, has been made a cardinal.

Madame Antoinette Sterling, the white-ribbon minstrel, sailed from England for America, November 2.

A triple star, the first in the history of astronomy, has been discovered by Prof. See, of the Chicago University.

The constitutional convention of South Carolina has put itself on unenviable record as opposed to equal suffrage.

In a recent speech, at Walford, the Marquis of Salisbury renounced free trade, saying it had injured English husbandry.

Bull-fights with all the appurtenances, except the shedding of blood, were inaugurated at the Atlanta Exposition, Friday.

Five hundred delegates met at Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 30 to form a National Young People's Society of the Lutheran church.

Trebizond furnishes another Armenian horror, four hundred having been murdered there by the Turks, the details of which were published Saturday.

M. Leon Bourgeois, a radical, has been requested by President Faure to form a new ministry for France following the defeat and resignation of the Ribot cabinet.

Judge Martin, of Arkansas, has enjoined the principals in the proposed prize-fight, and the governor has announced his intention to support the judicial decision by the militia, if necessary.

An important conference of the Methodist Episcopal Bishops of the United States has convened at Toledo, O. The admission of women to the General Conference is among the prominent subjects to be discussed.

---

So great was the crowd on Demonstration evening that several societies especially invited to be present—among them the Good Templars in full regalia—were unable to make their way into Convention Hall. An overflow meeting was held in one of the smaller halls of the building, at which some of our leading speakers gave addresses.

---

A RESOLUTION was presented at Convention and passed unanimously, asking the National executive to establish a training school where teachers can be educated in physical discipline, who can go to the unions over the country, conducting classes in the same. As a preliminary step, the executive decided to name the Bethlehem Normal, Pa., as a suitable center for the coming year. More definite plans will be perfected in the near future for carrying out this idea fully.

---

EACH morning of Convention week at 8:30 there gathered in one of the smaller assembly rooms of Music Hall, a goodly group of women, who for half an hour shut out the clamor of business, and in the hush of prayer, the quiet voice of testimony or the melody of praise, refreshed and strengthened themselves for the varying duties of the day. Many times people were heard to say, "What a good Convention!" and we may well opine that the spirit of harmony and sweet oneness of purpose that prevailed from Friday morning until Wednesday evening was owing in no small measure to that "still hour" of devotion.

IT is an announcement of the first importance to our publishing interests that Mrs. Esther T. Housh has been made National superintendent of Temperance Literature. It was thought best to have this department in the East as the publishing house is in the West and the long experience of Mrs. Housh as an editor and publisher, combined with her successful presidency of the Vermont W. C. T. U. in past years, have given her an outlook that will be of exceptional value to the work. Moreover, Mrs. Housh is well known and widely loved by white ribbon women.

---

THE continued confidence of white-ribboners in the Temple enterprise was very marked in the National Convention, and must have cheered the heart of our "Temple Builder." The warmth with which Mrs. Carse was received whenever she appeared, amounting at one time to a real ovation, showed that despite attacks upon the Temple management and direful prognostications concerning the Temple project generally, the W. C. T. U. as a National organization has unbounded faith in Mrs. Carse's persistence and indomitable will, feeling assured that back of this is the Supreme Leader of the white-ribbon hosts.

---

WE have at Headquarters Miss Willard's address in full, as delivered at Baltimore. It is a volume of one hundred and four pages and is regarded as one of the best addresses Miss Willard has ever given. A limited number can be furnished to early applicants at twenty-five cents each, which will barely cover postage and expense of printing. The address will be cut down about half for the Minutes, which will be furnished to all applicants at fifteen cents each. Last year there were many calls for Miss Willard's address and the Minutes after they were gone, so we trust that all who desire these valuable pamphlets will order at once from the National treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago.

AMONG the many letters from notable friends and colaborers received at the Convention, none will be more appreciated by THE UNION SIGNAL readers than that from the beloved leader of Great Britain's white ribbon host, Lady Henry Somerset. Expressing her regret at not being able to participate in the Convention, on account of domestic interests and claims, she referred to the splendid meetings of the World's W. C. T. U., the appreciation of the delegates and the consequent enthusiasm, concluding thus: "We expect to present the Polyglot Petition ere long, and we hope to do so in a way that will command the judgment and good-will of all that host of earnest hearts who in every country have toiled with hand and brain to make the Petition an adequate exponent of the devoted purposes of the world's womanhood. I need hardly add that we are, as a nation, deeply grateful for the presence of your president in our midst. Although we have endeavored to spare her as much public work as possible, she has been invaluable by her continued labors with her pen, her advice, her influence and her experience in building up the work in this country. I know nothing that has so advanced the temperance cause as the systematized and organized methods which we have adapted from the work of the W. C. T. U. to our own needs, and no one has brought about so great a change in the temperance outlook among women as Miss Frances Willard. I feel sure that to many it must appear that her absence is a loss to the cause the white-ribbon women love, but in the long run it will be seen that the strengthening of the temperance work in England will materially help the cause of reform in America, the reflex influence of both countries on each other being more marked every day. And I believe the tie that has bound the woman's organization is more likely to build up the cause of reform than any other movement of our time."

IN compliance with our president's wish expressed in her annual address the Convention, by a unanimous vote, asked the Prohibition Party to take the name of Home Protection Party, giving its reasons as follows: "We feel it to be our solemn duty to urge the adoption of the name, Home Protection Party, instead of Prohibition Party. The use of the word prohibition as the name of a party has given excuse to the pulpits of the land to cease from advocating the principles of prohibition. We have no right thus to diminish the total amount of instruction and arousing of the people that must be done before prohibition can ever become successful in politics and law. The word Prohibition is wholly a negative term, distasteful to American ears; the word Home Protection is positive, attractive and contains an argument in itself. We urge our brothers, beside whom we hope ere long to stand as voters at the polls, to heed our earnest request repeated for so many years through our publications and addresses, and to adopt the name prayed for by their most loyal and devoted allies, and call ours the Home Protection Party."

IN order to present to the great host of our white-ribbon constituency who did not attend the Convention a true picture of that great gathering, and one that would imbue them with its spirit, it has been found necessary to defer the publication of the resolutions until our next issue. Meanwhile, we note here some of the most important declarations. Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, of Massachusetts, and Miss Esther Pugh, of Indiana, were made chairman and secretary of the committee. As a matter of course, Prohibition and the Prohibition party were strongly indorsed. Staten Island platform, agreed to by leading reformers, was declared by the Convention to be a basis on which it was believed the reform element of this country could safely unite, prohibition and woman's ballot being its two principal planks. It was stated that this indorsement was general rather than specific. A resolution earnestly asking the Prohibition party leaders to change the name to Home Protection party was unanimously adopted. A strong anti-lynching resolution was carried, and more energetic work among colored people was pledged. All the affiliated interests, including as a matter of course the Woman's Temple, were heartily indorsed. Resolutions of protest against the outrages in Armenia, and the subjugation of Madagascar, were adopted. Also, a strong resolution of sympathy with the temperance people in Harvey, Ill., and a resolution indorsing the American Temperance University, of Harriman, Tenn. Emphatic resolutions from the purity department were adopted. Mrs. Hunt and her department received enthusiastic support and the endorsement of the Convention. One resolution declared that women should have a place and a vote on committees appointed by several states to consider the divorce laws, another invited fraternal relations with the Catholic and Hebrew women; a third extended the right hand of fellowship to Theodore Roosevelt and reformers in New York; also to Governor Culberson, of Texas, whose action prevented the disgrace of a prize-fight within the borders of that commonwealth. The labor movement was the subject of two stalwart resolutions, and it was agreed to join the movement which seeks to establish the fourth Sunday of November as annual temperance Sunday. Resolutions of tender sympathy for those who have been bereaved in the past year were adopted by a rising vote. Mrs. Youmans, on her "bed of pain," and Mother Stewart, who is "gently gliding down the stream of time," were lovingly remembered. There was a beautiful resolution, appreciative of the return of Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, and grateful mention was made of "the strong and loving comradeship" of Lady Henry Somerset, and the presence of Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant was gladly noted. Important resolutions were adopted at the post executive session.

THE WHITE RIBBON STAR SPANGLED BANNER.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

Fling it out to the breeze; let it tell to the world
That the faith which has raised it will never surrender;
Let it tell that the love which our banner unfurled,
Is the guard of the home and the nation's defender;
Let it gleam as a star, for the shipwrecked afar,
Like a beacon that warns of the treacherous bar;
Let that banner of freedom and purity wave,
As a signal of hope 'midst the perils we brave.

Hold that banner aloft; let our colors be seen
From Siberian snowfields to African valleys,
Lift it up for the truth; let the rays of its sheen
Drive the shadows of night from the byways and alleys.
Let it tell to the lost that we count not the cost,
That our bridges are burned and our Rubicon crossed;
That the banner of motherlove ever shall wave,
Till the paths are made straight for the sin-burdened slave.

Let it fly at the front; it is washed in our tears,
And the smoke of the battle increases its whiteness,
Though our hearts may be pierced by the enemy's spears,
Yet the flow from our wounds shall but add to its brightness,
And this ensign of light, it shall float o'er the fight,
Till our wrongs are avenged by the triumph of right;
And in radiant victory at last it shall wave
O'er the ramparts we've stormed, o'er King Alcohol's grave.

Swing it out from the staff, let it shadow the ground
Where the fathers of liberty sleep 'neath the mosses;
Run it up o'er the homes where the mothers are found
Who through watches of anguish are counting their losses.
In the tear-moistened sod, which our martyrs have trod,
We are planting it deep for our land and our God.
And this banner of world-circling love e'er shall wave
In the name of our Christ, who is mighty to save.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

Twenty-Second Annual Convention.

In the balmy air and brilliant sunshine of the beautiful southland the white ribbon representatives betook themselves to Music Hall, in Baltimore, on the morning of October 18. The hour of 9: 30 found delegates' and visitors' seats well filled, and as Miss Willard, accompanied by Miss Gordon and others, stepped upon the platform the audience rose and enthusiastically greeted her with the clapping of hands and waving of handkerchiefs.

The vast auditorium was handsomely decorated with colossal palms and potted plants, and on every side, as is usual at our conventions, hung the national colors and the flags and banners of local and state unions, prominent among the latter being the white silk banner of Pennsylvania with streamers of heavy white ribbon, proclaiming to all whom it might concern that to the Keystone state belonged the honors of the year for increase of membership. Upon the platform sat the general officers, Mother Thompson and her daughter, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of England, and other distinguished guests. The Convention was called to order by the familiar seven raps of the president's ribbon-decorated gavel. "America" was sung and Miss Willard said:

"While we were singing something very pleasant occurred. Our round-the-world missionary, Miss Ackermann, who in the last few years traveled one hundred and fifty thousand miles to carry the white ribbon, put into my hand a little starry banner of our own land which she carried everywhere, from Iceland to New Zealand. Another most interesting fact is, that we have not only our dear Mrs. Thompson, of Hillsboro, and our dear Mrs. Monroe, president of the Crusade division of the white ribbon army, but for the first time in all these twenty-two years we have Mary—Mary Thompson Tuttle—who gave us our Crusade Psalm. You know that her heart has always been with us. You know of the great sorrow that came to her last year, and she is here under its shadow. Here (holding up the Crusade Bible) is the book out of which the psalm was first read, which has been in our Convention for years, which crossed the sea and was used in the largest hall in London last June at the great World's Convention."

The Crusade Psalm was then read responsively, Mrs. Monroe led in prayer and the Convention ball was fairly set a-rolling. After the roll-call of officers and the formal acceptance of the program by the Convention, a bouquet of roses came to Miss Willard (by what sleight-of-hand she knew not, she said) from the World's superintendent of flower missions in far-off Australia. The Silver Lake Quartet, in a beautiful rendering of song, struck the keynote of the Convention, "Loyalty to Christ," with the ringing refrain, "On to Victory," and in response to continued applause sang a song which reached every heart with its touching appeal:

"Come back, my boy, come back, I say,
And walk now in thy mother's way."

Miss Willard then called Mrs. Stevens, vice-president-at-large, to the chair, and proceeded to deliver her annual message—a message which by reason of the growing strength and influence of our great organization holds a wide significance, not only for her loyal constituency, but for American people generally. It is only possible, of course, to give here but a small portion of this statesman-like address, and we must refer our readers to the printed copies for the complete report—though even then they must necessarily miss the sparkle of the running remarks with which our Chieftain, as is her wont, enlivened its delivery.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS.

To-day we are met in a city that is the cradle of the "personal liberty" idea. For as John Hancock was first signer of our corporate Declaration of Independence, John Hawkins was first signer of that "Washingtonian Pledge," which was the individual Declaration of Personal Liberty, and in 1840 raised a national revolt against rum led by its victims. Sympathy with this strike of a sex tempted almost beyond endurance by the legalized liquor trade, led an army of kind hearts to take the pledge, along with the inebriates.

My own father and mother and doubtless the parents of a majority of the delegates whom I address, signed for this reason, and my father's Washingtonian pledge, always before me on the walls of the old home, was my first lesson in personal liberty, which, multiplied in the arithmetic of a lifetime, has led me here to preside over and you to be the chosen delegates of a convention in John Hawkins' famous city, that is but one sequel of the movement he began. Well-nigh sixty years have passed, and from the personal pledge point with which it started. God's temperance cyclone has swept its widening way until now it is part and parcel of every worthy movement under the sun.

TEETOTALISM.

Teetotalism, the foundation stone of temperance reform, should be kept no less clearly in view than its superstructure, prohibition; not otherwise can prohibition ever be "broad-based upon the people's will." In earlier years the group of abstainers was smaller and more intolerant than it is now. Whoever did not take the teetotal pledge was looked upon by those who had done so as in some sense an enemy of his race. To take a drop of intoxicating liquor was a sin per se; happily now, it has become on the part of unnumbered millions a sin perceived, which is far better.

From no country have we received more encouraging reports concerning the total abstinence movement this year than from France. The leading ministers of the state do not use alcoholic liquors, and the leading literary men such as Dumas, Zola, Daudet, Sardou, drink only mineral waters. This is a new departure for France, and if total abstinence for the sake of having a happier and more successful life has become popular among the leaders in that wine drinking country, it would be disgraceful for white ribbon women to ground the weapons of their rebellion against intoxicants. What can be done in France can be done anywhere, and will be. It is only a question of Mrs. Grundy. Where she sits is the head of the table, and the severe expression with which she was wont to look at us in times past has relaxed to the dimensions of a simper, and will increase to a positive society smile in exact proportion to the number of people belonging to the "fashionable set" who have the moral courage to set the fashion by turning the wine-glass right side up, which in accordance with expert opinion means always upside down.

OUR NATIONAL ORGAN.

THE UNION SIGNAL goes on its way rejoicing. It has weathered more storms than could be counted, and holds its own in the great fleet of journalism where it has won its way to the front.

For one I can speak freely of THE UNION SIGNAL, for although the sisterly good-will of my younger coadjutors keeps my name at the head, and I write and send paragraphs almost daily, still the policy of the paper and the way in which the bonny craft is steered through the breakers of opposition and in the whirlpools of emergency, depends on the firm young hands at the helm in Headquarters. It is an instance of the mild sway of women that THE UNION SIGNAL gives a fortnight's vacation, with wages continued, to every one connected with it, from our real editor-in-chief, Margaret Sudduth, to the smallest boy who runs on errands. It is good to have a vacation for the paper and from the paper during the fortnight of midsummer, and I wish all women might join us in making universal this helpful custom.

In the absence of Miss Sudduth, who asked for a year in which, through change of scene and opportunities of study, she might become better fitted for the post in which she has won the confidence and admiration of us all, her former preceptor, Mrs. Prof. S. M. D. Fry, now the president of Minnesota W. C. T. U., will take her place. Mrs. Fry brings to her new position the fruits of a lifetime of study and teaching, English literature having been her favorite subject during many years of instruction at the University at Bloomington and also at the State University of Minnesota. These qualifications added to her lifelong Christian training and character give bright promise for the work of our sister in her new field.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL AND SANITARIUM.

This year has witnessed an encouraging degree of prosperity—fully equal to that of 1894. Leading members of the medical staff declare that they would rather bring their patients here than to any other hospital in Chicago. Thirty thousand pages of literature have been distributed. Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, one of the most distinguished among women physicians, declares that she is indebted to this hospital (of whose staff she is a leading member) for "a new view of therapeutics." Our society has every reason to be proud of the record and work of this growing institution, and I hope that its national character may be fully recognized, and such action taken as will secure the endowment of beds and ultimately the erection of a large, new building.

THE WOMAN'S TEMPLE.

No year since this enterprise was undertaken at the Nashville Convention in 1887, has witnessed more heroic efforts on its behalf than 1895.

Mrs. Carse merits our hearty goodwill and earnest gratitude for the devotion that has held her to her great task; one that has grown more difficult each year, owing to the unexampled distress of the country and to the untiring opposition of many, both within and without the white ribbon fold.

Our great Chicago merchant, Mr. Marshall Field, responded handsomely to the request of Lady Henry Somerset, and the $25,000 pledged by him on the condition that three hundred thousand should be raised before the year 1896, furnished the leverage that the enterprise required after weathering the storms of the recent unparalleled monetary crisis.

I had a letter lately from Mrs. Carse, in which she said, "By God's help I trust to have $300,000 by January 1, 1896. I have already $100,000. Could the report of the Convention have been postponed until November, I am confident I should have been able to get a much larger sum. During the summer rich people betake themselves to distant places and it was uphill work to reach them. We are going to get the money, don't doubt it. I have distributed a list of forty names among the Temple Praying Band, and have a certain amount set beside each name that I am going to ask for, and I confidently expect to get $200,000 from these forty persons. The Wheels have brought in over twelve thousand dollars. There are four or five times as many out. The slowness of our good women in returning them militates greatly against making the plan as successful as it might be, but I must say in justice to the women that this has been the hardest year of all, though we now see some returning signs of prosperity."

Miss Sara G. Johnson, financial secretary (and a typical Boston girl of the best sort) writes me thus:

"Mrs. Carse has asked me to give you a brief statement of the Wheels sent out and returned, etc. We have sent out forty-five thousand—thirty-five thousand of which were in response to requests. About nine thousand Wheels have been returned. We have received in round numbers from the Wheels $11,000 up to September 4. From other sources since last November when the yearly statement was rendered, we have received over $30,000—this includes the $11,000 from the Wheels. Besides this, of course, Mrs. Carse has over $70,000 subscribed in her book towards the $300,000 that she hopes to raise by January, 1896." Many of the Temple Wheels that are sent out bring back with them sweet and pathetic stories of self denial and loving devotion. Wheels have come back from almost every country of the world and they are rolling still.

While it is perfectly understood that (in accordance with the policy that governs all our lines of work) no W. C. T. U. and no individual is bound to put in any work whatever for our "House Beautiful" it remains true that the outlook of the enterprise is brighter and better to-day than it has been in years. We begin to feel the impetus of the reviving "good times," and we have every reason to believe that we shall gain a controlling interest, at least, in the building before the twelve years of grace shall end that began in 1890.

I do most earnestly hope that this Convention will take such action as shall make it plain to the public that we are a unit in our faith and in our honest hard work for the success of this greatest financial undertaking to which women have ever put heart or hand.

Thinking of Mrs. Carse we may paraphrase a familiar hymn and cheer her on with the words:

Stand steadfast for the Temple,
Amid unnumbered foes;
Your courage rise with danger,
And strength to strength oppose.

PROHIBITION.

For the fiscal year 1895, the United States government issued two hundred and twenty-eight thousand liquor licenses, which is equivalent to a licensed saloon for each two hundred and ninety-eight people—to say nothing of the liquor dealers who are unlicensed. In the capitol of the nation there are six hundred and five licensed barrooms or one for each four hundred and forty-five people. If we take out the women and children and the temperance people as a class, there are less than one hundred drinkers to support each saloon in the United States. The estimated annual consumption of intoxicating liquor is per capita, of wine, one gallon: whisky, four gallons; beer, forty-six gallons. This, at the lowest wholesale price, amounts to eight hundred and thirty-three million dollars, to say nothing of the indirect cost represented by loss of wages, loss of health, loss of position and of life itself.

The late Lord Coleridge, Chief Justice of England, said that "at a moderate estimate, something like ninety-five per cent of the crimes that are tried in the courts are due to drink."

But (as one of our Christian ministers has lately said) "a congress, a legislature, a municipal council has no moral right to sit for any other business than that for which God sits on His throne."

It is this principle that makes prohibition in politics and law the frontier line of the great controversy. Here the pioneers have taken their position, planting the flag of America, which is the flag of progress, although it often waves above the dram-shop, and calling out, "The colors will never go back to the regiment; bring the regiment up to the colors!" For this is the core and center of every reform movement, the existent, persistent, resistant attitude of that nucleus of men and women who "will not excuse, will not equivocate, will not retreat a single inch and will be heard." Around them rally other circles with their faces toward the center, but at a greater distance from the pivotal principle that nevertheless aligns the mass. It is not for those who have lifted the standard to criticise the brothers and sisters who do not rally so closely to it as themselves, but it is for them "having done all to stand," for by the unchanged attitude they hold those movements in the larger circle were made possible at first, and will gradually converge on the unwavering center upon which the entire propaganda depends for solidity and steadfastness. In this spirit let us meet the various methods put forward by good people who do not go as far as we do; let us wish them well, and cherish toward them that good will which we would fain inspire for ourselves in them, but let it be understood from the beginning that "the Old Guard dies, but never surrenders."

At this point Miss Willard called for the singing of the doxology as an expression of praise and purpose, and the old hallelujah of the righteous rang out heartily from every lip. She continued:

So far as I know the most recent legal act in support of Prohibition was that of our brave veteran in the cause, the Hon. Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, on February 19, 1895. The Polyglot Petition had been presented to the President of the United States early that day, and he had courteously received us, but had made no allusion to the object of our visit other than to express his appreciation of the energy that women had manifested in getting together so many names. But ex-Senator Blair offered a resolution in the House, calling for the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the name of the Polyglot Petition.

I earnestly hope that the Prohibition Park Conference of Reforms held last spring may indicate the possible selection of a Presidential candidate by the Prohibition and Labor parties on whom they can unite, though they will undoubtedly hold separate national conventions and put forth each its own platform. As neither can by any possibility elect a candidate, it would seem to be the dictate of common sense to poll as large a vote as possible in testimony of the strength of the reform movement of the nation. However, it is my observation that there are such cross currents, conflicting interests and antagonistic aims that we cannot be sanguine that such a plan will be adopted, much as we might desire union of action concerning the chief candidate.

POLITICS.

The cry of the country has been, "God give us men," and it has been answered in a quarter to which we did not look, by the pastor of a rich city congregation and the scion of an aristocratic house; but we should be doubly glad that light has risen up in a new place and strength has come where many a grumbling reformer would have predicted only weakness. God has not left Himself without a witness:

"It may not be my way, it may not be thy way;
But yet in His own way, the Lord will provide."

In law, the great discovery has been made that policemen can be found who are not blind and deaf in presence of dramshops, gambling dens, and houses of ill-fame. It is a thing unparalleled for a man of the antecedents, education and prospects of the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt to accept the office of chairman of the police commission. No act of patriotism can be cited in these modern days to equal it except the act of Dr. Parkhurst, who like another Horatius, flung himself, spectacles, sermon paper and all into the chasm that had opened under the feet of the New Yorkers, and who bids fair to close it. For my part I should like to see one of these men President of the United States and the other Secretary of the Treasury.

THE LABOR QUESTION.

In London I saw this inscription in a grimy street: "Marquis of Westminster Buildings for the Industrial Classes." The incongruity smote me as I gazed, for who is the Marquis of Westminster and why should he not belong to the "industrial classes"? How much better it would be for him if he did! Why should there be any class but the industrial? Why should humanity be divided into grades based on the fact that they work or that they do not work, and by what monstrosity of delusion did it ever come to be thought that those who did not work stood at the head, and those who worked, just in proportion to the degree of their work, stood at the foot? I cannot bear to think so ill of the race to which I belong as to believe that a thing so sacred as honest toil is looked down upon for its own sake. It is rather because under a false system of society some work so constantly that they have not time to develop their powers, physical, mental and moral, into that symmetry that makes admirable character and attractive deportment—but they ought to have the time, and what is more, they will.

It was well said by Froude, the historian, many years since, that the best ally of rich men in piling up their gains is the increasing tendency of drunkenness in the working classes. So long as men get drunk, they will not be politically dangerous. If the trades unions would make sobriety a condition of membership, they might be absolute masters of England and America to-morrow.

Much criticism has been expended upon me for declaring in my third biennial address before the World's W. C. T. U., in June last, that as temperance people we had been in error in not recognizing the relation of poverty to intemperance, and because I stated that while from the first I had maintained that intemperance caused poverty I was now ready not only to reiterate that cardinal doctrine but to add that poverty caused intemperance. But by that declaration I am ready to stand or fall. It is an axiom and will be admitted by every reasonable person; as temperance people we have not been in the habit of saying it but everybody knows that it is true. I did not say that poverty caused intemperance in the same degree that intemperance causes poverty, nor do I think it does, but as we have not been wont to recognize poverty at all among the procuring causes of intemperance it seems to me high time that we did so.

THE ENFRANCHISEMENT OF WOMEN.

The cataract of Niagara has now been to some extent utilized for the manufacture of stored-up electricity. A fifty thousand horse-power represents what has already been turned to account, and the power can be carried five hundred miles. It is an interesting and curious fact that the first use made of this mighty force is to extract from the earth the new metal, aluminum, light as chalk and strong as steel. The only parallel in the moral world to this magical advance in the material world is that power at the polls by means of which the aluminum of woman's nature, "not too bright or good for human nature's daily food," may be separated from the mass, and set free to do its saving work of strength and purification in the "house not made with hands," the great governmental home of the people.

It is my steadfast belief that the ministers of the United States have done more than any other one class to hasten the progress of the woman movement. I know that many of our reformers hold a contrary view, and perhaps I am not an impartial witness, as I come of a long line of ministers, and my only brother was a member of that guild; but we must not forget that the woman question can only prosper in time of peace, and that as a class the Christian ministry has, more than any other, proclaimed peace on earth and good will to men. The teachings of the pulpit have inculcated those principles under which women can be co-workers with men in every line of life. It is only under the influence of the principles of Christ that the inhabitants of a nation become sufficiently coördinated in their attitude toward government and commerce, literature and labor, art and life to appreciate the characters and qualities of women as co-workers in all the enterprises by which men forge forward toward better conditions for themselves and families. It is also true that ministers have been a well nigh determining factor in the boards of trustees of those higher educational institutions to which we have been admitted, and without such education we could never have held our own in the comradeship of good work now so largely recognized among men and women. All my life I have found more encouragement and help from Christian ministers than from any other class of men, and I believe that the majority of our reformers would bear the same testimony. As a rule the pulpits of all churches, except those in which sacerdotalism forbids such action, have been opened to us. When I went to the South, it was, as a rule, ministers and their wives who helped me forward. Nor must it be forgotten that ministers formed the bone and sinew of the early, as they do of the later temperance movement, and as they do of every other reform, because they are the representatives of the Divine Reformer, and they cannot altogether deny Him or themselves.

These facts furnish a background before which a few ministers have disported themselves in an unenviable light; for instance, when the excellent Bishop ——, of Albany, says to a class of "sweet girl graduates" that when women vote they will sell their ballots as they now sell themselves; when the gifted Dr. ——, of Georgia, declares that "the woman who rides the bicycle is the victim of a personal devil," and when the scholarly Dr. —— who also lives in the same state, (and most grievous of all, represents the church founded by Susannah Wesley's son) declares that he would rather see a saloon and house of infamy on every street corner than that women should have the ballot; and the brilliant Dr. ——, who will perhaps be longest remembered by his famous declaration, that, "if women were admitted to the general conference, every woman who entered would keep one man out."

These distinguished gentlemen are leading representatives of their various denominations—the Episcopal, Baptist and Methodist. The Congregational church seems to be emerging from its fog-banks of prejudice, but the Presbyterian lags well to the rear. Even its foremost representative, Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, of New York, has put forth utterances on the woman question that grieve the hearts of his loyal co-workers in the cause of pure government. However, we are inclined to handle Dr. Parkhurst tenderly for his work's sake and his often infirmities on the woman question.

The best sign of the times is that we have many such who are coming up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and who are the true yoke-fellows and comrades of the new woman, who invests her life for the purpose of adding to the good forces of the world.

THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

The greatest of American essayists, Ralph Waldo Emerson, says that "civilization is the influence of good women." Perhaps their growing influence, as testified by the great meetings held recently in London, is a prophecy of that universal solvent for the nations—a federation for the people to whom English is the native tongue.

The London Convention of last June was a great teacher; it was the most salient object lesson of Christian unity that any woman's society has ever furnished, and we do not know that any man's society has exceeded it in this splendid quality. The diapason of the creeds was sounded from Unitarian to Catholic, the one point of unity being the imitation of Christ, the recognition that around Him we can all group ourselves as brothers and sisters of a common Lord and Leader.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

In my address before the World's W. C. T. U. I gave an extended account of the Polyglot Petition, and hence will not enlarge upon that extensive subject here. The petition was presented in Washington in February last. The popular demonstration when it was exhibited in Convention Hall before seven thousand people was the largest, so far as I know, that has been held in the capital city.

The Petition will be presented to the British government within a few months. The session of the new Parliament was too brief for the arrangements to be made, and they must lie over until the winter session is convened next February.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Nothing is more important than to put forward definite aims for the local unions. Our department for that purpose this year has seemed to me well worthy of its name and a feature of much value in THE UNION SIGNAL.

I wish that as the red-letter days approach they might be printed at the head of the column on the front page of our official organ. We are all so busy that unless frequently reminded we are apt to overlook times and seasons that would have been invaluable to us in the way of spiritual rehabilitation.

One of the most helpful lines of winter work would be the organizing or a white ribbon choir of young women. The uniform of the choir might be a light blue blouse with white cuffs and a white ribbon reaching from the right shoulder to the left, finished off with white bows, and a skirt either dark blue or black. In England the whole cost of the blouse with ribbons, etc., without the making does not exceed one dollar of our money. A choir thus constituted, with the White Ribbon Hymnal and Y Song Book in hand, will make echoes in such a way as to arouse greater enthusiasm than almost any speaker could hope to win.

In the World's W. C. T. U. we are trying to get the help of a woman in each great denomination who, through the press organs of that denomination and in other ways will try to make the history and methods of the W. C. T. U. known to that denomination and to secure members from its fold. I have long thought that much good might come from a similar effort in each National union. I especially wish that some good woman in one of our cities, a woman who cares for the cause and would like to see such an establishment in the hands of young white ribbon women, would found a white ribbon college settlement Lady Henry Somerset contemplates doing this in London; who will be our pioneer in America? It is only by living among the people that one learns how to handle their cases with equal profit to the receiver and the giver. The haphazard form of charity accepted in the past is deprecated now by expert workers.

In the World's W. C. T. U. we have now a department of politics, our English sisters having organized one within the last year and it works well. A notice was given by me at the Cleveland Convention looking to such action in the National W. C. T. U. I wish we might "go and do likewise."

As it is now necessary to give notice of the formation of a new department one year in advance, I wish to suggest a department of amusements and a department of work among household helpers. It seems to me it would be well if in the state and local unions, as well as in the National, these lines of work were taken up. The state of New York has 179,000 female servants; Pennsylvania, nearly 120,000; South Carolina has the greatest number of women agricultural laborers, over 78,000; Mississippi, the greatest number of women farmers, planters and overseers, over 16,000. Nearly four millions of women and girls were occupied in gainful toil in 1890, and while the number of working males was twenty-seven per cent greater in 1890 than it was in 1880, that of women who work have increased forty-nine per cent. The department of household helpers is intended to benefit all these various grades of workers.

Mrs. H. J. Osborn has been placed at the head of the World's W. C. T. U. Lecture Bureau. Mrs. Osborn has already brought out several sets of slides for lime-light lectures which might be given by any intelligent young woman even though she lacked the gift of original public speech. I wish it might be done for our own country, and I believe that a great many young women of good abilities would take up the work if they had the help that such a series of lectures and illustrations would furnish. I earnestly hope that this convention will appoint a capable woman at Headquarters to undertake this specialty, beginning of course in a small way that no financial risk need be involved.

The W. C. T. U., of Adrian, Michigan, gave an afternoon entertainment in the principal opera house, which was filled with a cultivated and interested audience. It consisted of a reproduction, as far as possible, of the great convention in London, including the Albert Hall meeting and the garden party given by Lady Henry Somerset at her country home, Reigate Priory, near London. Entertainments like this would be unrivaled for their educational value in making the work and workers known to the people generally, and the reports in the local press would widen that knowledge to the circle of the great public.

The Demorest medal contests, at which forty-two thousand medals have been won, and two hundred and fifty thousand of the choicest of the world's young people have spoken in favor of prohibition to fifteen million people, is one of the finest outcomes of the modern temperance movement. Our lamented brother, William Jennings Demorest, was a modern man, and put an amount of practical good sense into all his work that might well be carefully studied by other experts. His heroic wife, Mrs. E. L. Demorest, is now at the head of this great enterprise, and desires to extend it still further for the good of that great cause to which her husband was devoted, and as a perpetual memorial to him.

If any local union is wondering what to do next, let it determine that it will give a Demorest medal contest. For full information address the Demorest Medal Contest Bureau, 15 East 14th street, New York city.

The white ribbon women of Illinois have issued a new department for the enforcement of law. This was done in recognition of the fact that all states have some good laws on their statute books, as laws against keeping saloons open and selling liquors on Sunday, against selling to minors and habitual drunkards, against keeping disorderly and disreputable houses, and laws providing for the care of orphans and worse than motherless children. If these laws were enforced, a large majority of the saloons would be closed, and yet the alliance between the saloon and politics is so strong that it is difficult to get men to undertake the enforcement of law. It has been well said by Mrs. Metzgar, state superintendent of this department in Illinois, that "It would be a good thing if upon the table of every white-ribboner there were three books—the Bible, a copy of the State Laws and a copy of the City Laws." The question is often asked, "What can a local union do?" Among the many answers one of the best that I have seen is given in the leaflet on the "Enforcement of Law," published by Mrs. Metzgar, of Moline, Ill.

Lotteries have received this year their deadly, if not death blows, in the passage by Congress of the Hoar Anti-Lottery Bill which was followed and supported by new state laws in Florida and Kansas. But in our large cities gambling is still a blighting influence, and I wish that as a subdivision of our purity department we might form an Anti-Gambling League.

It is important that we publish a paper that shall be the organ of our purity work. Dr. Mary Wood Allen's monthly magazine is excellent and meets the need. I believe we should do well to have it published by the W. T. P. A., if she is willing. I have many times urged that we furnish a similar publication, and if we cannot do so monthly, why not quarterly in the expectation of bringing it out more frequently if it pays its way?

I wish that all women interested in the greatest of all reforms, that which involves international arbitration as a substitute for war, would subscribe for the organ of the society, the Arbitrator, published by William Randal Cremer, 23 Bedford Street, Strand, London, W. C.

I hope our superintendents will more largely avail themselves of their power, each to appoint an associate, a secretary and such lecturers as she thinks will advance the interest of her department. She will, of course, select her staff helpers with great care and will in no case choose anyone to whom the general officers object. The better way is to have all names ratified by the convention or the executive committee, but if that is not done the general officers have the power of ratification or rejection, under the head of unfinished business of the convention.

While it may not be practicable to organize at present a department of Christian Citizenship in the National W. C. T. U. as we have done in the World's (Mrs. Sarah D. LaFetra, superintendent,) an associate connected with the department of politics, should we form one as I hope, might co-operate with the World's department.

Let me urge the local unions not to forget Pundita Ramabai in her hallowed enterprise for the industrial education of high caste Hindoo widows. Her school at Poona is steadily progressing, and many of our societies have organized "Ramabai Circles" of twelve members, each of whom promises a dollar a year to help on the work of the great woman pioneer of India.

I wish we might do the same for the school for Japanese women founded by our little sister, Mrs. Sakurai, of Tokyo, who was with us in Cleveland, and whose pathetic presence and appeals have deeply enlisted those who knew her best when here.

Money collected for Pundita Ramabai should be forwarded to Mrs. Judith W. Andrews, Rutland Square, Boston, Mass., and for our Japanese sister to Miss Ruby Gilbert, The Woman's Temple, Chicago.

It is of great value to the cause that the noon prayer-meeting in Willard Hall is of growing interest and value. The work of Mrs. Zimmerman, of Illinois; Mrs. Denny, of Indiana, and Mrs. Marion Baxter, of Michigan, merits our recognition, and I hope such a resolution may be here adopted as shall serve to strengthen the hands of those who carry forward this gospel movement in the heart of the great typical city of the new world.

If the president of local W. C. T. U's in each large city would try to secure a dozen or more names of distinguished men and women for the Polyglot Petition it would strengthen the movement in the leading cities of other nations. Some young woman who is not now a member of our society might be induced to undertake this special commission and thus become sufficiently interested to join us.

White Ribbon Day should be celebrated in every Chautauqua camp and every other camp of good people everywhere. There will be little or no difficulty in securing this observance if we but ask for it in our usual womanly way.

Bishop Vincent invites us to have a White Ribbon Day at the Chautauqua, which is the "mother of us all," and I hope a letter of appreciation will be sent him by order of the Convention.

The eightieth birthday of Dr. F. B. Lees was celebrated March 15. He is one of the great men of the temperance movement, and his books should be read by all who aspire to an intelligent knowledge of the temperance reform. His "Temperance Bible Commentary" is now in its sixth edition. This, with other admirable publications in the form of books, leaflets and a pamphlet entitled, "The True Thinker," may be obtained by writing to Dr. Lees, Bushey Grove Road, Watford, Herts, England. The hearty congratulations of the white ribbon women were sent to Dr. Lees on his birthday and he spoke at the World's Convention.

I think we should do well to provide for the nomination by the executive committee (subject to the action of the annual meeting) of a few distinguished women as honorary vice-presidents, and among them I would suggest our comrades, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, president of the Woman's National Council; Mrs. Margaret Bottome, president of the King's Daughters, and Miss Susan B. Anthony, that "noblest Roman of them all," president of the National Women's Suffrage Association.

We should in the National devise some method by which each state president is heard at every Convention, and in each state by which each district and county president has a hearing. These are our trusty generals of divisions and brigades, and we lose much by not receiving an individual impression of their experience and inspiration.

After much thought and observation, it seems to me that we should get better results from our resolutions committee if, while by precedent we select one member for each state, we let that choice fall upon the state president and then request that for a week or two previous to the Convention resolutions should be sent in to the corresponding secretary, which resolutions should be submitted to a sub-committee, appointed by the executive committee, who should sift out the good ones and make additions as seemed important. The declaration of principles annually made by a great society constitutes its address to the world in general, and should be framed with the best expert knowledge of which the society is capable.

A by-law which was adopted last year provides that all notices of departmental meetings are to be given only through the secretaries of the Convention, and not by individuals. This will greatly facilitate the good order of the Convention, and I feel sure the subject needs only to be mentioned for all to realize its importance in the preservation of good order.

The Salvation Army in England has what is called an Auxiliary League, composed of persons, who, without necessarily indorsing or approving of every method used by the army, are nevertheless sufficiently in sympathy with its great work of saving the lost to give it their prayers, influence and money. It is also composed of persons who, although seeing eye to eye with the army, are unable to join it because they are actively engaged in the work of their own denomination, or by reason of bad health or other infirmities, which forbid their taking any active part in Christian work. These persons pay a guinea a year ($5), and show their sympathy and help by uniting in the noon hour of prayer, giving their influence in favor of the army and assisting to raise funds as the opportunity may offer.

It seems to me we should do well to have such an Auxiliary League in the W. C. T. U.

There is another method adopted by the United Kingdom Alliance of Great Britain which I think would greatly strengthen our financial department: A large number of district workers are sent out to speak, organize, take subscriptions for the Alliance organ, and solicit annual subscriptions for the society. A fixed sum is guaranteed to each worker for the month or quarter, and if an amount equal to it, plus all expenses, is not raised, the district worker is discontinued at the end of the quarter or month. By this means the Alliance (Sir Wilfrid Lawson, president,) raises tens of thousands of dollars for its work each year.

A Woodbridge fund for the gratuitous distribution of temperance literature, a Lathrap fund for the development of colored work, a West fund to help raise the salary of our missionary in Japan, six hundred dollars a year, a Margaret Bright Lucas fund for organization in needy parts of the world—have all been adopted either by the National or the World's W. C. T. U. and those kind friends whom God has blessed with this world's goods cannot do better than to send money to our treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, at the Woman's Temple, for these separate funds, and she will forward to the World's treasurer, Mrs. Sanderson, of Quebec, such moneys as belong to that organization.

There are two thousand seven hundred counties in the United States. If under the law of systematic giving, which means brains applied to the pocketbook, one dollar were sent each year from each one of these counties, we could keep four capable workers in the field forming the helpful groups that center around the white banner inscribed, "for God, and Home and Native Land." Shall we ask our treasurer to try to get that dollar in the year to come, as a special fund for work on the frontier?

Our youngest round-the-world missionary, Miss Alice Palmer, who has wrought so admirably in South Africa, is stirring us all up to good works by her urgent desire and purpose that we shall have a missionary fund. Miss Palmer also believes that we ought to raise the money to help our sisters yonder in their desperate efforts to get rid of the C. D. Acts. I can but think that if Miss Palmer could go out into the field and tell what she has seen, in her own earnest way, the money might be raised, and I record her purpose here as a help in such a sacred embassy, and shall feel glad if she will take it up.

The old-fashioned pound party is being revived in England in the interest of philanthropy, with this modification, it is called "Pound Day," and the following notice is placed in the local papers and sent out to friends throughout the country: "It is proposed to have an annual 'Pound Day' for this home and we have fixed upon September 29. Will all our kind friends send on that day to Miss ——, a pound of something—tea, sugar, rice, cheese, currants, jam, soap, candles, soda, pins, wool or a pound in gold or silver. Please help us, but avoid perishables."

Might not the local union have a day once a year on which it asked for gifts? Many of our societies could utilize such materials as it might enumerate, and most of all that emblem of all the products of the earth, which is the best and worst thing in the material world, namely, the currency of Uncle Samuel and the coin of the Realm.

In view of the great number of unemployed who must be provided for this winter, I suggest that the W. C. T. U. cannot help the cause of temperance or of labor in a more practical way than to establish at its headquarters an employment bureau. If it is necessary the people would, I am confident, pay the cost of renting such an institution. This would involve a canvass by our members preliminary to opening a register of all persons who were willing to furnish employment for an hour, a half-day, a day, or longer period, with a statement of the kind of work that could be furnished. Then let cards be printed giving the name and address of the managers of the employment bureau, and when help is sought let the applicant be directed to go there that he may learn where he can obtain work, so that he may retain his self-respect while providing for his necessities in an honest, manly way. Efforts should also be made by the bureau to secure the names of men who would not perhaps apply for help and yet for whom employment might be found, at least during a sufficient number of hours per week to furnish them in return with the necessaries of life. It would be important to see that men addicted to drink were paid in food and clothing rather than in money. I feel sure that this method of help would commend itself to the good sense of the community, and would place the W. C. T. U. on a vantage ground from which to carry on other lines of work not so readily comprehended by the average mind.

The Habitual Drunkards' Act will doubtless pass the present Parliament of Great Britain in a modified form, but retaining its general purpose to compel drunkards to place themselves under conditions where they may reform; and the Cruelty to Children Act will probably be so amended as to make it against the law to send the little ones to the saloon. We can do no better work than to secure similar legislation in every state, and in most of them it can now be "had for the asking."

In the recent reform crusade in New York city, one of the most effective means employed was that of Mrs. Pomeroy, who formed what she called "Labor Links," including, perhaps, twelve young women in each one, and each of these was pledged to circulate literature, employ argument, and win a certain number of votes for the purification of politics in the metropolis. She then combined these Links in larger societies and assemblies until they lengthened at last to chains of public sentiment that helped to bind the tiger of Tammany and leave decent people free.

I hope the following, or similar resolutions, may be adopted by this Convention:

Resolved, That we feel it to be our solemn duty to urge the adoption of the name "Home Protection Party" instead of "Prohibition Party." The use of the word Prohibition, as the name of a party, has given excuse to the pulpits of the land to cease from advocating the principles of prohibition. We have no right thus to diminish the total amount of instruction and arousing of the people that must be done before Prohibition can ever become successful in politics and law. The word Prohibition is wholly a negative term, distasteful to American ears; the word "Home Protection" is positive, attractive and contains an argument in itself. We urge our brothers, beside whom we hope ere long to stand as voters at the polls, to heed our earnest request, repeated for so many years through our publications and addresses, and to adopt the name prayed for by their most loyal and devoted allies, and call ours the Home Protection Party.

Resolved, That Catholic women and Jewish women should be invited to send fraternal delegates from their annual conventions to our own, and to establish branches of the white ribbon society within their own borders.

There are two books that I wish were read and circulated by the local unions, and I am going to venture to speak of them both, although one belongs to me. "May Women Preach?" by Dr. Hayes, former moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, and "Woman in the Pulpit." If the local unions would read these little books and circulate them, inducing local editors to publish paragraphs they might do much to set good people thinking on a subject that must be cleared up in many minds before we shall ever have equality in the household of faith.

Japan, that nation of surprises, has introduced an innovation in connection with the launching of ships. As temperance people we have protested long against the custom of breaking a bottle of wine over the prow of a ship as it glides forth to its native home. And we have done this because we did not believe that intoxicating liquor ought to be the emblem of kindness and good will, since it has caused more calamities at sea and on land than any other product of man's devising. How much more poetic and reasonable the Japanese custom, to liberate a cage of birds the instant the ship begins to move, typifying that as the birds fly to all points of the compass, so will be the course of the ship along the paths of commerce. Can we not use our influence to introduce this custom?

I suggest the following by-law:

In the absence of any National superintendent the department shall be represented on the board of superintendents by the state superintendent of that department in the state in which the National Convention is held. This would not necessarily involve the vote on the part of such state superintendent, but would do away with the great disadvantage of a silent key in the octave of departments which produces lack of harmony and minimizes the work of the ensuing year.

I have given notice of an amendment to the constitution of the World's W. C. T. U. by which the officers of that society shall be nominated in the executive committee, but these nominations shall be subject to the action of the Convention. Also of a by-law to be added to the World's W. C. T. U. code, requiring that the Convention be extended over three full days.

It is proposed to place a tablet in memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Barrett Browning, the greatest woman poet of all time, in Westminster Abbey. If this is done I know that many of our members will wish to bear some small part in the collecting of funds, and for this reason I mention the probability of such a movement.

It is suggested that in 1900 or 1901 a "round-the-world" tour be undertaken to emphasize the unity of Christian, philanthropic and reform workers in all nations, the chief rule being that no display of the divisions of Christianity shall be made, since Catholic, Protestant, Evangelical and Liberal can unite on the same terms in great convocations to consider not the theory but the practice of the gospel. Christianity applied will be the theme of these great meetings. The fight against intemperance and impurity, the saloon and gambling house, the fight against free divorce and Sabbath desecration is one that will practically unite that great militant host so widely severed in theology, but so practically united in work for the good of mankind.

Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts and his gifted wife, who is a white-ribboner, have projected this great enterprise, which has already won the adhesion of many of our leaders in the various denominations, and is pronounced by Dr. Lunn, the well-known authority on journeys of Christian workers by land and sea, to be altogether practicable.

PERSONAL.

My sisters who are veterans in the work will remember that when in 1874 I was called from the presidency of the Chicago W. C. T. U. (which was my first appointment as a white ribbon worker) to the corresponding secretaryship of the National W. C. T. U., it was a promotion that implied less constant work on my part in the local union, and this was true of the National society when I was made president of the World's W. C. T. U. At first there was less complaint on this score as the new organization existed chiefly by reason of paper and prophecy, but now when it has grown to be a great power and in its interest I have lived more than two years in England (for although I went in August, 1892, I have been at home nearly a year of the intervening time) some of my comrades feel that I have neglected the work at home, and in a sense this is also true; but it should be remembered that as I was not in my usual health I could hardly have accomplished as much as formerly if I had remained in my own country during the entire time, and it should not be forgotten that as I have had twice the stenographic help when in England that I had at home, I have been able to do much by means of paragraphs, articles, leaflets and innumerable letters. I had supposed that Lady Henry Somerset would be chosen president of the World's W. C. T. U. at the London Convention of last June, and did all in my power to bring this about, even as I did when we met in Boston at the first World's Convention in 1891; but our English leader does not yet see her way clear to accept this position, although I hope she may do so ere long. Now, in view of my reëlection and of the fact that the Polyglot Petition has not yet made its way around the world—many circumstances having conspired to render it impossible to carry out our contemplated visit to Scandinavia or the Mediterranean capitals as yet—I must ask my ever kind comrades carefully to consider the subject and situation and to deal with it as they think is for the best interest to our dear old "Mother National" of the National W. C. T. U. We are all alike devoted, and with good reason, since we have toiled unceasingly for more than twenty years to found and to establish it as a nucleus of broad-minded Christian work around which the women who come after us may rally in ever increasing numbers and with the same devotion that was divinely bestowed upon the homes of the nation when the hearts of women became the altars of the Crusade fire. Far be it from me to make one living coal on any of these sacred altars glow with a less fervent light. It was not for this that I made my early vows. There is a blessed old hymn that we used to sing at camp-meeting, a verse of which comes to me as the fit expression of what I feel:

High heaven that heard that solemn vow,
That vow renewed shall daily hear,
Till in life's latest hour I bow
And bless in death a bond so dear.

You have dealt with me most generously from the beginning. If for twelve years I worked without a salary, it was not because you would not gladly have given me one, but because I felt you were not able to secure it, with all your other cares. Since 1886 you have insisted on providing a monthly allowance of generous dimensions, and you have during all these years, as you had done for several previous to that date, given me the invaluable services of Anna Gordon, who is now in her nineteenth year of association with me in the work of our society and whose character has grown and deepened while her ability has steadily increased until I feel that I could not express in words what she has been and is to me and to the white ribbon women everywhere. You have also paid the printing and postage bills of the president's office and traveling expenses to the convention, but not, as a matter of course, our numerous voyages across the sea.

The birthday fund still adheres to me, although I have never drawn upon it for myself, and have added interest to principal until it is intact at three thousand dollars. The World's W. C. T. U. Convention would not permit me to make it over to our round-the-world missionaries as I desired and as I earnestly wish they had seen fit to let me do; but I have already begun to use the interest of the amount at six per cent per annum for these devoted women, and I fervently hope that it may serve as the nucleus of a fund on which they can fall back when their heroic and self-sacrificing toil obliges them either permanently or temporarily to quit the field. Less than this we cannot do, and other women will do more as our society strengthens its sinews of war and becomes more cosmopolitan in spirit. I perfectly well know that the name of one who has occupied the office of president for sixteen years cannot but be in many minds when we gather for our annual harvest home; but I also know that there are those who honestly feel that some other name should be substituted, and what I wish to say as a finality is this: It is my inmost desire that the Convention should make the election of officers and especially the election of a president the subject of thoughtful consideration and earnest prayer, and any action they may feel impressed to take, no matter though that action should sever the relationships that have been so dear and sacred and have lasted so long, would be regarded by me as the expression of a decision made under divine guidance and for the highest good of each and every one of us who are here gathered. And may God bless and lead us all in His own way is my heartfelt prayer.

In the stress and turmoil of the battle where we are soldiers still, the cheers of victory ring out with growing inspiration, and nowhere more heartily than in the South, where the legislature of Texas has recently convened at the governor's call for the purpose of passing a law that should make prize-fighting impossible within the borders of that great commonwealth; from Atlanta, with its Industrial Exposition gathered in three hundred buildings, its Woman's Building and Woman's Congresses second only to those of the World's Fair; from the clear voice of that most eloquent of living colored men, Booker T. Washington, of Alabama, the colored president of an industrial school that is doing more than any other in the South to point the way of progress for his race; from the Liberty Bell, saluted in its triumphal march by large throngs of patriotic men and women, and blessed by a grandson of Virginia's Patrick Henry, and last, but not least, from the fifty genial state and territorial conventions of our own white-ribbon women, whose notes of cheer gather to one tender and harmonious "Home, Sweet Home" that is helping to bring purity, good-will and peace to all sections of our beloved native land.

We are glad to get back again to the beautiful city that entertained us so delightfully seventeen years ago. The hospitality of Baltimore is famed throughout the nation, but as Mrs. Hoffman aptly said at our London Convention, "the good old word, hospitality, has broader meanings than we have been wont to give it." No person can feel thoroughly at home with any one who is not hospitable to his ideas.

On the principle that nothing succeeds like success, it may be well to mention that at the Baltimore Convention seventeen years ago there were but one hundred and forty-seven delegates, including the vice-presidents and general officers; to-day the number of delegates whose names have been sent in is five hundred and twenty-eight. Thirteen states were represented then, but now, and for many years past, we have had from forty-five to the entire fifty states, territories and the District of Columbia represented.

When we were here before, the receipts for the year were $1,027.86, and the expenditures $665.69; this year the total receipts are $23,038.96 and expenditures not far behind. Then we had no superintendents whatever and only a few "standing committees" that did more standing than going forward; now we have well nigh forty departments, each with a wide-awake superintendent at its head. Our paid up membership is not less than 145,000 and our following is five times as large, for the treasurers of our thousands of local auxiliaries are unable to gather up each year all the membership fees that naturally belong to us, absence, illness and other equally adequate reasons sufficiently explaining this disparity.

When we were here before the World's W. C. T. U. did not exist, but now the gospel temperance movement has gained a foothold in every civilized country and in Canada, Great Britain, Australasia and South Africa the movement is as strong as it is in the United States where it was cradled, and whence have gone forth its methods of organization and plans of work. Then the W. C. T. U. did not own an inch of ground, or a bit of brick or mortar, now it has a "home of its own" in all our leading cities and towns, and the Woman's Temple, Headquarters of the World's and National W. C. T. U., is the finest building of its kind on the round earth.

Then we had one feeble little monthly paper to represent our work, now we have THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women, Young Crusader, and a Woman's Temperance Publishing Association that sends out annually anywhere from ninety to one hundred and thirty millions of pages of temperance literature.

Then there was not in this country a hospital for the treatment of disease without the use of alcoholics, now we have had for many years the Woman's Temperance Hospital in Chicago, which has earned the esteem and good will of all who know its thorough and progressive work.

Then not a child was being taught in the public schools the evils of intoxicants, now ten millions of children are under systematic instruction concerning the ritual of natural law that makes sacred the body which is the true temple of the Spirit of God.

Then the Sunday-schools were torpid on the temperance question, now in the international series of lessons, temperance is systematically recognized at least four times a year, and thanks to the great host of the Christian Endeavor it is becoming one of the chief subjects taught from the Holy Book.

In presence of such providential growth may our embattled host "arise and shine and give God the glory" for this "year of jubilee."

One of our most devoted members, a Scandinavian young woman, who did not know our language until she was twenty years of age, has been inspired by the Spirit to write what I, in memory of Francis S. Key, of Baltimore, and our great National song have thought fit to name "The White-Ribbon Star Spangled Banner."

On motion of Mrs. Stevens the thanks of the Convention were tendered Miss Willard for her able address, and then the latter introduced her niece, Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin, who came forward bearing a large white silk banner, having upon it fifty stars of gold (representing the states and territories in which we are organized) and the words, "W. C. T. U. Founded 1874"—"the Mothers' Star Spangled Banner," as Miss Willard fitly called it—the gift of Madam Demorest, of New York. Mrs. Baldwin then sang most beautifully, to the tune of the famous song which first saw the light in the city of Baltimore, "The White Ribbon Star Spangled Banner" (found on page 2 of this issue) written for the occasion by Miss Kate Lunden, with Miss Willard and Mother Thompson waving the banner, Mrs. Chant and others holding aloft the American flag, and the audience, led by a choir of sixty voices, joining in the refrain. The scene was most inspiring and evoked tumultuous applause.

"I knew," said Miss Willard, "that you would be glad to have Mrs. Chant stand here representing the old home flag with its red for love, its white for law, and its blue for the hope that all men saw—for the two flags stand for the same thing," to which Mrs. Chant replied that she felt she "had a little right to hold the flag, your white standard of purity and all the good things in it for the reason that away over the Atlantic we have had represented the American flag as well as the English," and spoke lovingly of the inspiration the presence of "Saint Frances" had been to the women of England. Requesting the pages to "cease for a time their kindly activities and every person be a committee on stationary," the President introduced Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, corresponding secretary, from whose interesting report we can give but brief extracts, and refer our readers to the printed minutes for the tabulated report of state work:

It would be strange indeed if your corresponding secretary could come up to her first annual report without a quickened heartbeat. I cannot forget the women who have served you in this capacity in other years. I cannot forget her, who, but for the fact that God called her to higher service, would have read to you at this hour in the deep, rich voice whose tones are still echoing upon our ears. You have not missed her more than I in the months which are passed. I have never ceased to feel that I have but held the office in trust and that the chrism of a consecration which had bridged the river of death has been placed upon my forehead. Judge, then, whether or not it has been a comfort to me that again and again there has come from that home in Ravenna—dear to all our hearts—the message: "I pray for you as I pray for no one else." Somehow the prayers of this great-hearted husband have been a pledge of her own continued interest in both work and worker, and in many a weary hour I have taken on new strength because I have felt that still

"In stress of the battle
She hastes to the fore," and that in a higher sense than we can as yet grasp the "Church Triumphant" is also the "Church Militant."

Many of you I have not seen in the flesh, but I know you all in the spirit, and having not seen, I love. I am becoming more certain every day that a grander corps of women than our state officers, National superintendents, organizers and evangelists never walked the earth, unless it be the greater multitude in the rank and file who stand back of them and make their victory and their very existence in this warfare possible. God bless them all to-day!

Not all the reports had been received at the time this summary was written; therefore, if names appear out of their proper order, or if any are omitted, it must be attributed to this cause. In all cases I must insist that we bear in mind the fact that our reports cover but ten months' work. The campaign did not begin last year before December 1, and books were closed this year October 1. If our Convention could have been held one month later there would have been a vast difference in our showing all along the line.

NATIONAL MEETINGS.

The principal events which stand out in the year as the work of the National union, per se, are, first, the great meeting in Washington in February for the presentation of the Polyglot Petition, the school of methods at Mountain Lake Park in July, and the temperance conferences at Chautauqua. These meetings have been already fully recorded in THE UNION SIGNAL, and need only briefest passing mention here.

The splendid swing of the Washington meetings is still present to our thought. There were present all the general officers save the assistant recording secretary, Lady Henry Somerset, and many others most prominent in our work, while the women of the District union planned for the meeting as only they can. But, best of all, we rejoice that the great demonstration, the interview with President Cleveland, and all the splendid accessories, resulted to our organization in practical results; that the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia has stepped out into a larger place because of these meetings; while the presentation of the Blair bill the following day emphasized the fact in Congress and the wide notice given by the press tended everywhere to the growth of public sentiment.

At Mountain Lake Park, white-ribboners both of Maryland and West Virginia, united in bidding us welcome and in carrying on the work of the school of methods, while the members of the Mountain Lake Park Association proved themselves to be brothers indeed. The school of methods was in charge of the National vice-president-at-large and corresponding and recording secretaries, while the presence of four state presidents, one National superintendent, Alice Palmer, Eva Shontz, Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam and John G. Woolley, speak eloquently as to the interest of the meetings.

At Chautauqua, our pleasant room in the Kellogg Memorial Building was in charge of a bright young Y, who has since been appointed Y secretary for Kentucky, Miss Rhena E. Mosher. Her mother, an ardent white-ribboner, was with her, and the noontide hour of prayer was observed each day, literature distributed, and various other means used for advancing our work. In addition, the five temperance conferences, connected with the Woman's Club, were conducted by the National corresponding secretary; while Mrs. Leach, of Kentucky, and Mrs. Martin, of New York, had general oversight of the work. The Chautauqua management was most considerate and just, showing great interest in our organization. Large plans were made for next year's meetings; and it is believed that this place so closely connected with our origin will become more and more a Mecca for all white-ribboners.

WORLD'S CONVENTION.

No record of this year would be complete that failed to touch upon the grand exodus which carried so many white-ribboners to the heart of the world's life, in attendance upon the great convention. Yet how shall a stay-at-home report the wonders of those days? That must be left to those who really saw their glory. I can only say what you all know, that the light was clear and true enough to shine even across the Atlantic, and that we basked in its beams from afar, even as we are basking now in their reflection upon the faces of those who were present in both body and spirit. Doubtless we shall find throughout this Convention that the brightest, most alert, and withal sweetest members here, were in attendance at the greater gathering. At least, if this be not true, it ought to be, for to whom much is given, of them shall much be required. That the wise plans laid may be carried out, and the advance steps indicated taken, in this and in all lands, is our earnest prayer. The World's union is a magnificent fact, and should become to us more and more an inspiration and an impetus.

DEPARTMENTS.

Of the advances made in department work, the superintendents will themselves tell you. Perhaps no department has received such uniform attention, the country over, as has Purity. Never before has there been such widespread agitation, and resultant legislative action. Surely in such an arousal of public sentiment upon so vital a subject there lies great promise for the future.

But the other departments have had their own victories, and our magnificent body of generals is each year gaining on the enemy, and coming nearer to the heights where certain victory is enthroned. Surely no other organization at any time in the world's history has ever boasted so many trained experts along so many widely different lines. Each year in W. C. T. U. work is making me more certain that we struck the keynote of ultimate victory, when we made the discovery that each evil is allied with all other evils, and that therefore each reform should be allied with all other reforms.

AFFILIATED INTERESTS.

If we dared to anticipate the reports of our affiliated interests we would say that there, too, progess is the cheering note which comes all along the line. The National Temperance Hospital is going steadily forward in its great mission of demonstrating the possibility of medical treatment absolutely free from alcoholics, and its record is one of which any hospital might be justly proud. The Temple still towers heavenward and its swiftly revolving Wheels have been rolling along over countless avenues during the past six months. The faith of the projector of the great enterprise is nothing daunted, and we have the highest authority for saying, "According to your faith be it unto you."

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is sending out its thousands upon thousands of pages, and is continually proving both through our official organ and through its other outputs, how vital it is to the perpetuity of our work.

BARS AT NATIONAL AND STATE CAPITOLS.

One of the questions given to your corresponding secretary for investigation was relative to the existence of bars at national and state capitol buildings. From one of our good friends at Washington, Hon. Elijah A. Morse, I quote:

"There has not been during the speakership of Speaker Crisp, during the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, what might properly and strictly be called a bar in the House or rather in the basement. There has been, however, a lunch counter in both the House and the Senate, from which drink has been sent to the tables, I think, of all sorts and kinds. During the speakership of Speaker Reed, during the Fifty-first Congress, some show was made of stopping the sale of drink, though I think there has never been a time in the six years that I have been there that a guest could not sit down to a table and have drink with his food. I think, however, that it is just to say that there is very little intoxication among members of Congress, and that a great improvement has taken place in this regard in the last few years. During the three terms that I have already served I have seen but one member of Congress intoxicated. The drink should be driven out of the capitol altogether."

Upon the same subject Congressman Pickler, of South Dakota says: "There are no bars for liquor in the national capital, but liquors of all kinds are, I am informed, sold at the lunch counters at the two ends of the building."

At date of writing, but twenty-three states and territories have replied to this question as concerns their own capitol buildings. Of these, Oklahoma Territory, New Jersey, Alabama and Iowa (alas for backslidden Iowa!) confess to the sorrowful fact of liquor at the capitol, either at a bar or "for restaurant purposes." Pennsylvania, although without a bar, records a sad scene of revelry at the closing of its last legislature; but in bright contrast Kansas says: "There is no city in the state where our prohibition laws are so well enforced as at the capitol city."

Another duty assigned me this year was the appointing of fraternal delegates to the great gatherings of societies organized for kindred purposes. I have been able to do this in several cases, but in the three greatest conventions, that of the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union, I received replies stating that no fraternal delegates would be received, as the entire program would be occupied by reports and speeches. Our work was not, however, without representation, since several of our best known speakers were upon the program.

OUR PROMOTED ONES.

During no year of which I have knowledge has death made such inroads in our ranks as during the one just closed. The memorial hour upon the program is witness to this, while each state convention has come up to its own memorial hour with a long list of those who have gone on before. "We follow that way," but how sorely we miss them, God only knows! More than ever, too, is it being made manifest that we must fill our rapidly depleting ranks with new recruits, if we be not worsted in the final onset.

GENERAL OFFICERS.

Of the work of the general officers for the year, I can only say briefly what you all know that preparations for the World's Convention has kept the president in England for about half the time, but from that distance, as well as when at closer range, her hand has been upon the helm, and her busy brain has been intent upon our course.

The vice-president-at-large has proven herself what all who knew her felt she would be—a tower of strength and an inexhaustible supply of wisdom. I do not like to think what the year would have been to me without her to lean upon.

The recording secretary was largely in the field until her departure for England in May, and since then she has been still in the field over there, delighting all with her eloquence, while the assistant recording secretary, the newly elected president of Kentucky, is coming to be recognized as an authority in schools of methods, of which she has conducted several, in addition to her large organizing and platform work.

The treasurer has been in the field more or less since her Southern trip, and always to the advancement of the places visited. She attended the London Convention, speaking with great acceptation, while the hold she keeps upon the pocketbook will speedily manifest itself.

Your corresponding secretary has traveled about fifteen thousand miles; been in attendance upon four state, three district and one county conventions; conducted three schools of methods; made ninety-three addresses, and sent out many thousands of letters and circulars from the busy center of our work. Her chief aim has been to make the workers all over the country feel that she counts her office a great one only in the true Scriptural sense of the word, in that it gives widest scope for service and makes her the servant of all. She has made many mistakes apparent to herself; doubtless she has made many others which have been apparent to you, but so far as in her lies, she has given you of her best. I wish for the work's sake it were a better best.

The position of a National officer at Headquarters is no sinecure, but with the toil and responsibility there goes hand in hand an abounding joy in that one is permitted to serve so sympathetic, loyal and brave a constituency.

Following this came the report of the treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker:

The past year has been one of anxiety with alternating hope and fear as to its financial outcome. The balance of over $5,000, last fall, enabled us to meet the large expense of printing minutes, reports, etc., and pay all expenses for several months. The fact that fourteen states did not send any dues until September, six others not until August, necessitated the borrowing of money to carry on the work, yet I am glad to say that while two years ago we paid $400 interest, the past year we have paid but $51.55 for interest, and have received as interest on notes in possession of the National over $200. Last year we had a bequest of $3,000 and our especial ten-cent fund brought in $2,700. This year we have had neither bequest nor ten-cent fund, and the birthday fund has amounted to only $54. Hence the anxiety as to the balance at closing of the books, and the uncertainty as to which side of the ledger the difference would appear. Again we increased our appropriations for departments and for organizing work for the present year, and have paid for organization, Alabama, $25; Montana, $62; North Carolina, $100; Utah, $50; East Washington, $50; Wyoming, $10; Oklahoma, $25; New Mexico, $50.

The dues alone will never furnish money for the broad work our society ought to do, and we should have some general fund or pledges for our National work. The Woodbridge literature fund designed to enable the National to send free literature to needy unions, has received as yet but little attention and has only $12 to its credit. The Lathrap fund for pushing the colored work, has also received but little attention, $16. I am sure that both these funds will grow as the women come to realize their importance more. I desire to call the attention of all treasurers to the fact that the report of the National treasurer makes no mention of Y dues; only three states have sent any record of Y dues, and thinking such a partial showing was worse than none at all, I have placed them all as dues without mention of Y's.

Indiana and Pennsylvania are the only states entitled to an L. T. L. delegate, being the only ones that have paid five cents per member for one thousand children. Iowa comes next with dues for 334 children. Texas has sent dues for sixty-five and Illinois for fifteen members of the Loyal Temperance Legion. So far as the National treasurer has knowledge no other state has any juvenile members. This ought not to be. These dues ought to be as diligently collected and as promptly forwarded as are any other. Five pennies from each child during the year is not burdensome, and it would do the children good to know that they were contributing that much to the National treasury. There is need of greater effort in this direction. Pennsylvania is this year the banner state for gain in membership. My books show this gain to be 1,894 members.

It is but just that an explanation should be made here, several states where the state treasurer's books show a decided gain during the year appear on the National treasurer's book with either loss or lessened gain. New York is one of these. After the state treasurer's book closed last fall fifty dollars was sent to me as last year's dues, hence are not counted on this year. Oregon has actually added five hundred members and Ohio claims a large gain during their fiscal year, but my books do not show it. Wisconsin also and perhaps one or two other states show a larger gain on their own state books than are shown on mine. As long as the dates of state and National conventions must differ there will be discrepancies in state and National reports, as they cover different periods of time. We have received a larger amount of dues in the eleven months of this year than we did in thirteen months last year, the total this year being $14,757.29. We have great cause for thankfulness that notwithstanding we had no especial fund our total receipts foot up $23,038.96. Total expenditures $18,059.37, leaving a balance in the treasury, October 1, after all obligations are paid, of $4,979.59.

The tabulated statement of the treasurer will as usual be printed with the National Minutes.

A cablegram bearing greetings from Lady Henry Somerset was read by the secretary, the passages of Scripture being Zephaniah 3:17 and Deuteronomy 7:7. Her letter to the Convention will be found on another page.

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant was introduced, and spoke in part as follows:

One of the most difficult things that you have to face and I have to face, is the kind friends who are always telling us that we ought to stay at home. Now let me tell you this,—that God's world was never properly gardened until He taught the birds to fly forth. The birds have been God's gardeners, taking the seeds from one great country to the other, planting flowers where there was once a wilderness, and the least His singing birds can do, His mothers and sisters of the nations, the least we can do is to do as the birds have done, carry the seeds of our beautiful flowers and trees for planting this garden of God. The world becomes more glorious, more full of joy, in proportion as you have to face its difficulties and bear its burdens, for the one splendid lesson that you learn is, that the whole armor of God girt around you is the panoply through which not one shaft can penetrate, and that armor of God includes among other things the true love of those who have one tie to bind them in the sheaf.

How we love Saint Frances I need not tell you. I can tell you if you do not take great care, we shall keep her always. [Cries of No! No!] We are going on to a great victory now because of the light she has brought us. If these two countries who, of all countries in the world, stand for freedom, can join forces in the great work, we may yet see the time when even the Sultan of Turkey may come under the sway of the white flag.

After Mrs. Baldwin had sung again, a brief evangelistic service was conducted by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and Miss Elizabeth Greenwood led in noontide prayer.

The corresponding secretary was instructed to send a letter of greeting and sympathy to Miss Margaret Sudduth, managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, whose sad home-going a few weeks ago was chronicled in these pages. Committees on credentials, courtesies and telegrams were appointed and other miscellaneous business transacted, after which the first session adjourned.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Convention called to order by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens. After Mrs. Harriet D. Walker had led in prayer the following fraternal and visiting delegates were introduced: Dr. George, of the National Reform Association; Mrs. Rose Summerfeld, representing the National Council of Jewish Women; Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Powell, of the American Purity Alliance; Mrs. Lillian Hollister, of the "Ladies of the Maccabees"; Major Scott, of California; Mother Ransom, of the Pacific Coast, and Miss Alice Palmer, round-the-world missionary—each of whom briefly greeted the convention. A letter was read from General Neal Dow, stating that he feared he would not be able to attend the convention, but Miss Willard expressed her hope that the "grand old moral hero who has never yet failed in courage for the cause of temperance might still be with us."

Mrs. Erdman, of Pennsylvania, was then called to the platform and sang the Baltimore rallying song to the tune of "Marching Thro' Georgia," the audience joining with great vim in the chorus:

"Hurrah! hurrah! for Baltimore '95;
Hurrah! hurrah! white-ribboners' hearts revive;
Unfurl your banners to the breeze of God and purity
When we go marching to Baltimore."

Miss Willard: "When I saw some Southern handkerchiefs waving and women singing the old 'Marching Thro' Georgia' with all their hearts and lips, I said, God works wonders in the heart. I do not think we know all that the song meant. When I heard at the republican national convention many years ago the playing of 'Way Down South' and 'Dixie,' I knew that all the past was truly past and nobody could ever make me believe differently again. So let us be thankful for the new song, sweet and holy words, the odor of unity of spirit of this convention, and let us refresh and stimulate it by the song."

Following came reports of superintendents, of which necessarily only the merest outline can be given here.

YOUNG WOMAN'S BRANCH

by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, General Secretary.

It means much, in view of the many other popular organizations of young people, to have held our own in the past few years. The report for 1895 shows an increase in membership in some states, a holding the same in some and a decrease in a few, but excellent work has been done in all. Y conferences, both district and county, have been the special feature of the year in Illinois. In these other young people's societies have participated. They have given receptions to teachers and issued a special Y number of the state paper. Indiana Y's have adopted the triple pledge, and nevertheless their honorary members equal their regular members in number. Ohio shows an increase in paid membership over last year, and unions have been formed in schools and colleges. Four libraries have been placed in chair factories. They are cared for by the members of the union and opened once a week, and are patronized by working girls' clubs. One union instructed seventeen girls thoroughly in housekeeping in their kitchen garden. Y's of North Dakota have contributed to the Florence Crittenton Mission in charge of the W. C. T. U. More drinking and ice water fountains have been erected than any previous year. And so, in almost every state the good work accomplished along all lines would be impossible to report.

During the absence of the general Y secretary in visiting the countries of the Mediterranean and the Orient, the work of the Branch was faithfully carried on by the assistant secretary, Mrs. F. S. Evans, and our National Y organizer, Miss Frances H. Ensign.

Among the recommendations we wish to call attention to the following: We courteously ask state treasurers to report dues paid by young women to the National treasurer.

We recommend the study of good citizenship, of systematic giving and of reporting; college settlements for our Y. W. C. T. Unions, and the plan of the Industrial Camp or "Republic of the Children, for the Children, by the Children," in place of the brief summer excursions usually given to the poor children in cities.

We recommend more earnestly than ever before our paper, Young Women, and the reciprocity plan to help build up our foreign work among young women.

The remainder of the important suggestions will be found in the special leaflet issued for state Y secretaries and which will reach them before 1896.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

MRS. HELEN G. RICE: There has passed before me as in a vision the record of the year's work which is just closing. I saw the grand leader of the Empire state marshalling her great host of the Senior Legions, I saw them gathered in their third state L. T. L. convention, I heard the walls of the church ringing with their rallying cry and I heard the resolutions they passed in condemnation of the state board of education in its repudiation of the scientific temperance law.

Then I saw the earnest, faithful superintendent of Pennsylvania marshalling her host under the motto of "No Compromise for the Keystone State," and I noted that those juniors and seniors had contributed this year eighty-six dollars to the Temperance Hospital and one hundred and ten dollars to the Temperance Temple. Then came Wisconsin with its three state Loyal Temperance Legion superintendents, one in charge of the junior, one of the senior and one of the normal grade, gathered in their fifth state convention and I remembered that they were the pioneers in this onward movement; and then the old "Bay state" passed before me. I heard those children sing at the top of their voices, "Saloons, Saloons, Saloons Must Go," found that they had contributed ninety dollars this year to the state W. C. T. U. treasury and had seven voting delegates in the state convention, and I heard them ring out their rallying cry: "Who are we? who are we? Loyal Legioners! don't you see? Are we in it? yes, we are! Loyal Legioners, rah! rah! rah!"

I saw the Illinois superintendent traveling thousands of miles in her state this year, beating time for her forty thousand pledged Loyal Temperance Legioners to sing, "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go." And then there came to me a voice from New Jersey, and I heard the women of the state W. C. T. U. read the names of members that had passed on and they read the names of Loyal Temperance Legioners, and opening their state records I found that these young soldiers who had just enlisted and then gone up higher had equal mention with those who had borne the burden and heat of the day. And oh, dear sisters, I wish I had time to tell you of the voice that has come from West Washington; I wish I could help you to catch the note from Oregon, from Georgia, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, and from all the states and territories down there.

And then there came to me a sadder sight. I saw hundreds of towns and cities where white ribbon women live, and where no children sing, "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go." The children said, "We begged and pleaded to join the world-wide chorus, but no one gave us the key or taught us the strain." And the women said, "Oh, we could not find a leader for them, and there is no place to hold the children's meeting and we had the scientific temperance instruction and we thought we did not need the Legion, and then the junior societies of the churches have absorbed the children." And over and above this clamor of excuses I heard the awful voice of the saloon-keepers saying, "Give us the children;" and then penetrating through all this clamor I heard the tender voice of the crucified and risen Lord, saying, "Feed my lambs." "Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me." "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

MRS. SOPHIE F. GRUBB: About four hundred thousand pages of the literature of "the strangers" have been sent out this year. Nearly two hundred thousand of these have been given away. We keep a beer saloon at our entrance port, that is, our government does. "Old Glory" waves above and protects it, and government officials congregate about it. The first words our immigrants hear when they step on American soil, are "Here's your fresh lager beer; come get your good liquor." Young girls who never saw beer in their own country, finding it sold here in a government institution, think it something very respectable, and when they meet it farther on it has been robbed of its evils by governmental influence, and they take kindly to it. My chief endeavor this year has been to have this evil abolished, as I succeeded in doing under the Harrison administration. I interviewed senators, congressmen, cabinet officials and government officers at the port. These last, without exception, bore their testimony to the evil effects of this saloon at our port of entry. But the matter was referred back to the department of the treasury, and from there to one of the assistants, a congressman from Illinois, himself a devotee of Bacchus, who, together with the Commissioner of Immigration, a beer-loving German, decided that this institution should not be interfered with, and it stands to-day a disgrace to our nation. Notwithstanding this drawback, Miss Lindahl, our W. C. T. U. missionary at the port, has done good work in distributing tracts and sending out a healthy influence among the immigrants.

The work in the states is in good condition. Twenty-eight state superintendents and five National assistants do efficient labor. I am making an effort to interest the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor and the Sunday-schools, especially the mission schools, in the spread of literature. The Scandinavian work, under our able assistant, Miss Kate Lunden, has been unusually active this year, as has also the Spanish department under Mrs. Harwood, of New Mexico.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE.

MRS. LUCY THURMAN: During the past year I think that our colored work has made more headway in this country than in any other year during our organization, and I wish I had time to tell you of the work accomplished through the birthday offering that you gave at Cleveland for this department of work. It was my pleasure to spend five weeks in Chicago in the interest of work among colored people, numbering thirty thousand. The general officers and all at Headquarters in Chicago stood behind me and aided me, and the result was that no less than five thousand signed the temperance pledge. We organized a Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the South Side, numbering almost one hundred members, one on the West Side of fifty-seven members, and one on the North Side with twenty-seven members, besides a Y, and no less than five hundred and forty children signed the triple pledge. There has never been a time in the history of this colored work when so many states have reported directly to the National superintendents, and my heart has been made to rejoice over and over again for the good news that comes to me from all parts of the South.

The great bulk of the colored people are in the South, and the bulk of their property is in the Southland. Before the war they only paid taxes on a few thousand dollars; to-day they pay taxes on no less than two hundred million dollars, nine million dollars of that property being in the state of Georgia alone. Knowing these facts to be true, is it any wonder our hearts go out to-day to the great South, and I come here before you, as Christian women, and I ask you in the name of God and in the name of that large class of people that have not yet been reached in the masses, that you use your influence and that you aid to open the work this year among the colored people of the South. The four million colored women of this country are looking to you to help them, that they may be purified and that their homes may be better and that their children may be taught the great lessons that you are teaching your children. I am proud to tell you that while we have eight million or ten million of colored people in this country, we can boast of something that no other race can boast of in this land, that there is not to be found in all our ranks one brewer or distiller. (Applause.)

The report of the department of scientific temperance instruction was next presented by its superintendent, Mrs. Hunt. As this report is of special import anp interest to our readers we have decided to hold it for publication in a later issue when more space can be given to it.

PHYSICULTURE.

FRANCES W. LEITER: Sixty thousand pages of new literature have been published during the past year in the form of leaflets. "Physical Beauty of Women," by Dr. Richter, is a scientific article which should be read by every woman who is anxious to secure the best for herself. "Play in Education," by Carl Betz, discusses a feature of education which is better understood by Germans than Americans. Parents as well as educators should read this. "The Effects of Military Drill on Boys," by Dr. Sargent, of Harvard College, meets a timely need. The tendency to substitute this drill for physical training is gaining ground, and calls for prompt action on the part of those who understand how grave an error it is. Besides these new leaflets, forty thousand folders, as a "field" document, have been steadily going out over the states. This explains the relation between physical education and the temperance question. Department literature now numbers eighteen pertinent and forceful leaflets and pamphlets. The states are gradually securing superintendents, who, by culture and consecrated purpose, are well fitted for this responsibility. Several important events mark the year just closing. After a preliminary meeting in Mansfield, the Physical Educators of Ohio organized at Columbus, the last of March, with Dr. Leonard, of Oberlin College, as president, looking to a more thorough enforcement of Ohio's compulsory physical education law. This new organization was given department place at the annual session of the State Teachers' Association two months later. The National Educational Association, at its session in Denver, during July, created the department of Physical Education, with Miss R. Anna Morris, as president. This is a new outlook for the work. Louisiana added physical training to its required work during the winter of '94. While this law, like the Ohio law, is not all that is desired, the educators in authority accepted it in good faith, believing the work should be done. Miss Clara G. Baer, associate in this department and supervisor in Newcomb College, New Orleans, was employed and paid with state funds for institute service during the past summer. Others of the department corps have been engaged at Chautauqua, and schools of methods, as well as teachers' institutes. One of the latest phases which has been recently engaging the attention of the department is physical education as a reform measure in connection with the management of prisons, reformatories, houses of correction and industrial schools. The department is slowly, but surely proving its right to be.

NARCOTICS.

MRS. G. B. INGALLS: The tobacco trade is being pushed and advertised as never before. Pictures are more expensive and disgusting; the business aggressive and persistent. But the opposition is also persistent. More people are interested, better work being done, and deaths from opium and tobacco are more correctly reported. The work that promises greatest results in this department is the formation of anti-cigarette leagues, that pledge the boys against cigarette smoking. In many places the pledge includes tobacco, and some leagues admit girls. Anti-chewing gum leagues are also being organized. An anti-cigarette convention has been held and an anti-opium society formed. Two state legislatures passed laws forbidding the manufacture of cigarettes: North Dakota and California. The governor of California, however, vetoed the bill. Forty-two states have laws forbidding the sale of cigarettes or tobacco to minors. Cures for the tobacco habit have sprung up marvelously; and whether we believe in the cure or not, the fact that so many are offered for sale and so largely advertised, shows it is a bad habit and needs to be cured. The bicycle has caused a great reduction in the consumption of cigars.

The cigar manufacturers are beginning to fight the bicycle, but the wheel goes on and on, men forgetting to smoke, for the time at least. The Boston and Maine Railway have made a rule that no employé shall use tobacco while wearing the uniform of the company. The Pennsylvania Central Railroad (Limited) have no smoking compartment on the sleeping cars, and when we enjoyed the magnificent coach and the grand scenery through which this road runs, we thought surely this is perfect travel. Over the mountains with an elegant observation car and a stenographer ready and willing to write your letters for a simple, "Thank you," no smoke, and no smell of stale smoke anywhere. When we fully realized this perfect trip I thought our labor in securing more than fifty thousand names asking for the abolishment of the smoking compartment in the palace car was not all in vain. I am told by a railroad official that Mr. Pullman is building many cars without the smoking compartment. Returning from Europe I congratulated my native land on the fact that we have not the nasty pipe under our noses all the time, as they have in London, and that our government does not have a tobacco monopoly as does France. I visited one of these great tobacco factories in Paris, and am ready to say, bad as we are, we smoked Americans, there is yet hope for a clear atmosphere.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE: The Sunday-school workers bring words of cheer to this Convention. As we review the work of the year there is much to encourage and rejoice our hearts. Thirty-seven thousand pages of printed circulars, programs, etc., have been sent out to aid workers, besides unnumbered pages of sample literature. Your superintendent has worked, more or less, in eight different states, conducting Sunday-school temperance rallies, addressing conferences, conventions and many Sunday-schools. Nearly all states have worked vigorously for the universal temperance Sunday, in accordance with the plan presented by the Hon. Charles Waters, of the London Sunday-School Union, and adopted by the Sunday-school department of the W. C. T. U., and memorials have been presented to religious gatherings in nearly every state. The National superintendent and her faithful secretary, Mrs. Dora B. Butts, are working diligently through the state conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church, with the purpose in view of paving the way for the presentation of the plan at the M. E. General Conference to be held May, 1896, in Cleveland, Ohio.

Forty-three states have taken up the work of this department and thirty-nine of the superintendents have reported. Seven hundred and ninety-seven thousand two hundred and fifty-nine pages of literature have been circulated by the department; 1,305 concerts and addresses; 155,713 pledged membership; 315 Sunday-school temperance rallies. Total state appropriations reported by the department, $197.51. New York state maintains its position of honor as banner state. The recommendations are:

1. Special effort to perfect the organization of the department by securing a superintendent for every local county and district union.

2. That temperance secretaries be appointed in every Sunday-school, as they are essential to complete statistical reports.

3. That the department work be presented in all Sunday-school conventions and ministerial gatherings.

4. That we earnestly support the International Lesson Series which gives us our quarterly temperance lesson and seek its use by all Sunday-schools.

5. That special observance of quarterly temperance Sunday be continued with renewed zeal.

6. That the fourth Sunday of November be observed by all churches, Sunday-schools and young people's societies as Annual Temperance Sunday, in accordance with the plan proposed by the London Sunday-school Union and adopted by the National Sunday-school department.

At this point Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown offered a lengthy resolution, sending greetings to the Triennial Convention of the Episcopal church, in session at Minneapolis, earnestly requesting them to "approve and sanction the movement to enjoin the use of unfermented wine at the Sacrament as being more in accordance with the character of our Master, at whose table the wine is served."

Mrs. Nichols, of Indiana, stated that the use of fermented wine was optional with the rector of each parish, and Mrs. Lovell suggested that the resolution be made shorter. Mrs. Nichols and Miss Mary Moore, National superintendent of the department of unfermented wine, were appointed to confer with Mrs. Brown in regard to changing the resolution to conform with the suggestions, and with this understanding it was adopted.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS AND PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN: Method is a way of reaching a given end by a series of acts which tend to secure it. Sir William Hamilton once declared that all method is a rational progress, a progress toward an end. Accepting these definitions, I hardly need say that in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union our departments are our methods. To what point have they already carried us? To the intelligent consideration of almost every question in which humanity is to-day interested.

In reviewing the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union with our present purposes and plans one would touch almost every question that to-day agitates the world, and would include nearly the entire gamut of human needs. In these days of clubs we are not simply a literary club, but a literary, scientific, philanthropic, economic, æsthetic, ethical and good government club all combined. We are a foreign missionary society, a home missionary society and an aid society all in one.

A school, as everybody knows, is a place in which to learn, and our school of methods not only aims to teach but to so instruct the learner that she may carry on the work. It seems to me in these days of organization, the constant tendency is to consider aggregation instead of individuality. I think the danger is to generalize a little too much and particularize too little. Now we talk about the masses—if we can once take into our hearts and consciences and brains the fact that the masses resolve themselves into individuals, and if we make the individual all right, the aggregation cannot be wrong. Take our work among the lumbermen. They say to me in certain states in which I journey, "I can do nothing for lumbermen, there are no lumbermen within one hundred miles of us." Suppose there are not, there are lumbermen within a hundred miles of Michigan and Wisconsin and there is not a woman anywhere who cannot send to Michigan and Wisconsin a dime or a dollar to help pay a missionary to carry the gospel of temperance and the gospel of Christ to the woodsmen and there is not an orthodox church in all this land so far as I know who sends a missionary specially to the men in the lumber woods. Some of those men are just as carefully taught and reared as your son and my son, and that is what one woman can do, she can subscribe for a religious paper and send it to the camp, and there are ever and ever so many things that the individual woman can do in our forty departments.

Miss Willard here presented Rev. C. H. Mead, of New York, who brought greetings from the National Temperance Society. He concluded his brief remarks by saying:

"Madam President, may I say in regard to myself, when the word came to us months and months ago of your failing health, the whole Christian world, as far as this country, at least, is concerned, commenced to pray that such a matchless leader might be spared and her strength restored again (Applause). I am glad that the prayer has been answered. Long life to Frances Willard, leader of the white-ribboners!"

MISS WILLARD: "I do not feel like coming to the front after that. There is something especially tender and beautiful about a good man's praise, and I am gratified, and most of all grateful for the belief I have in the depth of my own soul that these prayers, the greatest token of love that one can give another, to bear his name so that the world shall be 'bound by golden chains about the feet of God,' as the great laureate said."

Mrs. Holden Byles, a delegate from Nebraska, and a member of the British executive committee, was then introduced, and spoke of the different unions she had visited in the Western states, saying, also, that she wished to indorse what Mrs. Chant had said in regard to "Saint Frances" and the enthusiasm she had inspired in England.

A resolution regarding lynching, offered at this point by Mrs. Benjamin, and adopted unanimously, will be found in the report of the committee on resolutions.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Music Hall was taxed to its utmost on Friday evening to provide seats and even standing room for the immense audience which came to hear the addresses of welcome and responses. After a brief devotional service conducted by Mrs. Dunham, of Iowa, the Convention chorus of sixty voices sang, to the tune of "My Maryland," an ode of welcome written for the occasion, by Mrs. Robert M. Wylie, of Baltimore. The singing evoked tremendous applause. We give space for two verses:

You've gathered here, an army strong,
In Maryland, our Maryland,
To aid the right, to conquer wrong
In all the world, and Maryland.
The temperance banner leads the throng;
The temperance cause inspires our song;
And may success to you belong—
Sings Maryland, our Maryland.

Once more a "Welcome!" now we sing,
"A welcome kind to Maryland!"
For naught but joy to us you bring,
In Maryland, our Maryland;
And as your motto wide you fling,
"For God and Country!" let it ring!
So may you go on conquering
In all the world—and Maryland!

Gov. Frank Brown was expected to welcome the Convention on behalf of the state, but it was explained that he had been called away.

"It is not the first time," said Miss Willard, "that a governor has agreed to welcome, nor the first time that gubernatorial duties obliged him to be absent. Last week I was in Pennsylvania, and Governor Hastings welcomed the ladies to a reception and gave them a rousing speech and said that whenever he did not feel perfectly at liberty to welcome the mothers, wives and daughters of the old commonwealth of Pennsylvania, he would leave off and quit and go away. And very likely the governor of Maryland feels the same. I know nothing to the contrary, but I do think that we shall always have a warm place in our hearts for the governor of Pennsylvania. We have a gentleman with us who will give a welcome on behalf of both state and city and we are most happy to see him in his official as well as his personal capacity—Mayor Latrobe."

The mayor said in part:

It gives me great pleasure personally as well as officially to welcome to this great city of Baltimore the ladies who are members of this great organization. I am not as much accustomed, ladies, to addressing an audience of this kind as I am to addressing one where there is a little more political interest probably in it than there is in the audience this evening. (Cries of "no, no.") If therefore I should get some of these conditions a little mixed you must make allowances. It was at the city hall to-day that some—I was going to say heathen—in looking at my invitation to be here this evening asked what the initials W. C. T. U. meant. I called on the secretary, who is a good fellow but somewhat of a wag and he translated it as "Whisky Can't Touch Us." (Applause.) I am glad to have some of these ladies even temporarily under the jurisdiction of the mayor of Baltimore. The names of many of them are just as familiar to our people as household words, and the great cause of temperance in which they are engaged commends itself to every community. I am sure that here in Baltimore the workings of this great association are appreciated. The home suffers far more from the curse of drink than does even the individual, and as I understand it, it is the mission of your society to protect the home from this danger. Here in Baltimore I am sure I could guarantee for your association a kindly greeting. We call ourselves the city of homes. I wish I could say that they are all happy homes. The hospitality of our people I am sure will guarantee their guests a pleasant and agreeable time while they are with us and it is my duty and my pleasure to express the hope as chief executive officer of this city that when the delegates return to their homes they will carry back with them some pleasant recollections of this city of Baltimore.

Miss Willard: "I consider myself a fair judge of a mayor's speech, having listened to them for twenty years, and this is one of the very best flavored we have ever had."

The Rev. Dr. John Goucher, president of the Woman's College of Baltimore, was then introduced and said:

It is a peculiar pleasure to me to bid you welcome to this fair city of Baltimore. A single phrase may express the attitude of mind of a community. It is said when strangers enter Boston they all ask, "What does he know?" When he enters New York, it is inquired, "What is he worth?" When he visits Philadelphia, they say, "Who were his parents?" If he tarries in Pittsburg, they ask, "What can he do?" If he sojourns for a time in Chicago, they say, "Where did he come from?" If he advances to St. Louis, they say, "Where is he going?" When strangers come to Baltimore, with frankness and hospitality, we say, "How long can you stay?" (Great applause.) We do this not because hospitality is our habit or because we are born to chivalry, but we do it because we honor ourselves in saying you are welcome to Baltimore. You are welcome because you embody and manifest an idea. Ideas are the children of God. The ideal which you represent is a comprehensive one. You embody as the central idea of your organization the home, it being the objective. You are well-come to Baltimore. A larger percentage of houses to the population can be found in Baltimore than in any other city of this Union. You are well-come to Baltimore, for here the Sabbath is observed better than in any other large city of this land.

And you are well-come as a temperance organization to Baltimore, for you cannot forget that the great temperance movement which swept over this continent and even beyond, the Washingtonian movement that had its birth here in 1840, and we from Baltimore, from whence that impulse started, are glad to welcome you because you are more than impulse. You are welcome not only because you are loyal to the home and loyal to God, but because having God in your thought at all times, you have in your hands the potentiality by which humanity is to be correlated to the great governmental missions of this earth, and when our question has been answered, how long can you stay, we will bid you Godspeed and we will be the richer because you have left with us a benediction and an enlargement and a new revelation of the power which we had not possessed had you not honored us with your coming.

Miss Willard: "You know I said in my annual address that ministers had made all this work possible, and we have been addressed by a typical minister who understands the philosophy and the history of the movement and we rejoice to be reminded of it so eloquently. We will now be welcomed once more by Rev. Wm. E. Bartlett, of the Catholic church, representative of Cardinal Gibbons."

Rev. Mr. Bartlett: I welcome you as the friend of Cardinal Gibbons. He is a patriot before all things. He loves his country and everything that makes our country a happy and prosperous land. He loves temperance, and I have with me a message to read to you which he left before going South. And I would like to say that we of the Catholic clergy, representing eight million members of the church in this country, can do a great deal for temperance if we will.

Cardinal Gibbons' letter was as follows: The temperance cause is a most vital subject in our day, as on it hangs social order, with domestic peace and comfort.

As the greatest number of crimes and disorders may be traced to intemperance, those who are laboring in the repression of this vice are among the best benefactors to society and to the family. I hope your Convention will encourage and stimulate you all with renewed ardor in the prosecution of the good cause in which you are engaged. Faithfully yours in Christ,

J. Cardinal Gibbons.

Miss Willard: "I wish Brother Jasper were here to say, 'The world do move.' It is the temperance cause that has brought Catholic and Protestant side by side, and such greetings from a noble patriot and scholar and Christian gentleman and great prelate are received by us in the same spirit in which they are brought, and we are glad to have the message borne to us by Father Bartlett, himself a practical temperance worker, and whose earnest voice will not be forgotten by us in the utterance of his simple, kindly and earnest welcome."

Rev. Luther T. Townsend, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal church, was to have voiced the welcome of the Protestant clergy of Baltimore. Being unavoidably absent, he sent to Miss Willard the manuscript copy of his speech, which we hope to publish later.

One of the most interesting demonstrations of the evening, and, indeed, of the entire Convention program, now occurred. Led by Miss R. B. Mory, superintendent of juvenile work for Maryland, a hundred or more girls and boys of the Loyal Temperance Legion bearing banners and flags marched down the aisles and took seats upon the platform. Miss Mory stepping forward, said:

Dear Friends, In view of the wearisome platitudes which have been echoing and reëchoing for, lo! these many months, as to the coming woman, what she is or what she will be, doubtless you, too, are anxious for a solution of this question, and that, too, even more expeditiously than by return mail. We have invited you to Baltimore, and have promised you much in coming here, and many of you have traveled weary miles for the pleasures, the revelations of this Convention, but, dear friends, the crowning revelation yet awaits you, for in these Loyal Temperance Legion boys and girls I have the honor of presenting to you to-night not only the coming woman, but the coming man as well. And they are not only coming, but come, come to enter into the heritage which your magnificent work for more than twenty-one years has made possible for them—come with the impressions, the convictions which scientific temperance instruction in nearly every state in the Union has borne in upon them, come with the training in patriotism and total abstinence which the ten thousand Loyal Temperance Legions of the land with their more than three hundred thousand members has accomplished.

In these children to-day we already possess the nation to-morrow. These are the nation's defence against its greatest foe,—that internal foe, which to-day threatens our country with far greater disaster than did the foreign foe which menaced the shores of the Chesapeake in those thrilling days of 1814, when Francis Scott Key wrote his imperishable lines, our anthem and yours, the "Star Spangled Banner." It seems very fitting that on this occasion, here on its native heath, these children, the descendants of the men who fought and died in that battle to protect their homes and the nation from the invader, should give to you this song, you who come waging your peaceful war "For God and Home and Native Land." The children will first give you the welcome they are so eager to express, and then fling to the breeze the star spangled banner.

Then the chorus of young voices shouted forth their welcome in a song composed by Miss Mory, the refrain of which was: "Welcome W. C. T. U."

Miss Willard said: "It will interest our friends to know that this young lady is one of the new women, of which they may send along just as many as they like—one of our honored Doctor Goucher's students. I do not know that the college could possibly have a better advertisement!"

The children then sang the "Star Spangled Banner," the audience joining in the chorus to the accompaniment of waving flags and banners. Mrs. Helen M. Barker made an able address upon "The Silver Question," concluding by saying, "We have welcomed everybody else but the audience, now we hope the audience will respond"—by a large collection.

Miss Willard presented Mrs. Mary Haslup, president of Maryland, who conveyed the welcome of the state W. C. T. U. as follows:

All through the year as we have planned and worked for this Convention, we have been glad that you were coming, and as you have come, with your faces full of hope and full of a benediction for us, we have rejoiced more and more that you accepted our invitation. We are not a very strong union, but we reach all over the state of Maryland, and as our governor was absent to-night I thought our union might represent the state, for our unions reach from Worcester, away down by the Atlantic, out to the Garrett in the mountain fastnesses of the Alleghanies, so the whole state welcomes you through the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions. God bless you, each and every one, and make us all a help to each other in the days that we tarry together.

Mrs. Robinson, president of the W. C. T. U. of Baltimore, voiced the welcome of the city union. She read a letter from Mr. Gilman, president of the Johns Hopkins University, and president of the Charity organization, stating that he was unavoidably absent, and then said:

Dear Fellow-workers of this Convention:—We have been going from our little state of Maryland up to your great states of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and the great states of Georgia, Tennessee and Colorado to those great conventions that have met year after year, and meeting these great concourses of women coming from all over the country and, as our state president has said, at last we took courage to ask you if you would come into our little state bordered by the Chesapeake. We have been planning and looking forward this last year, longing to look into your faces, thinking how glad we would be to welcome you and, dear friends, it has not been unselfish in us. We need you; we need house cleaning in more ways than one. We are not unselfish in asking you to come to us, because we know you will give a great deal more than we can give you, so we say to you, you are very welcome to us. And I do not want to leave those out who have come to us as visitors. They are most cordially received; we wish we could offer them the hospitalities that we can for the elect five hundred, but our doors are not large enough and many of us are still in the country. Still we are just as glad to welcome these visitors who come from all parts of the country, and we want them to go home full of inspiration from this great National Convention.

Mrs. K. Willard Baldwin sang very sweetly, "Some Glad Day," after which the responses to the addresses of welcome were given. We can give but an extract from each.

Mrs. Ella M. Boole, of New York: We are so glad of these greetings from the boys and girls, for we of the W. C. T. U. are an organization of mothers, and we just love boys and girls. And, dear friends, it is because we know that the drunkards of the next generation must be recruited from just such boys and girls as are on the platform here to-night that we are organized in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to battle against the drink traffic. We are glad of these words of greeting from his honor, the mayor of the city of Baltimore, but I want to tell him that our organization is a law abiding organization. He will not need to swear in any more policemen to preserve order. The governor will not need to call out the militia in order to prevent anarchy or riot or bloodshed.

We are glad of these words of greeting from the representative of the great Catholic church, because our hearts were rejoiced a few months ago as we read the ringing resolutions passed by the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, and we recognize in the brethren and sisters that are engaged in the work of total abstinence, helpers in the great temperance reform. We were not surprised at the words of greeting from the president of Maryland and the president of the state union, for they are our own folks and we rather expected they would be glad to see us. And we are glad of these words of greeting from the representatives of the Protestant denominations of Baltimore, for we believe that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is founded in loyalty to the same principles for which religious denominations have declared—total abstinence and legal prohibition. We of the W. C. T. U. take no higher ground than these organizations, yet they say to us sometimes that the churches are conservative, while we women are radical. I do not know why it is, except that these churches have resolved in favor of total abstinence and legal prohibition and then some of the members have not done anything for it, but we of the W. C. T. U. not only resolve in favor of these things, but are using all the machinery of our organization to help bring about total abstinence and prohibition. (Great applause.)

Mrs. Mary Reade Goodale, of Louisiana: Maryland, our Maryland, we are glad to be so graciously welcomed by you and by your beautiful Baltimore. We are glad to be in this monumental city, this beautiful city, this city of grand educational facilities, of grand charitable organizations and beautiful churches. We have heard of your Druid Hill Park and its hundreds of acres of wild beauty in the very suburbs of this beautiful city, and we have heard of its magnificent trees, we are told, surpassing in grandeur and magnificence the trees of any other park in the world. We have heard of the wonderful tunnels in this great state, longer than any except the Hoosac, I believe, in America. We have heard far more of your manufactories; we have heard too, of the wonderful bivalves with which your waters are supplied, and we are glad we are here.

MRS. HELEN M. STODDARD, of Texas: As a representative of the great Southwest, it gives me great pleasure to thank the different ones who have given us such a beautiful welcome here to-night. It is boundless, like our boundless horizons in the Lone Star state. And I want to say that what we in our part of this country have done to merit such a welcome is written in the advancement of our women and in the advancement of their cause and also upon the statute books of the Lone Star state. There we have a better and a more scientific educational law, because of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We have a better protection for girlhood, because of this organization, and just now we are thinking because of our prejudice, because of our resolutions, that, perhaps, is due the courage of our young governor that caused him to convene that extra session of the legislature which enacted the anti-prize-fight law, which forever forbids and makes a felony of prize-fighting in our state (Applause). Sometimes when we are making new paths there are fogs that obstruct our pathway, and I want to give you the advice that was given by the captain of the Berlin as we were nearing the shores of England. Some of the ladies were alarmed lest some delay might keep them from meeting their Sabbath appointments on June 16, and they went to the captain and said, "Captain, what if there should be a fog?" He replied: "If there should be a fog, madam, I would sail right into it." And so we will take his advice, and if our pathway be new, or if a fog should arise, we will sail right into it, knowing that beyond is the beautiful haven of a more brotherly religion and a more humane humanity.

MRS. ADA W. UNRUH, of Oregon: Dear friends, who have so loyally welcomed us to-night, I come from the land of the setting sun, where the blue waves of the Pacific wash their silver sands, from the land where rolls the Oregon, where the beautiful Columbia rushes down towards the sea, from the land where Mount Shasta upon the south and Mount Rainier upon the north keep eternal vigilance.

As I listened to those words of welcome I thought of so many other welcomes, and there was no welcome here to-night that made my heart more glad than that of the "new women" and "new men." I want to tell you of another welcome that I shall never forget. One day about a year ago my companion and I went across the hills in the Cascade Range, to the reservation of the Owasco Indians, of Eastern Oregon. As we came up to the little settlement in the valley we saw a gate hospitably open, and by that gate there stood the pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, who was missionary at that time, and he reached out a welcoming hand, and then there came out two beautiful women, all tears and smiles, and they clasped us to their arms as if we were long-lost friends, and then as we drew back we saw that little white ribbon that binds us all together upon their breasts, and we did not need any introduction. And I wish to tell you how the dark faces of those Indians welcomed us as we came into their hall, that was crowded with the wards of the nation, and we told them the old, old story of the white-ribbon movement, and then we passed about our pledge and the membership roll, and every one of them signified their willingness to have their names appended to that pledge, and the larger part of them could not speak or read our own language, and everything had to be told them through an interpreter. When I go back I expect to receive a hearty welcome, and there is no place I shall be more glad to go than to those Indians among the mountains of the Cascade Range.

MRS. LAURA ORMISTON CHANT, of England: After the magnificent speeches that we have listened to to-night it may not be a bad thing for England to send you a little greeting through me, and when I heard that sorrowful and pathetic story of the birth of one of the most beautiful national songs in the world, the song of the "Star Spangled Banner," I thought that if in those bad old days England's greeting to America was the roll of artillery, so to-day in the newer world that has dawned upon us, woman, side by side with man in her legitimate place, is now sending her artillery over the world. In that dark day when England was so stupid and when America was so sorrowful, there was the dawn of a great day for both countries, but their womanhood was fast asleep that day. I was reading in the British Museum over a month ago one of the novels written about twenty years after the battle of Bunker Hill and in that novel, which was the most popular novel of that day, the heroine fainted three hundred times between the time that she first met her sweetheart by a stile up to the time that he led her, still fainting, up to the altar to marry her. Now that fainting lady was the ideal of the time and it was considered quite proper and womanly and decorous to faint on every possible occasion or to cry, it didn't matter which so long as you did the one or the other gracefully, and the woman who did not faint and did not cry was looked upon as a dreadfully masculine creature.

I went to a little church to preach not long ago, an old church in Sleepy Hollow, in England, where the temperance work had not yet been known, and I saw a table outside in the lobby where the gentlemen took their hats off, and on that table was a large jug of water and three tumblers and a bottle of essence of peppermint and also a bottle of aromatic spirits of ammonia and a salts bottle, and I said to the janitor, "What is that for?" "Why," he said, "that used to be in old days when women was women and when they fainted and required to be took out," (laughter). "Well," I said to him, "how long is it since any of your women fainted and required to be took out?" and he shook his head and said "it was going on ten years." Now that janitor does not believe in the newer woman and he does not believe either that she is any good if she has come. Now we believe right down to the soles of our feet and up to the hairs of our head in the women whose hearts will be so large that only the higher world shall be able to fill them. We believe in women whose objects are so high that they stop at nothing but the kingdom of Christ to reign over the whole world. We believe in those women that are with us to-day, joy and intelligence upon their faces, they are the real home makers to-day. Then may I be allowed to say how sweet those words of welcome have been. It is a long way to come and yet the way has been so shortened since you let Frances Willard come to us. You have no idea how the poor conservative old folks among us said, "Oh, dear, we do not want these American women coming and teaching our women all sorts of notions," and there was one husband who wrote, "Now I see you have got American women coming, my wife will have to stay at home." But you will be glad to hear that that was two years ago and this year that wife came somehow and I said to her, "What have you done with your husband, have you locked him up at home?" "No," she said, "he is waiting outside." So you see you have kind o' got to be an every-day matter. And that is one of the things that we owe to America, among a great many other good things, a woman who has come to us and made us see where we were blind and made us tear the rags of prejudice away when we were hugging them to our hearts, and I think she has done more to conquer England than ever England has done to conquer any other country.

In conclusion, I do think—though I have no doubt she wishes I was not saying anything of the kind, and I dare say she is sorry she asked me to speak, I say it because it is the very best possible education of you, that when you feel grateful you should say so, and the only drawback to this splendid Convention to-day is that some of you ladies that felt grateful are afraid to show it for fear of spoiling your gloves. Now I want to say, do not wear any gloves to-morrow and clap your hands and keep them warm (great applause), for though we cannot beat you in eloquence and we cannot beat you in shrewdness and organization and intelligence at present, we can beat you in the noise we manage to make in our meetings. If you had seen us greet Frances Willard! We were not only on our own feet, we were on everybody else's feet, waving and hurrahing and cheering. Now then, let us have as good a time as we can, and let us go back to our homes in a frame of mind that has no "cannot" in its dictionary, no "will not" in its heart, and no "dare not" in its purpose. (Immense and long-continued applause.)

MISS WILLARD:—"Beautiful, beautiful. Mrs. Chant has given us a real arousement."

MRS. CHANT:—"Miss Willard pretends that you are greeting me. I know that I have stirred you up, and now you are giving her the pent-up feelings of the day."

MISS WILLARD:—"Mrs. Chant has mistaken her audience for mine. It must be that she has a trick of seeing double. I have seen every last person in the audience rise when she came forward to speak and cheer because she had been so shamefully abused, because she had stood by the cause of purity and home, and they showed her their hearty British good will in the very thorough-going way they have of doing whatever they do. I told a lady there that we people make a dumb show and keep up an incessant thinking. But I wish we might import some of the British enthusiasm, for the audience makes the speech."

The evening's program closed with music by the Convention chorus.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Following the opening ceremonies and the reading of the Minutes came the report of the committee on telegrams by Mrs. Tyng, chairman, as follows:

Reply to Lady Henry Somerset:—Joshua 1:9. Philippians 1:3.
From Miss Jennie A. Stewart to the Convention:—"Present in spirit. Read Psalms 65:11 and 20:5."
Reply to Miss Stewart:—"Greeting. Psalms 46:11."
To Mother Stewart from the Convention:—"We miss your presence and send greetings. Thess. 2:3."
To Mrs. Zerelda Wallace:—"Loving greetings. Read 1 Thess. 2:19, 20."
From John C. Carruthers, New Haven, Conn., President of the United Workers, to Frances E. Willard:—"Greetings from your fellow-workers. Philippians 1:9, 11."

Reports of superintendents were then continued.

EVANGELISTIC.

MISS ELIZABETH GREENWOOD: The effort of the evangelistic department the past year has been to deepen and broaden the work and secure system and harmony of method among the workers. To this end the superintendent prepared immediately after the last National Convention, a little volume entitled, "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers." It treated briefly of the following topics: What the Evangelistic Department has Accomplished, The Object and Work of this Department, The Preparation for the Individual and for the Union, The Evangelistic Department and the Churches, Work Among the Masses, Duties of the Local, District, County, State and National Superintendent, How to Report, Temperance Literature and kindred themes.

A copy was presented to each of the forty-eight presidents of auxiliaries in the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Also to each state president, each state evangelistic superintendent, each evangelist and organizer. Each state superintendent reports a new and intelligent impulse given to the work by the Hints and Helps. Comparatively few figures have been given. But 55,145 evangelistic meetings held directly among the masses; 9,610 visits in homes; 4,696 church services; 2,470 Bible Readings; 3,673,787 pages of literature distributed; 17,166 pledges given and 5,262 conversions have been reported. Multiply these by the hundreds unreported and add the daily services of National, state and local evangelists, and a faint idea may be gained of the practical, spiritual and aggressive nature of the work of the past year.

A special feature of the department during the year has been the district and county evangelistic conferences. Four hundred and seventy-nine of these have been reported, consisting of two or three days of meetings, with sermons, Bible readings, discussions of W. C. T. U. work, house to house visitation, and kindred topics. Illinois again takes the lead, reporting seventy-five such conferences. The National superintendent has issued, beside the "Hints and Helps," circulars, two calls to prayer, and written many letters. Sermons, lectures and Bible expositions have, as usual, been constantly given.

Recommendations for 1896 will be given from time to time. We can do no better than to advise an earnest advance along the same lines.

UNFERMENTED WINE.

MISS MARY MOORE: There has been an encouraging progress in the work of securing unfermented wine at the sacrament of our Lord's Supper. The Presbyterian General Assembly at Pittsburg, passed by an overwhelming vote the resolution "That unfermented fruit of the vine fulfills every condition in the celebration of the sacrament." The example of this influential body was soon followed by the Presbytery of Chicago and resolutions of like nature are reported to have been passed by ecclesiastical bodies in California, East Washington, North Carolina, Florida and Mississippi. The Methodist denomination leads in the adoption of the reform. The Lutheran and the Episcopal churches are beginning to yield their prejudices, and the Roman Catholic has in several instances become interested.

Fifty-one state and territorial unions have superintendents for the department of unfermented sacramental wine, thirteen having been appointed this year.

For the study of "Bible wines," we suggest "The Temperance Bible Commentary," by England's Neal Dow, as he has been called, F. R. Leeds, Ph. D., and Dawson Burns, M. A., D. D. Its sixth edition with valuable supplement was issued last fall.

Mrs. Beyer, superintendent of Pennsylvania, has this year issued an excellent leaflet for workers, containing tested lines of work and a list of the best literature of the department. In New York the department has been brought forward at seven schools of methods and at as many county conventions.

The superintendent of Minnesota suggests in order to obviate the difficulty of obtaining unfermented wine in many places, that the local union secure the contract of preparing the communion wine for the churches in its vicinity; that the superintendent of this department act as agent in supplying the churches, and thus aid them and at the same time obtain a fund for the work.

In Louisiana eighty-four churches, forty-two white, forty-two colored, are reported. Thirty white and all of the colored use unfermented wine at the Lord's table. Texas reports that the Y's are interested in the work. In East Washington white-ribboners persistently refuse to partake of alcoholic wine at the Lord's table. This action in several instances has brought the desired result. Efforts in Florida to influence churches in unorganized localities have resulted in fifty Congregational churches adopting the use of unfermented wine, and in the passing of a resolution recommending its use at the sacrament by the Congregational State Association.

RAILROAD EMPLOYES.

MRS. C. M. WOODWARD: The department of work among railway employes makes progress against unnumbered difficulties, and in many sections of the country without the aid and close coöperation of the managers of railway systems that seem consistent with the common interests of both corporation and employe. This is not to be attributed to lack of thought and kindness upon the part of officials or of faithfulness and loyalty in employes. Both are environed by conditions, and confronted by a situation incident to what is perhaps a transitional period.

To carry on a work in which success depends so much upon retaining the confidence and friendship of all, has demanded exercise of wisdom and tact, with great sacrifice upon the part of our workers. Reports from states are encouraging. Several state superintendents are specializing along individual lines to the great benefit of the entire department. Mrs. Allen, of Massachusetts, has succeeded in gaining a hearing before various organizations of railway men. Mrs. Peckham, of Rhode Island, has wrought nobly in work in the fire departments at Province. Mrs. Mair, of Pennsylvania, with pure pictures, Scripture rolls, Bibles and gospel songs, transforms the desolate caboose into a home for her "boys." Mrs. Davis, of Kentucky, and Mrs. Smith of Nebraska, have great success in holding shop-meetings. At Havelock, Nebraska, an automatic cherry phosphate fountain has been a benefit. Mrs. Kemp, of Kansas, has achieved much in enlisting workers, and has her state finely organized. Other superintendents also deserve mention from Maine to California and from the Dakotas to Florida.

And now, dear friends, I will ask you to pray for our railroad men. I have asked, and I shall keep on asking, until we hear prayer, a definite sentence of prayer from every pulpit in this country for the railroad men of the country. Go home and each one of you, all the delegates of this convention, resolve yourselves, or put yourselves on a committee, and that not a standing committee, and go straight to the home of your pastor, and ask him to pray for this great body of men.

MISS WILLARD:—"I believe your hearts have been deeply stirred by that report. A woman who can go out and find other women whose hearts are warm toward this work is just the one we have wanted in the railroad work, and in Mrs. Woodward we find that woman. I am sure that we who are so much on the railroad trains, are the very women whom God has raised up to care for the railroad men, thirty thousand of whom are crushed under the wheels every year—three every hour. When I am on a train I cannot help praying for the conductor and brakeman and engineer and every one that handles the train and every person on the train."

On motion of Mrs. Woodward a telegram of remembrance and sympathy was sent to Miss Jennie Smith, evangelist for this department, who is confined to a sick bed.

MINERS.

MRS. WINNIE F. ENGLISH: This department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in the field to assist in molding the six hundred and fifty thousands of miners in the United States into Christian citizens. We seek individual contact in a common Christian atmosphere by means of house-to-house visitation, Bible instruction, lectures, etc. Knowing that the printed sheet is a powerful educator for good or evil, we are sending into their homes and lives such literature as will teach truth, purity, Christianity. Your superintendent of this department during the early part of the year sent out for every union in the mining states thousands of pages of helps and instructions; programs for an afternoon meeting for the consideration of this subject; published a National leaflet and a new department leaflet; wrote letters of entreaty and encouragement, and has sought by every means known to her to keep in touch and frequent communication with every state worker. Early we strengthened the National organization of this department by the appointment of an efficient associate, Mrs. Mary Meredith, Montrose, Colo, and two active National lecturers, Mrs. Delle H. Coxe, Ellensburg, Wash., and Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind. These have done what their hands found to do, and we feel that a new impetus has been given to this ever increasing work. It was thought best to divide the work; giving the Western states to Mrs. Mary L. Meredith. She reports: "Wrote at once to each of my states. Replies came very slowly; sent to them five hundred 'Plans for Work,' three hundred report blanks, one thousand leaflets. As superintendent of Colorado, have written one hundred and fifty letters and postals, distributed four thousand pages of literature to miners." Mrs. Delle H. Cox, associated lecturer, reports from Roslyn, West Wash., a strictly mining town, as follows: Number of miners under our care, 435; homes visited, 100; Christians among them, 145; conversions, 10; majority of children in the Sunday-schools; literature distributed, 500 pages; lectures, 10; appeals to mining companies, 1; saloons in reach of miners, 7.

Twenty-one state superintendents have been reported to me this year, and two state presidents, Mrs. Kinney, Oregon, and Mrs. Stoddard, Texas, promised to look after the work in their respective states.

LITERATURE.

MRS. KATHARINE L. STEVENSON: My report of the literature department is not formulated in such a way that it can be given as a report, because of the fact that the National Convention comes so closely upon state conventions as to hinder the state superintendents from sending in full reports from the locals, therefore the tabulated statement of my department and the report proper will appear in the printed minutes.

I want simply in a moment to emphasize the need of a fund for further distribution of literature. If there be one thing more than another which we need, it is means whereby we can scatter our publications over the country. I have upon my table the Mary A. Woodbridge fund cards, the plan which was devised last year for securing more money for temperance literature. I sincerely hope that every one interested in this department and also every one who will be glad to thus honor our great leader of other years and our leader of to-day in a higher sense, will take one of these cards before leaving the hall. There is no way by which we can be thoroughly equipped for this work except by knowing the latest plans of it and the latest facts concerning it. I believe in printer's ink, and I believe in something else, and that is that we must have a channel by means of which this can come to the people. If we could sow this country knee deep with temperance literature during the year to come, we should have such a harvest as we have never had before.

PRESS WORK.

MISS LODIE REED: Almost without exception reports from forty superintendents show increased temperance sentiment and increased opportunities for creating more sentiment through the people's school and forum, the newspapers. The Associated and United Press have even surpassed the liberality of previous years in the space given to our work, especially in reporting the Polyglot meeting in Washington and the London conventions, and from nearly all press syndicate agencies requests have been received for full reports of this Convention. Statistical reports, always imcomplete, show nearly 34,000 columns of W. C. T. U. matter furnished the local press by the two thousand press superintendents. The National superintendent has issued 36,000 copies of the "National W. C. T. U. Bulletin," sending them to press workers and editors of leading papers, many of whom have expressed appreciation of their help. Three special numbers have been issued, one on the root beer question, containing an open letter to the religious and moral press, asking the exclusion of root beer advertisements from their columns. A second contained a letter to the medical fraternity in reference to prescribing alcoholics. Concise temperance items have been furnished Ayers' Almanac for 1897. Women's editions of papers have been utilized for advancement of W. C. T. U. work. The W. C. T. U. press has held its own during the financial stress, three National and twenty-eight state papers sending out the gospel of temperance, prohibition, purity and women's enfranchisement.

Mrs. Barker here rose to inform the Convention that the contribution of the previous evening amounted to $124.89. Rev. N. M. Strayer, pastor of the Methodist Protestant church, was presented; also Rev. Dr. Spence, chancellor of the American Temperance University, at Harriman, Tenn., who bore the greetings of the board of regents, the faculty, and three hundred and forty-five students of that institution. (We reserve Dr. Spence's interesting account of this unique enterprise for a future issue.) Mrs. Stevenson here offered and the Convention adopted the resolution concerning the university found in the report on resolutions.

Miss Willard then introduced Miss Rebecca Krikorian, daughter of an Armenian minister, referring with tender pathos to that land as dear to us "because it has suffered, and suffering sanctifies." The Armenian girl made a touching prayer in broken English, for her own land and for this land of ours so much more highly favored; "Bless us each one," she said pathetically, "from dear Miss Willard, who is the head of it all, clear down to the foot until Thou dost reach me."

After the conclusion of the noontide devotional service the proposed four amendments to the constitution were considered. Amendment No. 1, providing for vice-president-at-large, was adopted. No. 2, making the superintendent of L. T. L. work a member of the executive committee, was postponed until after the consideration of No. 4. No. 3, making editors of state papers members of the National Convention, was adopted. No. 4, making superintendents members of the executive committee, was laid upon the table. Whereupon Mrs. Lovell gave notice that next year she, or some one in her place, would move the same amendment.

Mrs. Campbell, of Wisconsin, gave notice as follows:

At the next annual meeting, I, or some one in my place, will move to amend Article 4, Section 1, of the Constitution by striking out the words "with the exception of vice-president-at-large" and also "the president may nominate the vice-president-at-large."

Amendment No. 2 was then taken up. A motion to indefinitely postpone was lost, and it was finally adopted by the necessary two-thirds majority.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

For Saturday afternoon there was no regular Convention program. It was devoted to meetings of the executive committee, the board of superintendents and other conferences. There was a general scattering of delegates and visitors, some taking advantage of an omnibus excursion through the city, others forming exploring parties on foot. But of all who planned for a "good time" that afternoon none were so thoroughly successful as those who attended the evangelistic mass-meeting conducted by our National evangelist, Miss Elizabeth Greenwood. After a devotional service that brought every heart to the throne in fervency of supplication and praise, Miss Greenwood spoke regarding the work of this most vital department of W. C. T. U. work, emphasizing the need for individual observance of the "still hour" during which the soul gains grace and wisdom for its daily need. The work of securing coöperation from the churches was also dwelt upon. Miss Greenwood then introduced a few of the workers who each added a valuable contribution to the golden utterances of the hour,—Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, Miss Cassie Smith, Miss Anna Downey, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. Grubb, Miss Alice R. Palmer and Mrs. Edholm.

From four to six on Saturday afternoon the Y's of Baltimore received their friends in genuine Y style at state headquarters, which is to say, with gracious cordiality combined with womanly helpfulness.

SATURDAY EVENING.

This was Young Women's evening, and the spacious hall was filled to overflowing with an appreciative audience eager to see and hear the Y's. Promptly at 7:30 the sound of a merry march turned all faces toward the entrance, and in a few minutes there filed down the aisle the Woman's College Glee Club of Baltimore. The evening dresses of the students were half hidden by the flowing college gown, and the bright locks were crowned by the stiff but not unbecoming college cap. Following these came Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary, and her troop of Y secretaries, organizers and delegates. After an artistic rendering of a selection from Handel's Elijah, by the Glee Club, Miss Carrie Lee Carter, of Missouri, led in devotional service, and then for two hours the audience was held by an intellectual menu as attractive as any afforded by the Convention. It seemed to be the universal verdict that this was the best Y night the National Convention had ever had.

The words of welcome, by Miss Stewart, state Y secretary of Maryland, the glimpses of foreign lands, by Miss Parrish, National Y organizer, Mrs. Barnes' bit of picturesque prophecy concerning "Places where the Polyglot Petition is to be Presented," Miss Cummings' outline of the Dark Continent's Anticipations, the beautiful Indian club exercise of Miss Rose Leiter, the merry mandolins and glees of the college club, Miss Frances H. Ensign's remarkable cure for the Gold Fever, the presentation of the Y banner to Maryland, the witty advertising of the new Y almanac, by Miss Jones, of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant's eloquent "Parting Blessing," are each worthy of a eulogistic paragraph. But these crowded columns forbid, and for a more detailed report we must refer our readers to the current monthly issue of Young Women (the Y's own organ) which is the regular Convention number.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

Very impressive were the services of Sunday afternoon, and the spacious auditorium was crowded with eager listeners. The choir of the Immanuel Baptist church furnished the music, and devotional exercises were led by Miss Greenwood. The annual sermon was preached by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, the subject being, "The glory of God in the face of Christ Jesus." We will give the major part of this masterly and deeply spiritual address in a later issue. It is well to reserve part of our feast of good things for future delectation. Here, however, is a little foretaste of the enjoyment in store for our readers in this sermon. Speaking of the W. C. T. U. and its principles Mrs. Stevenson said:

I know of no other organization which has such a true conception of what it is to reveal God. The women of our association believe that we want Him not only in one avenue, but in every avenue of life. We want not only to see God in the Bible, but in every book, every word, every action. To us there is no dividing line between the spiritual and the secular. We feel that we have an eternal partnership with the infinite God to raise the world to a height where God can be seen. We want God to be seen in the business world, in politics, along lines of health, in obtaining perfect sanitation. If the glory of God is to be revealed throughout the world we see plainly that there are many things which are to be gotten past in our climbing. That is why we are against every form of evil everywhere.

Immediately following this service came a meeting in the interest of purity, conducted by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, to which almost the entire large audience remained and which, judging from the rapt attention given to the speaker, produced an arrest of thought which will result in a widening arousement and more vigorous practical work in this important field of reform. The spirituelle face and slender form of Dr. Allen and her appealing voice which rang out clearly through the great building, won all hearts. And when she recited the little poem about erring women, "The heart that dares not sing,"—of which she is the author—tears stood in hundreds of eyes.

"Ah! the saddest thing in this dreary earth
Is a heart that cannot sing."

Have you ever thought what it is to be such a woman? asked Dr. Allen. Usually we think of her as a woman who has herself abandoned home and purity, but she is, too, a woman who has been abandoned. Robinson Crusoe on his desert island was no more lonely than is an outcast woman in the midst of Christian homes. We women in our department of the W. C. T. U. have realized that women of this class are our sisters and we must hold out a hand to them.

The speaker outlined the work of the purity department of the W. C. T. U., and said there had been more reform legislation along this line last year than in any one year of our organization. The age of moral majority for women, she declared, must be raised to the age of legal majority—a sentiment indorsed by the Convention with hearty applause. Womanhood is potential motherhood, hence the degradation of woman means the degradation of the race. Concerning rescue work she said:

The rescue homes, founded through the splendid generosity of Mr. Charles M. Crittenton in twenty-one cities, are coming into line with our work, and we think the time is coming when there will be such a home in every large city and every town where one is needed, so that no girl will be obliged to live a life of sin because she won't have a roof to shelter her.

And of the causes which produce the "fallen" woman, or rather, as some one has well put it, the "knocked-down" woman:

There are many causes for the departure of these girls from the paths of virtue, but the two most common are the prevalence of a double moral standard and a lack of home training. We want a purity as perfect, a manhood as noble as that demanded of women. A man will usually treat a respectable woman with respect, but we want him to treat all women with respect, no matter how poor, how lowly, how much of an outcast one may be. Every woman is a potential mother, and the degradation of one woman may mean the degradation of a race. We want our girls, too, to understand the value and purity of girlhood. The world rests upon the shoulders of our young people, for they are the coming men and women.

Lack of home training is the most frequent cause of girls going astray. Formation, rightly conducted, will preclude the necessity of reformation. We want our children kept by right knowledge from wrong doing.

SUNDAY EVENING.

The announcement that Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Chant would speak drew a great multitude to Music Hall on Sunday evening. Every seat and every available inch of standing room was occupied by a well-dressed, good-natured crowd. After music by the choir and Scripture reading by Miss Helen Potter, Miss Willard introduced Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman "of Missouri and of the nation." Mrs. Hoffman, always a favorite with white-ribboners and with "outsiders" was warmly greeted. Her subject was "Our Advance," and she presented it in her own forceful and witty way. She spoke of the change in social customs and in church customs regarding the use of intoxicants, as largely the result of agitation by women. She referred humorously to the alarm expressed by some good conservative people because women were doing so much talking. "Why," she exclaimed, "women have only just begun to talk," and urged her fellow workers to do their duty and "keep on talking." "There will be no 'heavenly time' for legislators in this world," she said, "until they make up their minds and make them up right on the temperance question." She spoke of the different agencies which have been and are a power for temperance, among them the Salvation Army, the Young People's societies, the temperance papers. The W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party have done most to stir the people out of their criminal indifference. What hinders victory? First, we must revise our suffrage laws. We must restrict the foreign vote and extend the suffrage to women, and second, the church must come to the front. "Some day," said the speaker, "the church will grow to the level of the Salvation Army and I hope before I die that no church member will be allowed to use either liquor or tobacco."

Remarking that most of our women were "minute women," and ready for any emergency, Miss Willard called upon three women in turn, Mrs. White-Kinney, Mrs. Beecham and Mrs. Nichols—neither of whom had been forewarned—to make a brief collection speech while the collectors went through the audience. After Mrs. K. Willard Baldwin had sung most beautifully the "Ninety and Nine," Miss Willard introduced Mrs. Chant, of England, likening her to the skylark of the temperance reform, which though it soars, never wanes, but remains true to the kindred points of heaven and home. Mrs. Chant, as she came forward, received such an ovation from the audience as indicated very plainly the warm place she had won for herself in the hearts of the W. C. T. U. and the people of Baltimore.

"Temperance work," she said, "magnificent as it is, is secondary to the work of which it is the forerunner, and that is, to leave the world better than when we found it. Temperance work is a means to an end and not the end itself. No temperance organization, however fine or however grandly generaled, is of the least avail unless it is the medium through which the enthusiasm of the individual is felt." The whole of our English friend's vigorous address was an appeal for personal zeal and faithfulness. "See to it," she said, "that you are not sheltering yourself under the shadow of the organization. . . . . Every one of you must be a good soldier of Jesus Christ and endure hardness. If when you go out from this hall to-night," she continued, making practical application of her words, "there shall be waiting at the corner the insignificant, the humble person, the lost sheep still out of the fold, and you turn away saying you can do nothing, then I know one thing, you have called yourself a Christian but you have not understood what Christ is." The stirring appeal closed with a word of encouragement to those who reach the "road of eternal success over the rough paving stones of failure." and the prayer that God would "give to you and me a tenderness deeper than the depths of the Pacific."

MONDAY MORNING.

Convention being called to order by Mrs. Stevens the committee on telegrams reported as follows:

From Wyoming W. C. T. U. convention: We send loving greetings. Come over into Macedonia and help us.

The following reply sent: National W. C. T. U. return greetings. Read Deut. 1: 26.

To Mrs. S. M. I. Henry: National W. C. T. U. sends loving greeting. Read Isaiah 58: 11 and 12.

To Mrs. Jennie Smith: We greatly miss your presence. Read Isaiah 40: 29, 30 and 31.

Mr. F. W. Woodbridge, of Ohio, husband of our beloved Mary A. Woodbridge, was then introduced and the Convention rose to give him welcome.

Mr. Woodbridge: As I have listened to the words of welcome and greeting that have come to me since coming to this convention, words that have fallen very pleasantly upon my ear and gone to my heart, it has seemed to me as though I were a medium through which you were sending greetings to the departed one. I come to you with a feeling of brotherhood which I cannot express. I assure you of my appreciation of the courtesy shown me and also of my heartfelt interest in your work in all its lines.

The President introduced Miss West, a fraternal delegate from the ladies of the Maccabees, who spoke briefly, and Mr. James L. Ewing, of Washington, D. C., extended the greetings of the Anti-Saloon League, of the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mrs. Grubb a vote of thanks was given to Dr. Harcourt of the Grace M. E. Church for his able sermon the previous evening on woman suffrage.

PURITY.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen: The interest in the work of the purity department has not diminished during the past year, though some phases of it have been more emphasized than others. In the reform section the reports are as usual. That is, where homes of refuge are established they have done good service and the women have been saved; some of them converted to Christ, and in one case the report is, "One woman saved from suicide." Where there are no places of shelter for fallen women the work has stagnated. The reports continue from year to year the same pathetic cry: "We can do nothing for these our erring sisters because we have no home to offer them if they leave the haunts of sin." The Florence Crittenton Missions are continuing their good work and have been made a department of the World's W. C. T. U. under the superintendency of Mrs. Charlton Edholm. This, in itself, promises success. Mrs. Edholm and "Mother" Prindle, matron of the mission in New York city, went to England, at the invitation of Lady Henry Somerset, to establish a mission in London.

The interest in mothers' meetings is increasing rapidly. Our women are recognizing their scope and value. They perceive that in right instruction is the safeguard of childhood, and the guarantee of national virtue. If one hundred women in each state would take the Mothers' Friend at full rates its permanence would be assured. My faith is strong that my sisters will stand by me and hold up my hands. I have made arrangements to club with The Union Signal at rates that give subscribers the Mother's Friend at half price. Will you not take advantage of this offer to aid your National and your department papers? My faith is strong. I cannot think that our W. C. T. U. women will fail to rally to the support of their own, and in this faith I wait.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

Mrs. Emilie D. Martin: Our work is not so much the reformation of impurity as the preservation of purity. A great vigilance committee has been organized until our work is well established in nearly every state and territory. We have secured the coöperation of the news companies and the superintendents of railroads. Our counselor, Anthony Comstock, has taken the evidence secured, and is destroying not only the books, but the printing presses in this country and other countries that send objectionable matter throughout our land. Our superintendents have been into the courts, and have had men and women imprisoned and fined, according to Ohio law—"two thousand dollars fine and five years imprisonment." Many towns and cities have started the good citizen movement by working for ordinances and their enforcement, bringing to light the fact that the authorities were in sympathy, and have set the ball rolling which has placed these men on the retired list.

Mayors have been enjoined to keep the streets clean from moral taint. Appeals have been made through the press and public addresses, that as we have pride of country and love of the children, that as ministers of the gospel of Jesus and every lover of the good, we abolish the bill boards and posters that are a desecration of the pure and beautiful. Up and down the land our women have gone to magistrates with state laws which they themselves have presented in the different legislatures with the seizure clause, which are now laws upon state statute books. In every case but one we have had attentive and kindly hearing. Through the president of New York state with the state superintendent, a self-sacrificing campaign was begun in the legislature last winter. Public sentiment was aroused and thousands became interested for the first time. The resolution of the National Editorial Association for the elevation and purification of the press was printed in petition form and sent all over the country. The coöperation of the National Editorial Association is assured for the coming year. Mrs. Harriet S. Pritchard, state superintendent of New York, secured a strong resolution at the New York State Editorial Association. Maryland, Rhode Island, Oregon and nearly all of the states have worked for the elevation of the press.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

Mrs. Naomi D. Tomlinson: Great persistency on the part of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be required to instruct and to entreat the women of our land to join our organization. Special efforts have been put forth during the year to overcome prejudice, and to show that we are banded together to save the children, to reform the inebriate.

Parlor meetings are intended for this purpose. By inviting to our hearts and homes the women whom we need to assist us in our efforts to overthrow this gigantic evil at our doors. At the same time there are many women to-day who need our help; not alone in the homes of the lowly, but in homes of affluence. One thousand four hundred and thirty-one meetings have been held this year; 1,522 members and 310 honoraries gained; while through this channel $1,670 have been raised. Pray, plan, push, persevere; so we will go forward with our feet upon the Rock of Ages; the Bible in our hand, the cross of Christ before us, until above us shall float a pure white banner upon which is inscribed, "No compromise with evil," "Prohibition by woman's ballot," "Home protection for state, nation and world."

FRANCHISE.

Dr. Louise Purington: We do not claim to be leaders in the franchise reform; we do claim to do leading work. The W. C. T. U. has accomplished more than any other one agency to interest and enlist women. Mrs. Stanton admits it; she did not hesitate to say so at the Atlanta Convention.

The following states have been heard from since my report to the National was sent in—New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota and Kansas. Minnesota is an example of the perseverance of the saints—four suffrage bills having been successively introduced into the legislature. We have the most favorable testimony from press, pulpit and public men like Hon. J. S. Clarkson, Senator Hoar, Chauncey Depew and others. The latter was made a convert by hearing the praises of woman suffrage while traveling in Wyoming. Mr. Bucklin, Colorado, member of the National Single Tax Committee, says, "The participation of women in the election has dignified suffrage. Women took their duties seriously; they dressed for them with care (the feminine way) and the polls were orderly and clean."

As to Kansas, Rev. Clarence Greely says: "As a matter of fact the women have closed the saloons in Kansas every year since municipal suffrage was granted in 1887." (In the Kansas penitentiary are one thousand men and nine women.)

Parties, legislatures and governors are a theme worthy of long and careful consideration. For instance, the Republicans in convention in Iowa secured harmony in temperance legislation by elimination; the present position of the party being that temperance is out of politics.

Perhaps the most sensational legislative exploit has been the referendum in Massachusetts. A "sham" because it has no legal validity, and expresses nothing; not even an opinion.

I should like to speak for our lecturers but they speak for themselves and always get a hearing. President Fessenden and Miss E. U. Yates have been afield in Massachusetts. Clara Hoffman is always at it. Helen C. Harford of Oregon, receives praise within her gates for her untiring efforts. Lady Henry Somerset makes this a keynote, and predicts that the women of England will be enfranchised within the next ten years, while our beloved St. Frances, whose keenness of appreciation and appropriation is unsurpassed, prophesies that early in the twentieth century women will be fully panoplied in government.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey: The department is organized in twenty-six states and territories, where earnest and efficient superintendents are pushing the work and rapidly promulgating its aims and objects by carefully distributing literature, utilizing the press, organizing juvenile effort, etc. Two hundred public meetings have been held during the year, general peace day observed in many localities, 175 sermons preached in the interests of peace, 140 lectures given, pledges to peace principles obtained and petitions successfully circulated. Peace bands have been organized among children, the Bible readings and concert exercises published by the department have been extensively used and the department papers, the Pacific Banner and Acorn, have had a good circulation in the states that have adopted the work.

Our golden dream is to sometime witness an international court of arbitration, but woman being denied the ballot, can do nothing directly to bring about this much desired end. We can educate and thus influence the present, and especially the coming voter—the boy of to-day.

In New Haven, Conn., there is a soldiers' monument erected with the statue of a woman at the top holding aloft the olive branch of peace. Would that all soldiers' monuments were so constructed as to portray a time when there will be no more soldiers except such as will help to build up waste places in the moral world and establish the reign of the blessed Prince of Peace. Surely the patriotism which tries to ennoble the country is higher than the patriotism which inspires one to die in front of a gun.

We hear a great deal about the women who sent their sons to war with instructions to either return victorious or not to return at all, but there are mothers who have shown far greater heroism by keeping their sons free from the guilt of shedding human blood.

Although we have had many encouragements we still have those formidable obstacles, the military drill in public and Sunday-schools to contend with. If the Boys' Brigade is not intended to foster and educate a war spirit it is hard to define its purpose. Surely teachers who are in daily contact with children see the need of teaching them to suppress their retaliative instincts rather than cultivate them.

LEGISLATION AND PETITION.

Mrs. M. B. Ellis: There was not a woman among us when we started out twenty-two years ago but that believed the saloons closed by the power of prayer would stay closed, but they did not. There was not a woman among us but that believed the saloons closed by the power of God would stay closed without the power of organic law. But we found that there must be law back of sentiment and sentiment back of law. We found that women must study law. We found that just as soon as the womanhood of this nation laid its hand upon the saloon, the county and the state and the nation threw the arm of protection by law about the saloon, and the saloon said to us, "Stand back, ladies, this is a protected industry." We found that the law could be enforced, although the cry has been going up all through these years, "Impossible, we cannot do it." But, my sisters, I have only to refer you to the city of New York, where one man with the courage of his convictions has brought about such a reformation that of the ten thousand licensed saloons in the city of New York, not one was open yesterday as far as could be ascertained. (Applause.) The New York Woman's Christian Temperance Unions have been holding meetings all through the state, in various churches and have called for an expression upholding Commissioner Roosevelt, and those expressions of sympathy and endorsement have been pouring in to him every Monday and Tuesday all through this battle.

I would call your attention to brave Mrs. Holley, of Colorado, the first woman elected to a state legislature. The first bill ever presented by a woman in that capacity was to raise the age of consent to twenty-one years (Applause.) Too late to have printed in my report, I have received the following: Texas presented several bills to strengthen the present local option law. Petitions were circulated in every part of the state to raise the age of consent from twelve to fifteen years, and the bill passed; petitions in the forms of protest were widely circulated, also, to strengthen the governor in his brave stand to prevent the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight. New Hampshire had six bills before the legislature. The bill on the age of consent passed the senate and house, to be vetoed by Governor Busiall. Remember him! To this veto we owe it that it can still be said to us, and shame to Puritan New England, that after all the discussion of this important subject in recent years, it still has one state, New Hampshire, which shares with Utah the disgrace of fixing the age of consent at thirteen years. Alabama kept a W. C. T. U. woman at the legislature for weeks last winter. Ladies, a better plan cannot be thought of. You need to keep a woman in touch with your legislature, who knows the men, knows how they feel and knows their status in regard to the bills pending. Keep such a woman at your state capital during the time of your campaign.

Mrs. Carse then presented the report of the

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION.

Mrs. Carse: We hoped when the report of this association was given last year that before another twelve months had sped by, we should be able to see a great improvement in business, but instead of this, commerce has kept on the ebb tide until it has touched the lowest point known in half a century. Unless where there has been a very large amount of capital to back commercial enterprises, it has been with the greatest difficulty that they have been kept on their feet. Especially has this been true of publications, as the wrecks of publishing houses that have gone down during the last three years will abundantly testify. We are happy to say, with all the stringency of the times the subscription list of The Union Signal has increased almost a thousand over last year.

Cash receipts from October 1, 1894, to October 1, 1895, $139,799.71; cash expenditures, $139,667.73. The early date of the Convention renders it impossible to give the assets and liabilities, which will be forwarded to the stockholders before the close of the year.

We have printed over one hundred and eighteen million pages of literature the past year, an increase of eighteen million pages over the amount printed in 1894.

Our outside printing is still an important factor in the business, and we have added to the papers enumerated last year, eight new papers.

Books issued during the year, "Life and Labors of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge," by her friend and pastor, the Rev. A. M. Hills, of Oberlin, O. "Thumb Nail Sketches of White Ribbon Women," edited by Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, contains, as you know, brief biographies of W. C. T. U. leaders throughout the world. "Marching Songs No. 3" is just from the press. It is compiled as were Nos. 1 and 2 by Miss Anna Gordon, and will be eagerly welcomed by L. T. L. workers, for they have been asking for a No. 3 for some time. Twenty-three new leaflets have been issued. The monthly Bible and Responsive Readings continue to find favor with local unions.

It is most encouraging to be able to state that we have sent out 66,400 more leaflets in 1895 than in 1894.

Young Women has completed its first year, under the management of its capable editor, Miss Jennie A. Stewart, since it evoluted from the Oak and Ivy Leaf. It is not only dainty and beautiful in appearance, but it is as full of good things for the elevation of the race as the heart of the most advanced new woman can desire.

The Young Crusader, edited by Miss Ada M. Melville, who seems to have a pen especially adapted to delight children, should be more widely read than it is. No white-ribboner who has children should be without it. Then it is especially adapted to L. T. L. and Sunday-schools. The quarterly Temperance Lesson Supplement is alone worth the price of the paper, being invaluable to teachers in Sunday-schools who do not find full temperance helps in the regular quarterlies.

We have had remarkable changes during the past five years, caused by sickness and death, in the editorial staff of THE UNION SIGNAL. Now it is our able and devoted managing editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, that leaves us for a time. We hardly know how to part with her. In the many exigencies that the editorial department of our paper has met with in the past few years, she has been our chief dependence; her wisdom, tact and firmness was equal to every emergency. We have been most fortunate in securing during the year of Miss Sudduth's absence, Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, who for the last year or two has been the president of the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, and as an educator and writer, has a national reputation.

After being robbed last year by the National W. C. T. U. of the brilliant editor of Books and Leaflets, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, we have found in Mrs. C. C. Chapin a woman of wonderful ability, as well as adaptability, who dropped into her position as though she had been born to it. Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, our business manager, is firm in the conviction that a business which has kept the confidence of bankers and business men in these perilous times, will meet with assured success when prosperity returns to the various industries of the country. We have had to turn away thousands of dollars worth of business this year for lack of money to purchase the needed facilities for doing it, and from inability to extend the necessary credit. We cannot in these times ask for an increase of capital stock, although with added capital we could so increase the business as to give reasonable hope for paying dividends to stockholders. Without this, we must patiently wait for returning prosperity throughout the land, believing that when it comes, our Association with other sound enterprises will quickly recover from the depressing financial distress of the past three years.

On motion Mrs. Carse's report was adopted.

MISS WILLARD: "Of course this is a mere technicality. As all these interests are managed under a separate corporation, we are not responsible for any of their failures and successes, but we rejoice that they are our own women helpers and that they have made so great a success of our publishing house that has for many years sent out from eighty to one hundred and thirty millions of this literature every year, and I think that we should be grateful to them."

Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, editor of books and leaflets, and Miss Ada Melville, editor of the Young Crusader, were then introduced. Mrs. Burt presented a memorial from the Humane Society, of the city of New York, asking the coöperation of the W. C. T. U. On motion of Mrs. Haslup, it was referred to the executive committee.

Next in order on the program was the conducted by Mrs. Hoffman.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

While Miss Willard spoke tender words which hushed the Convention into reverent silence, the picture of Mary T. Lathrap, which, during the previous sessions had rested on an easel to the right of the platform, was brought to the front and Miss Willard said: "The sight of that face will do more to bring perfect order than spoken words might hope to achieve."

The choir sang the Memorial Hymn, written by Miss Willard, and dear Mother Thompson's voice, trembling with age and emotion, led in prayer. Miss Sadie Thomas sang very sweetly and appropriately, "The Holy City," and Mrs. Hoffman read the list of names of those for whom this service was held:

Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, Montreal, Canada, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., and president of that of the Canadian Dominion.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Jackson, Mich., vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., and president of that of Michigan.

Mrs. Allen Butler, of Syracuse, N. Y., first president of the W. C. T. U. of New York.

Mrs. Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, Michigan, editor of Living Issues.

[By a most regretted error the name of Mrs. R. S. Esmond, of Syracuse, N. Y., was omitted from the list last year and is included now in loving remembrance. Mrs. Esmond was for years our National superintendent of the department of work to induce all church authorities to use non-intoxicating wine at the sacramental table.]

Mr. Tuttle, husband of Mary Thompson, who gave us the Crusade Psalm.

Clara Kimball, sister of Miss Lucia Kimball, World's superintendent of Sunday-school work.

Hon. Frederick Douglass, Washington, D. C., whose name is included because he was the greatest representative of his race in this age and the friend of every good cause.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I was a short time ago in the city of New York and they told me there that at the funeral services of one of their most beloved leaders and trusted comrades they had the most joyous and inspiring music, their instruments rang out with their voices as they sang their rejoicings over their promoted comrades, and I said, "How much more consistent that is than we are." When our children and our loved ones are called to more favorable situations (no matter if it be to the ends of the earth) where they are given better conditions of life than with us, we see them go joyously and gladly. We do not weep even though we miss their voices and their presence and know that we may never see them again. We are jubilant and joyful because it is better for them. We believe from the Scripture that we read here to-day that the friends to whom we pay our tribute of love to-day have found the best conditions. We believe that Christ arose from the dead and that they, too, shall rise from the dead. We believe that they have entered into that happiness where there is no alloy and while our human affections cry out mournfully for the sound of the voice that is still and for the touch of the hand that is vanished, should we not with that Christian faith which looks beyond the vale, rejoice and sing hymns of praise that our comrades have been promoted beyond the fret and the anxiety, the worry and the care which all of us must bear? I know how hard it is to rise to that plane where we can so look upon death, and yet we ought to look upon death in that way or we ought to renounce our Christian principles. We cannot renounce our Christian principles, our Christian belief, our hope of immortality, and therefore we should put away the pageant of mourning that we have had in all the past.

Mrs. Hoffman spoke touchingly of Mary Lathrap, with whom she had been so closely associated in the work of our organization, and then called upon Mrs. Benjamin of that departed leader's own state, who said in part:

In paying my simple tribute to the memory of our promoted comrade, I am glad that I need not attempt to fully portray her character. You all knew her, you have listened to her eloquence, you have read her poems, you have heard her preach and pray, and you know that in prayer or sermon or poem or address she was always like her own self and like no other. She did not always walk a rose-strewn way, for the woman, younger or older, who has the courage of her convictions and courage to avow those convictions, is often misapprehended and misjudged, and though Mrs. Lathrap could bear criticism so unflinchingly, no one whom it has ever been my lot to meet, enjoyed commendation more than she did. Sometimes in following those masterful arguments from premise to conclusion, listening to her scathing denunciations of evil and the anathemas of God that would hurl upon those who did iniquity, some have been led to declare that there was no tenderness in her. They knew her but little. Those who knew her better knew that hidden away beneath that calm exterior were unfathomable depths of tenderness.

During those days when there came to me that saddest sorrow that can come to a woman, no words were quite so full of friendship's fragrance as hers: no lips to me ever seemed more divinely touched than did hers. At ten o'clock on Thursday morning, January 3, 1895, she passed into the land of eternal morning. There was no crape on the door, there were no habiliments of mourning anywhere. In that beautifully decorated church, all was white, even the family pew draped in white just as she desired it. Let us thank God, my sisters, for the home over there and for the rest that remaineth and that we will all "follow that way."

MRS. HOFFMAN: Mrs. Perkins will say a few words concerning our sister, Mrs. Stapler, of Indian Territory.

MRS. PERKINS: A few summers ago it was my privilege to spend a week in Jane Stapler's lovely home, a woman who had the blood of many chieftains in her veins, a cultured woman, a woman whose heart was living with Christ in God. The people all over the territory in their hours of joy, and particularly in their hours of sadness, sent for Mrs. Stapler. When the chill of death came to their homes they knew there was one that could come to them and bring them a word of comfort. She was always trying to give somebody a happy, good time, the reflex of that happiness came into her own soul; her soul was full of hopes and happiness and joy. She was elected to the presidency when the Indian Territory was organized and held that office until her death. One year ago she was with us in our convention at Cleveland. A few weeks afterwards there came the news, "she has gone," and so many letters came to me, saying, "we feel as if we had lost our mother."

MRS. HOFFMAN: We were all very sympathetic with our dear Margaret Sudduth when we heard that she was called home, that her father had already gone when she arrived, and I will ask Mrs. Stevenson to say a few words about Dr. Sudduth.

MRS. STEVENSON: I think perhaps the reason why I have been asked to do this is because no one can enter quite so closely into this particular grief that has come to our beloved comrade as can I, who have passed through the same this year. I want to tell you just in a word that Dr. Sudduth's relation to our cause was not simply that he was the father of the managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, but from the very first of the organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union he was an honored member. One of the last things he did was to go out upon some errand with his daughter, who is our National superintendent of flower mission work. He was heart and soul—is to-day, I am sure—with us in our work, a "brother-in-law" beloved.

MRS. HOFFMAN: We all remember that Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams was the treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U.—a most efficient New England woman, whose lot had been cast in Canada, where she was greatly loved, greatly revered and trusted. Then I wish to speak one word about Dr. Gordon, the cleanest, whitest, most loving soul I ever knew—a man who stood right on every question; and about William Jennings Demorest, who set in motion that great movement of the Demorest medal contest, by which temperance sentiments have been heard by thousands and tens of thousands who otherwise would never have heard one word. And then Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner, who was the fearless exponent of truth, and who, long, long before people began to talk about equality under the law, proclaimed it fearlessly from his pulpit in Boston, decade after decade; John N. Stearns, secretary National Temperance Society for many years, and the active manager of that great house; Mrs. Emery, that dignified, well-poised woman we have heard from this platform again and again, and who was always so just, the author of "Seven Financial Conspiracies," and the National superintendent of the department, the relation of temperance to capital and labor.

I remember a few years ago being in Michigan and hearing a paper read by Mrs. Reynolds, wife of Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, one of the most fearless and one of the strongest setting forth of the position that all temperance workers should take to-day in this country on this great question of the liquor traffic. Also Mr. Howard, the aged father of Mrs. Campbell, with whom some of our members are acquainted. And then while we are speaking of these who have filled out their record and have gone home, we must speak a word of tenderness for the son of our National treasurer, with whom I was acquainted. A splendidly equipped young man without a single bad habit, with a young wife and child, cut down so suddenly and yet ready to go. Also the father of Mrs. Stevenson, and the husband of our sister, Mrs. Hammer, who went home like a ripe shock of grain gathered in its fullness. Also the husband of Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, and the husband of our Mrs. Phillips, Rev. James L. Phillips. And now I ask Miss Willard to say a few words, as I know she would desire to do about some, if not all of these promoted comrades.

MISS WILLARD: Beloved comrades, I think nothing in the service has touched your hearts more than the silent testimony of the great delegation from Pennsylvania, as they arose when the name of William Hammer, the husband of their president, was brought before us, for he had been a strong staff, a beautiful rod, for our Anna Hammer in all her work. To me this is the most beautiful service we ever held, because so far as I can recall it is the first time that we have had the roll of honor of the beloved family names of those who passed away from the homes of those who are the representatives of the National white ribbon movement. And it is so good and so true for a body of women who above everything in the world stand for the purity and safety and happiness and exaltation of the home to remember with love and tenderness those strong, dignified, noble-hearted men who have been to us the stalwarts of the movement, without whom this work could not have been done. How many a woman has said to me, "I would work but it does not seem to work well at home that I should." How then ought we to love and honor such pastors as Dr. Gordon and Dr. Miner and that great heart, Dr. Willing, who gave up the riches of their own lives to the cause of temperance and purity, and then rejoiced in any work that was done. Then I see that dear patient face of Mother Monroe down the aisle, and I think how her heart has ached as her sweet daughters, one by one, have been transplanted to the heavenly gardens where angels walk and seraphs are the wardens. They kept the home pleasant and bright and sweet when she was away at the county convention or the state work, and now they are all gone. Our Sister Hoffman has characterized these honored and beloved names. They need no further word from any of us, except that I would like to speak of Susan Steele of Wisconsin, true as steel from the beginning in all the difficult work of founding of the society, and Mrs. Allen Butler, of New York whose honored face you saw and in memory of whom the New York delegation has arisen, the noble pioneer of the great Empire state, full of years and honors she has passed away.

While we have been in these heavenly places in Christ Jesus, just as it was sweetly sung, having visions of the New Jerusalem, there was slipped into my hand this telegram from our young co-worker so valued in the fight, Belle Kearney of Mississippi, whom we expected here today and who expected to come—"My dear brother died on Saturday. God is with us." I know that it will be a wish of yours to have a telegram sent to Belle Kearney and I know it will be your wish to send a telegram to the mother of Mary T. Lathrap, who is in her ninety-eighth year, and you will wish to remember Dr. Lathrap, who stood so grandly by in all this great emergency, and I know that as the Michigan delegation has risen, their attitude is at heart the attitude of us all that you would wish these telegrams sent at once by your committee. I do not trust myself to speak of her. It was her voice that first said to me "Sister, arise." It was Mary T. Lathrap who named me at the first convention of the W. C. T. U. as the corresponding secretary of the society. We had never met before,—she came with her smiling face and said, "Michigan, my Michigan, is going to nominate you." And that is the way we got acquainted, and we walked in pleasantness and affection and confidence together until the hour when her telegram came to me, "Sister, the chariot swings low. God bless you. I am ready." We cried about her last year because we knew she was soon going. We cried about her when they brought the beautiful white ribbon and placed it at the head of the Michigan delegation, the ribbon she had sent, for we knew she was thinking of us in her great pain and infinite weariness through that long and deadly fight.

Many a time have I said when something occurred to me that I thought might help to untangle some difficulty, something occurred to me that I feared I should forget—perhaps Mary Lathrap made me think of it, or Mary Woodbridge, perhaps mother brought it to my recollection, for God says in His Word they shall be ministering spirits sent forth to minister and we need their balm and strength and healing and uplift when we get weary in the great beautiful Conventions, and I sometimes believe that this prompter has been Thyself, O Thou who faintest now no more.

Mrs. Katherine Baldwin then sang, "The Home of the Soul," a hymn which had been an especial favorite with her beloved grandmother Willard. Mrs. Hoffman offered prayer, asking that "we may be sustained by an unfaltering trust, that though we know not where Thine islands lift their fronded palms in air, this we may know, we cannot drift beyond Thy love and care," and the service closed with a verse of "Blest be the tie that binds," sung by the Convention.

Mrs. Tyng reported a telegram to the W. C. T. U. convention of Canada: Loving greeting. I Cor. 15: 58.

The president introduced Mrs. A. H. Eaton, president of the Baltimore Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; Judge Melton, president of the Prohibition Union of Washington; Mrs. John F. Graham, president of the Lend-a-Hand Club; Miss Richmond, secretary of the Charity Organization of Baltimore; Miss Elizabeth King, president of the Arundel Club, and Mrs. Summerfield Baldwin, of Baltimore, former president of Maryland W. C. T. U.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

Mrs. Stevens presided, Miss Willard being in executive session.

The committee on telegrams reported as follows:

From Mother Stewart:—"Meet you in spirit at noon time. Phil. 1:2-11."

From Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, a pleasant letter to the committee and the following to the Convention:—"Read II. Cor. 4:15-18."

To Mrs. Torrence:—"National W. C. T. U. sends loving sympathy and greeting. Read Rev. 21:4."

To Dr. S. S. Lathrap:—"In loving remembrance. Col. 1:9-10."

Miss Belle Kearney:—"National W. C. T. U. sends loving sympathy. Read Rom. 8:37."

From Mrs. W. C. Sibley, president W. C. T. U. Georgia:—"Have been ill. Georgia's greetings. Loyalty, best wishes and prayers."

Several distinguished visitors were now introduced, each of whom spoke words of cheer and good-will to the white-ribbon workers. We wish we could give the greeting of each, but our readers will appreciate the limitations of space, which in the journalistic creed at least, is like time, inexorable. As it is, we can only give the names: Judge McDowell, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. Joshua Levering, Maryland's Prohibition candidate for governor; Mr. T. M. Prentiss, state chairman of the Prohibition party; Mr. John G. Woolley, "Brother John," as Miss Willard called him, and who received a demonstrative welcome from the delegates; Mr. John J. Cornell, from the Baltimore "Friends" meeting; Rev. Alfred Smith, presiding elder of the M. E. church; Dr. J. E. Hutchinson, also presiding elder; Rev. Dr. W. F. Hamner, of St. Paul's M. E. church, who was called "the best friend the W. C. T. U. has among the ministers"; Rev. Dr. A. W. Green, of St. John's Independent Methodist church; Rev. J. W. Kirk, of Methodist Protestant church, and Rev. J. A. Hopkins, of the Christian church.

Following this very pleasant variation in the regular program came the report of the

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

MRS. MARGARET INGLEHART: The great fundamental principle of total abstinence in the treatment of disease is the tried and true principle upon which this institution is founded. And, sisters, this is your principle and your hospital. It does not belong alone to the state of Illinois, but to you and to all the nation. Its doors stand open for the reception of patients regardless of age, sex or nationality, and persons are welcome from every state in the Union to the shelter which is a home more than a hospital. The number of patients treated this past year were one hundred and fifty-one, one-third of whom have been free patients, and appreciative letters often come as cheering recompense to those who are laboring hard in this much needed work.

Physicians on the staff have assured the Board that their connection with the hospital is not because of gain to them of money or influence, but because of their deep interest in the principle of no alcohol in the treatment of disease.

The hospital is managed and controlled by a Board of thirty women, who give a great deal of valuable time to its affairs without a cent of salary, because they believe the foundation upon which it is established to be the solution of this great temperance reform.

Gratefully do we record the fact that the faithful treasurer reports that we are not insolvent; this is due to the donations of friends of the hospital, to the confidence on the part of the patients who pay for the superior medical and surgical skill and excellent nursing afforded here, and last but not least, to the careful management and wise economy of the Board and those who have been in control in the different departments of our institution.

DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

MRS. MARY F. LOVELL: Eighteen states have taken up this department and fourteen have reported. The largest membership obtained this year in Bands of Mercy is in East Washington, the number pledged being 1,500. The largest whole number reported is from Oregon, 4,508. Oregon also reports the largest number of addresses made to public schools, and including these, the largest number of public addresses, 98. All or almost all of these were made by the state superintendent, who is also an organizer for this department. East Washington reports the largest number of articles written for the press, 16. District of Columbia the largest number of physicians reached with anti-vivisection literature, 23. New York has influenced the largest number of ministers, 74. Indiana reports the largest number of sermons preached in response to effort made, 25 to 30. The great gain of the year has been the securing of a compulsory humane education law in West Washington mainly through the efforts of the state superintendent, who also worked hard for a law against vivisection in schools. The bill passed the legislature but was vetoed by Governor McGraw.

The work of the superintendent for Connecticut is worthy of mention. She introduces it in all possible ways; in public addresses in cars, steamboats, wherever she can. The same can be said of other state superintendents and especially of the two organizers for the department, Mrs. L. P. Rounds and Mrs. L. A. Irons.

Mrs. Irons' report mentions a teacher who made frequent use of vivisection before her pupils and adds the fact of the evident hardening results. One young man talked of it with little concern and seemed to think it a joke when a small boy tried a cruel experiment on a cat without chloroform. It is through such work as this that we may expect the ranks of crime to be supplied. It is a notable fact that some of the criminals convicted within a few years have been practicers of vivisection. All states should try to secure compulsory humane education and should get resolutions to that effect passed at all conventions, widely publishing them in the newspapers afterward.

Mrs. Hoffman stated that she was in receipt of a letter regarding a tournament for shooting at live birds, to be held in Baltimore. On motion of Mrs. Lovell the letter was referred to the resolutions committee for action.

Mrs. Stevens then introduced Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, business manager of the W. T. P. A., who remarked: "It is pleasant to be introduced as the business manager of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, for I have been laboring under the impression lately that I had gone into the railroad business!" It should be explained that Mrs. Grow with self-sacrificing fidelity devoted almost her entire time and attention during the progress of these interesting meetings to the railroad interests of those in attendance upon the Convention. Her report was in part as follows:

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is more than an affiliated interest of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union; it is an integral part of this great organization—its lungs, its voice. I might almost say its brain. Through its literature it breathes the soul of its leaders into its various lines of reform; it voices the sentiments of its greatest and grandest women; its publications are the brain work of its most gifted, brilliant and consecrated writers. It is the outgrowth of its needs; it came into existence that it might have the mighty power of the printed page in the furtherance of its work.

The past year has shown increasing activity in many lines of business, yet like the almost imperceptible return of health to the sick patient has been the flowing back of the life current into the channels of trade, and recovery from the stagnation caused by conditions beyond our control has seemed discouragingly slow.

We have printed over 118,000,000 pages of literature the past year, but alas, not even one-half of this was temperance literature. We rejoice to secure the regular outside publications that we may have an income to meet expenses. THE UNION SIGNAL shows an increase of subscribers as well as circulation, the largest gain being in Ohio. New York has the largest number of subscribers, Alaska the smallest.

Young Women is still an expense and we are seriously asking, "Do the Y's wish an official organ, if so, why do they fail to give to it their support?" The Young Crusader shows increasing circulation, indicating that the L. T. L's are growing in strength and power. The increased demand for leaflets has been gratifying, and while it does not aggregate much in dollars and cents it indicates the pulse of the work. A detailed report of the output of books and leaflets has already been given by Mrs. Carse, president of the association, hence I do not need to speak of it here.

Our reputation for high grade work is second to none in the city and with unlimited capital we could have unlimited patronage.

Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, editor of books and leaflets, then reported briefly for her department, emphasizing the importance of white ribbon workers knowing just what the publishing house has on hand in the way of ammunition for our "peaceful war," and urging every delegate to carry home with her a W. T. P. A. catalogue of publications and make herself thoroughly familiar with its contents.

Mrs. Carse here offered a resolution recommending that it would be a gracious act on the part of delegates to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL for one year for those of their hostesses not familiar with the National organ. Adopted.

Next in order on the program came "Voices from Afar." The first voice was that of our fifth round-the-world missionary, Miss Alice Palmer, honorary vice-president World's W. C. T. U. for South Africa:

MISS PALMER: Do you know that we have to-day 2,000 members of the W. C. T. U. in South Africa? Do you know that we have twenty branches of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union in South Africa? Do you know that we have 12,000 pledged children in South Africa? With one million and a quarter of white inhabitants in South Africa out of that number the women of the Dutch Reformed church have sent out twenty young women to work among the natives of that country, and every one of those twenty is a member of the W. C. T. U. or the Y. We have from 1,400 to 1,600 native women, some of whom have just been converted to Christianity as auxiliary members to the W. C. T. U.

Every missionary and every Christian worker that I have met upon that great continent has said to me, "We can never evangelize the world as long as Christian countries legalize the rum trade." How do you think we can reach three-fifths of the population of the world and support the rum traffic as it is being supported to-day in the United States of America? Do you know that Maryland ranks seven in the production of whisky in the United States, that there is to-day thirty-six million dollars worth of whisky in the bonded warehouses of the state of Indiana—the product of one year? The great Methodist denomination sent out $1,250,000 last year to carry on the work of the gospel, less than one-thirtieth as much? Now I have one proposition which I wish to make to this great audience. There are to-day three thousand young people that propose, through the students' volunteer movement of the United States, to fit themselves and go out into the different countries to take the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Do not let them go with any mistaken impressions about the power of the legalized liquor traffic. Let them go understanding that alcohol is a dangerous and seductive poison that has not any place on the face of the earth under the sunshine of God. Let those young women and those young men go out from you with this white ribbon on their breasts. (Applause.) It is for the local unions and the local members to send them out thoroughly prepared to do this great work for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is not worth while to send them with the Bible in one hand if they do not take THE UNION SIGNAL in the other!

The next voice was that of suffering Armenia, in the person of Miss Rebecca Krikorian, who had already won the love and admiration of her American sisters—a dark, slender girl, wearing the flowing head-dress of the Armenian women. In quaint language, and in a clear, resonant voice which could be heard at a greater distance than could that of most of our speakers, she spoke of alcohol's work in Armenia and made her appeal to this Christian nation in behalf of her own beloved land.

In these last days, she said, I rejoicingly understand that the attention of the whole Christian world is attracted to the sad condition of Armenia. I cannot help mentioning that an enemy which is older in its origin than Arab and Persian, and more terrible in its cruelty than Kurd and Turk, is carrying on its ruin and desolation with great rapidity in that land as well as in other lands. That enemy is alcohol! Armenians who are the direct descendants of Noah and his followers as well in "being husbandmen and planting vineyards" make wine and other liquors and drink them in almost every event of life. In an Armenian National Hymn Book, there is a song which invites the people to drink "the red and white wine." I was the first to put a branch of the W. C. T. U. in Turkey, and suffered for the undertaking, as there is a strong prejudice against young ladies taking part in matters of the kind. Now, however, we have two hundred adult members in our society and two hundred children who sing in Sunday-school. By faith I rejoice in the fact that King Alcohol shall be conquered in Armenia as well as in all the world.

Rev. Mr. Hutchinson, presiding elder of Baltimore, was here introduced, Rev. Mr. Hamner, pastor of St. Paul's Church, Rev. Albert Smith, presiding elder, Rev. Dr. Greene, pastor of St. John's Methodist Church and Bishop Galloway, of the M. E. Church South; after which another voice spoke in forceful utterance and animated gesture for Armenia—that of Mr. M. H. Gulesian. We quote:

It is with great pleasure I stand before you this afternoon and bring before you the sufferings of Armenia in the hope that the American women may do something for the suffering women of Armenia. I wonder how many women here at this convention could realize the suffering that the women of Armenia have been undergoing for some time. Oh, there is suffering beyond description! There is no people in the world that suffer so much persecution, so much misery as the Armenians, and for no other reason but that they are Christians. If they accept to-day the religion of Mahomet they can live in palaces. We are between the jaws of this human tiger and it seems no one has the courage to save us from this hellish condition. Oh, friends, we are on the eve of extermination. We have no one else to appeal to except the liberty loving people of Europe and America. Oh, we are dying! Would you let this nation, a nation that has been Christian more than 1,500 years, that has passed through the Dark Ages, would you let them die out in this nineteenth century? I want to thank Miss Willard and others for their noble effort in behalf of our suffering people.

I am sorry to say that we are wronged by the government of the United States, of which I am a citizen. I am ashamed of its diplomatic policy in regard to the Turkish support of the naturalized citizen. We are miserably treated, our passports not worth the paper they are written on. British Consul Wilson, in his report says of the Turks: "The most open and shameless bribery is practiced from highest to the lowest, and even handed justice for rich and poor alike is unknown. A simple order may send an innocent man to prison for months. Crime goes unpunished, all manner of injustice is committed with impunity. The judges as a rule are ignorant men with no education except a little of the law, the ecclesiastical law of the Koran on which they base their decisions. As to the members, it is sufficient to say that they are all ignorant of the law and that probably not twenty-five per cent of them can write or read the sentence to which they attach their seals." These are the people who are oppressing us and I ask you to help the suffering women of Armenia.

MISS WILLARD: "I do not think we have quite appreciated the pathos of this speech from this young man in our own tongue, which he has spoken with such depth of passion and patriotism. I do not think we can know of such love of country as he who sees his country as a martyr. It is a martyr nation; the globe has never known a martyr nation like Armenia. In England they are moving to help Armenia. Lady Henry Somerset sent an influential friend to Mrs. Gladstone at the time I left, and has received word that Mrs. Gladstone will stand at the head of the Woman's Armenian Committee for England, and Lady Henry will be its secretary, and they intend to give money to the starving. I believe the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, so open hearted and friendly, only want the opportunity to put in the baskets something to buy bread for the Armenian women and children, and I only regret that this is not an audience as large as we have averaged throughout the afternoon. It is suggested that we who have heard this dark-browed brother and this sister of ours should give what we can give freely." A collection was then taken, and little bits of the black bread which is eaten by half-starved Armenian people were passed around among the audience by Mr. Gulesian.

Rev. J. W. Kirk, pastor of the Protestant church, extended greetings from a conference of one hundred and fifty ministers of that church in the state of Maryland. Mr. Robert Ireland, representing the Prohibition party in the state of Maryland, was also presented.

The Convention then adjourned, most of the delegates and visitors accepting the invitation of the Baltimore Woman's College to visit its beautiful buildings. The college was thrown open from four to six o'clock and reception committees of the "girls" were in each building to show the visitors around. Those who availed themselves of the privilege of inspecting the capacious class-rooms and home-like "homes" of the students carried away with them delightful impressions of college life for girls in Baltimore and grateful recollections of courtesies extended.

MONDAY EVENING.

This was "Demonstration Night," and long before half-past seven every seat not protected by a barrier of white ribbon was filled; all the spaces between seats were occupied, every hall and entrance blocked with people and the sidewalks in front of and at the side of Music Hall packed with a solid mass of enthusiastic men and women. A fine orchestra was stationed on the platform and as stirring strains set responsive feet to gentle time-keeping, cheering from the corridors announced the approach of the white-ribbon hosts who in "martial array" were entering the hall. Miss Willard, the Chieftain, and her aide, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, led the ranks, carrying the white silk "Mothers' Star Spangled Banner." Then came the general officers and the soldiers of the "peaceful war," bearing aloft their many colored banners all waving brightly and bravely for our common cause. The leaders and the speakers marched to the platform and the delegates to their seats. The band continued to play while all banners were carried to the platform. The scene was a thrilling one, and to the hopeful spectators seemed an earnest of the day when the white-ribboners shall herald the final victory over the legalized liquor traffic. There were at least thirty-five banners, conspicuous among them the handsome Temple Banner, borne high in the uplifted arms of Mrs. Carse, and the prize banner of Pennsylvania. A forest of national flags, on the platform and in the audience, waved to and fro, while the feet, hands, voices and handkerchiefs of about four thousand people were united in joyful acclamation. With much difficulty the president's gavel at last made itself heard and the sound of cheering was turned into the channel of song, the multitude uniting in "Home, Sweet Home," after which Mrs. S. D. La Fetra led in the Lord's Prayer.

MISS WILLARD:—"We hoped at this point in the meeting—which, as Mrs. Chant admits to me, although I translate it into somewhat familiar western vernacular, not only beats the Dutch, but the British (Laughter)—we hoped to have had the presence of the grandest old Roman of them all, Gen. Neal Dow, in his ninety-second year, but as the General felt at the last moment physically unable to come, I bring his daughter, Cornelia, his home-maker, who carries with her the beloved banner of the Old Pine Tree State."

The Convention greeted Miss Cornelia Dow most heartily, giving her three cheers.

MISS WILLARD (holding up an enormous sunflower tied with white ribbon to the handle of an umbrella): "If any of you don't know what this is, I will tell you it is the sunflower of Kansas, and it is mounted on an 'umberell.' The motto of Kansas is 'Through the dark to the stars.' The sunflower always seeks the sun and they always seek the sun. They have got municipal suffrage out in Kansas and they are going to keep it."

After the singing of "America," by the Convention, Miss Willard, in view of the fact that a large number of people present had preserved a sitting posture during the singing, referred to the custom of the British in always rising when "God Save the Queen," is sung. "We should," she said, "not let ourselves hear that hymn, 'America,' which is in part a prayer, without always rising, and the ideal which we should have before us when we rise is not a queen, who by a law of descent is the ruler of a realm, but we should have the ideal of all the grandest women that have lived and all the grandest men and we shall see those two figures side by side, and when we rise we shall be saluting that invisible dual headship to the nation and we shall be paying our homage to God who made all this possible. We have to-night," she continued, "a program full of variety and interest and charm. I have never in my twenty-two years with this society known our women to have as much to say in their corporate and individual capacity as they have to-night, and it was left for the genial city of Baltimore to bring us up to this pitch of enthusiasm, and as women have been extensively heard from in the few days past, I think it will be pleasant to hear the voice of a man, especially a man so much beloved as is the Rev. Dr. Maltby D. Babcock, of the Presbyterian church."

DR. BABCOCK (in part): A common question on the children's lips is: "Why, what is that for?" I believe the key to knowledge is a question mark. I do not think it was an accident that the man who devised the Westminster confession put for the first question, What is the chief end of man? What is he made for? In fact, all science is nothing but a sorting out of answers.

What am I for, and what are you for? I believe in all my heart that the chief end of man, that the chief end of woman—is what? To eat, drink, be merry, to adorn, to be amused? Yes, by the way, all these things are by the way, but is this the business of life in the world? Not at all. The bottom of life, the meaning of life, the core of life is to reveal God. Now, what is the chief end of you women? Is it not that each may supremely reveal the love of God for the world that needs the supremest revelation in love that human lives can give, the mother love? A man says to me, "The world owes me a living." No, I reply, you owe the world a life. And you women, I believe, are giving your life to the world, and that is what you are for, and you have made your motto, not for self and for culture and for isolation and for amusement, but for God and home and every land. I bring you my heartiest congratulations. God bless every one, and God help the men to keep step with the women, or if they cannot do that, God help them to keep in sight of them, anyway (Applause).

MISS WILLARD: "It will be a long time before we hear a better speech. I have never heard him before, but I shall not forget him—one of the best types of our young clergymen of the oncoming age."

The president then introduced Father Doyle, secretary of the National Catholic Total Abstinence Society, "her good brother" whom she had invited to be present and who had left his many duties in New York to attend our meeting.

FATHER DOYLE: I bring to you the greetings of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, greetings from our sixty-five thousand total abstainers. My mission here to-night is, as the good doctor who spoke before me said, to learn the step from the women. In this great work of total abstinence—there is no use blinking it—in this great work for God and home and country, it is the women that have gone ahead. It is the women who are in the lead, who step the pace, and we men come to learn the step, to get our hearts set on fire and to get filled full of enthusiasm, to have our souls filled with the heroic courage that will enable us to go on with this great work that we have undertaken. I bring you a whole heart full of greetings from our great convention in New York. Last summer there went out to this body of Christian women our warmest fraternal greetings, and we ask you to send back there a word of cheer and a word of courage that will help us along in that great struggle that we are in the midst of. There is a great deal at stake in New York these days. It is New York that sets the pace for the country, and New York, the great metropolitan city of the country, New York is voting whether she should open the saloon on Sunday or not. (Cries of "Shame.") Yes, shame, that this great Christian city should hesitate a moment on this question. Oh, women of this great Convention, send back your warmest words to us in New York, who are fighting this great fight. Let me convey the word of courage to our great champion there, Theodore Roosevelt. (Applause.) He is none other than a second David. He is meeting the Goliath of the saloon power in New York, and as David laid low the Goliath opposed to the army of the living God, so will Theodore Roosevelt. (Great applause.) So I say, give us of your courage in this great fight and help us to achieve the end for which we are all striving.

At this point Mrs. Josephine Nichols, of Indiana, made a very bright and witty collection speech while the baskets went round, saying she came to offer the audience the elixir of life—joy; and there is no joy, she declared, like the joy of giving. She asked for dollars, paper money, and silver half-dollars, and even quarters, but said she "did not think much of Nichols."

Miss Elizabeth Yates was the next speaker. She said she would take as a text the words, "These that turn the world upside down are come hither also," and would treat it under four heads. First, the world was originally right side up; second, the devil turned it over; third, it must be turned back again; fourth, we are the ones to do it. She told the story of a man who had been crowded out of one position after another by women who had taken his place, until he finally found something to do which they would not take from him, viz., painting church steeples. Women, she said, were willing to leave to men the monopoly of church-steeple painting, but reminded them that they must be very grateful for this privilege, for if it were not for the women there would be precious few church steeples to paint. She referred to America as being the "land of the free and the home of the brave"—free men and brave women, was her interpretation, and hoped it would soon be a land of free women and brave men.

Hon. Joshua Levering, Prohibition party candidate for governor of Maryland then spoke: "As I stand here," he said, "and look over this audience and think of the representatives of this imperial organization, their wonderful and versatile talents and power and varied lines of work, I think to myself, and I believe the scattering brethren who are here with me to-night will agree with me, that there are many things that we men do not and perhaps can not know, but there is one thing that I do know, that when any one, either man or woman, stands up before a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, whether it be local or state or national or international, and talks in favor of the abolition of the liquor traffic, he will find beating in the heart of every woman a great sympathy which will vibrate as he talks." The speaker then proceeded to show that the hard times, the suffering and the misery of the great mass of the people to-day was brought about, directly or indirectly, by the liquor traffic.

The audience manifested great enthusiasm for Mr. Levering and the cause he represented, and the band saluted him with the strains of "Maryland, my Maryland," while flags and banners were waved. Miss Willard said, however, that he was not a "wandering son," but one right here at home to be voted for.

Miss Eva Shontz here recited a pathetic selection entitled, "Mary Elizabeth," after which Mrs. Chant came forward and waited in smiling patience until the applause which always greeted her appearance died away and her voice could be heard.

Dear friends, she began, a man who made his first speech, or rather who was going to make it, said to the chairman in an agonized voice, "What am I to say, what am I to say?" "Oh, be brief," replied the chairman. So he got on his feet and he put his hands in his waistcoat pocket and he said, "Dear friends, be brief, be brief," and sat down again. Now I will be very brief to-night and I do not really know quite what there is left for me to say, but there is one thing I want to say and that is, don't you think it would be a very good thing if we could have a meeting like this once a week? You would all grow so fast that there would not be a rag of bigotry or intolerance or laziness left at the end of the year. There is nothing so good for people as to have a hearty laugh and to enjoy a good thing, and if the world had laughed together long before we should never have had the difficulties and the complications that we have had. We have all enjoyed ourselves much to-night I think and yet there is not one of us women who, because we have laughed, have forgotten the wrong and sorrow that there is on our earth. I do not forget the wrongs, and in all this evening's happiness and joy and light, I have been thinking of all the wrongs there are in this world. I have been thinking that our laughter is a consecration with us, and we will, God helping, do away with those wrongs. And I think you will forgive me for saying, that the men who are so grave that they cannot see a joke, and so dignified that they cannot laugh, and the men and women who do not want to laugh are just the last people in the world whom you can kindle into a fierce indignation over the wrongs to their kind.

"Don't you think we look very nice on the platform with all our flags? Don't you think that the most beautiful kind of decoration in this world is a flag? I do. I think that flags somehow or other have more laughter, more pathos, more tears, more struggles and more hope deferred, more victories achieved than any other kind of decoration. (Applause.) One night in the earlier days when we used to go lecturing about the country on behalf of suffrage, we had a large meeting and I thought I had made a straight-from-the-shoulder, knock-you-down, bury-you-dacent kind of a speech, when a young man got up and in a voice that had a threatening sound said; 'Madam, if you get the vote who will darn the socks?' Now, you know that is an awful question. I felt that it was a question of such vital importance that it was right to answer it fully, frankly, fiercely and eloquently at the time, so when the laughter had subsided, and I grieve to say that those hard-hearted people laughed more at that than at anything I had said, I told him that I did fervently and humbly and fondly hope that she who had darned the socks before she had the vote might darn them for many a long year after. And the next time we went to address a meeting in that place we took care, all of us women that were on the platform, to begin our speeches by saying, 'Mr. President, all our socks were darned before we came to this meeting,' (laughter and applause) and so that is our great sheet anchor.

"Womanliness is not going to have any material change except for the better. The freer women are, the greater their opportunities to accomplish the work that is engaged in their thoughts, the more tenderly and beautifully will they be able to fulfill the greatest duty of all, which is the making of the home, which, as we have heard, is the core and heart of the nation, and the better the home is the better the nation will be, but it is no use making such a home if your making is to be undone by everything that is outside of the home. And, therefore, in the name of those peaches which I have peeled, in the name of those socks which I have darned and washed, as occasion required, in the name of all the making and mending, spring cleaning and winter doing, and in the name, also, of all the dear love that it takes to make a man happy for nearly nineteen years, and in the name of all that it takes to bring up four children, sweet-mannered, sweet-souled and gentle and loving, I say in the name of all that, I possess the greatest right in the world, more than any man living, to say how the outside world shall affect my children and my home." (Great applause.)

Miss Willard here led forward Mother Thompson, and holding her by the hand, said the dear old lady had requested her to state that in her eighty years she has darned as many socks as any woman of her age between the oceans, and she has knit as many more, and is knitting still.

Miss Helen Potter then gave a most interesting impersonation of Susan B. Anthony in a court of justice (!), answering to the charge of illegal voting.

The Hon. Wm. Daniel was presented to the Convention, also Rev. Henry M. Branch, president of the Maryland State Temperance Alliance.

Miss Willard then announced the exhibition of a series of stereopticon views. The lights were turned out and a ripple of amusement and pleasure disturbed the silence as the face of the chieftain herself looked from the canvas. Miss Willard made a droll gesture of dismay and bending low over the speaker's desk, she remarked with characteristic aptness, "I can say with my gavel on my heart, I did not know that gray old lady was out!" It is needless to say that the audience extended to said "gray old lady," a most hearty welcome. Other pictures were Rest Cottage, Lady Henry Somerset, Eastnor Castle, the Priory at Reigate, the Crusade Church, Mother Thompson, The Temple, Mrs. Carse Willard Fountain, a clock with hands pointing to the noon hour, and lastly a globe belted with broad white ribbon. When the stately Temple appeared upon the canvas Miss Willard told of the part taken by the children the day the corner-stone was laid, quoting the lines:

"Little eyes have watched you grow,
You are built for us, you know,
Rise, Temple, Rise!"

and as she finished speaking a hidden chorus softly sang the beautiful dedicatory song of the children.

The whole stereopticon exercise was a unique and striking bit of W. C. T. U. history "in a nutshell," or better,—on a canvas.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The election of officers was the chief business of this session. After the devotional exercises (with which, it goes without saying, every session of the Convention opened), the reading of the minutes and the adoption of the report of the executive committee, the final report of the committee on credentials was presented by its chairman, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson:

|---|---|
| General Officers | 6 |
| President's Private Secretary | 1 |
| General Sec'y Young Woman's Branch | 1 |
| Vice-Presidents | 30 |
| Superintendents | 19 |
| Organizers | 9 |
| Evangelists | 5 |
| Editors and Publishers of Official Organs | 4 |
| President Temperance Hospital | 1 |
| State Officers | 53 |
| Chairman of Standing Committees | 3 |
| Delegates | 284 |
| Total | 425 |

A brief devotional service was then conducted by Miss Greenwood, the venerable Mother Thompson praying God's blessing upon the Convention, and His guidance in the choice of officers. Miss Willard stated that the old way was for the president, if a candidate, to retire during the election, but parliamentarians had inaugurated a better way at Cleveland and had announced that it is in order for the president to preside during the election, and if there was no objection she would do so.

The informal ballot for president was then taken and the result announced as follows: Total number of votes cast, 375; Mrs. Forbes, 1; Mrs. Buell, 1; Mrs. Graham, 1; Mrs. Hoffman, 1; Mrs. Rounds, 9; Miss Willard, 361.

Moved by Mrs. Benjamin that the recording secretary be instructed to cast a formal ballot for Frances E. Willard as President.

Mrs. Stevens put the vote which carried and amid cheering and waving of handkerchiefs, Frances E. Willard was for the seventeenth time elected president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The Convention then sang with enthusiasm, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

MISS WILLARD: While you were singing there came through my mind an old strain of home song. I do not think I have it right, but this is in it, "We have been long together, through pleasant and through cloudy weather," and then I thought, well, now that next line, I do not know as I dare say that, still, they have acted like it, and I guess I will say it, "'Tis hard to part when friends are dear." You have said that in your ballots, you have been most generous and tender toward me. I think you are all saints considerate. I should not dare to trust myself to tell you how much I feel it. For many years you said that I ought to have a year off, because of the hard work from the beginning, and finally I took that year, and then it lengthened out until in the comings and the goings it has been, I believe, about two. I want you, beloved, to remember that the first year was your gift, the second was all grace and debt. But remember that beautiful woman and great leader, Lady Henry Somerset, who has been with us, I think, sixteen months of the time, and I think that sixteen months of Lady Henry in this country has meant a great deal for total abstinence and for every good cause. I think it has been in a sense a matter of reciprocity. You know that I thought we should possibly start on the world trip this autumn, going to India with the Petition, but I heard since I came to Baltimore that Lady Henry, owing to the marriage of her son and his desire not to be, perhaps, too long and too far away from a certain individual that has grown very dear to him (for I am glad to say that it is an old-fashioned out-and-out love match), and she would not go without him, certainly not until he has a home of his own, that is adjourned indefinitely, and I shall be able to stay in my own dear country. (Vociferous applause.)

I feel much better in health than I did at Cleveland, I think certainly forty per cent, and in short, if it is our Heavenly Father's will to continue my present measure of good promise in the hygienic sense I mean to go South. You know Horace Greeley said "Go West, young man." I hear a voice saying to me, "Go South, old woman." (Laughter.) The South has always been dear to me and good to me and I know that they have great difficulties to contend with, some of the work very much needs looking after and I mean to do what little I can and I know the organizing department will back me up to the utmost, that is so much by sending out organizers through the South. I mean to get around to California before I get done on this trip. Now, then, I want to give you the motto which by God's grace I shall take this year and shall only keep in sight of it I suppose, but still keep an eye on it, as the belief of my soul and the work of heart and hand and brain and voice: "Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man."

A motion that a cablegram be sent to Lady Henry Somerset, advising her of Miss Willard's re-election was carried.

MISS WILLARD: I am certainly grateful that you have done that graceful act and I should like it immensely if in the cablegram can go the word "gratitude."

Informal ballot for corresponding secretary: Total, 375; Mrs. Burt, 1; Mrs. Rounds, 2; Mrs. Hoffman, 2; Mrs. Stevens, 2; Mrs. Boole, 20; Mrs. Buell, 25; Mrs. Stevenson, 323. The secretary was directed to cast the formal vote of the Convention for Mrs. Stevenson for corresponding secretary. This being done Mrs. Stevenson was declared elected.

MRS. STEVENSON: I just want to thank you out of a full heart for all the sympathy, all the helpfulness, the kind words and the prayers by which you have made my work this year possible. By God's grace, since you have given me this honor and this privilege I will serve you better than last year, and I know that I shall have the same help, steadfast unto the end, because I have God and the white-ribboners.

Informal ballot for recording secretary: Total, 392; scattering votes of one each, 11; Mrs. Stevens, 2; Mrs. Boole, 3; Mrs. Halvey, 8; Mrs. Grout, 7; Mrs. Rounds, 7; Miss Hay, 10; Mrs. Beauchamp, 12; Mrs. Buell, 14; Mrs. Hoffman, 318. The treasurer was instructed to cast the vote of the Convention for Mrs. Hoffman, which was done, and Mrs. Hoffman declared recording secretary.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I am so glad you have elected me recording secretary I do not know what to say! It is such a delight to have so much work to do. Now, dear sisters, you have never had a chance to know what I could do and I will wait until we get through with this Convention and the Minutes are out and I have proved what I can do before I boast any more.

While the vote for treasurer was being counted it was moved by Mrs. Benjamin that the vice-president-at-large and the assistant recording secretary be nominated. It was carried and the President said:

I have gone through with this Convention about fifty times better than I expected and have felt a real sense of solace and of somebody building over against my feeble efforts to try to make it go as smoothly as possible and to relieve me of many cares, and that is about the manner of life and the record of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of the Maine W. C. T. U., and under the by-law which gives me the power to appoint her I nominate her as vice-president at large.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin the appointment of Mrs. Stevens was confirmed by a rising vote.

MRS. STEVENS: I am not given much to speaking unless it is really necessary, and I am sure it is not necessary at this time, but I do thank Miss Willard for her kind words. I only wish that I were more worthy of them, that I could help her more. I thank you, dear comrades, for your indorsement of her nomination, and let me say that to the utmost of my ability I will endeavor to serve you and to serve you all faithfully and carefully and lovingly.

Mrs. Hoffman then nominated Mrs. Frances Beauchamp, of Kentucky, as assistant recording secretary, which nomination was confirmed and Mrs. Beauchamp briefly thanked the Convention.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin, the superintendents, organizers and evangelists nominated by the executive committee, were elected by a rising vote.

The vote for treasurer was then announced as follows: Total votes cast, 383; Mrs. Ellis, 1; Mrs. Tenney, 1; Miss Hay, 2; Miss Pugh, 10; Mrs. Rounds, 11; Mrs. Barker, 358. The corresponding secretary having been so instructed cast the vote of the Convention for Mrs. Barker who was declared duly elected treasurer for the ensuing year.

MRS. BARKER: My dear sisters, when I was elected in Chicago two years ago I told you that I abominated taking care of other people's money, but I am so much in love with the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and its work, and so enjoy counting its money and making out checks and all that sort of thing that the more money you send me this year the better suited I shall be.

Miss Lizzie Anthony, niece of Susan B. Anthony, was introduced and conveyed the greetings of the American Woman Suffrage Association.

It was moved by Mrs. Hoffman that at the close of the evening session the following evening an opportunity be given the members to meet the president. This was amended by adding the words, "and the general officers," and carried.

Rev. Solomon German, Rev. Mr. Howell and Rev. Mr. Higgins were presented; also Mr. J. W. Cummings, of the National Temperance Society, and Mrs. Margaret Bottome, president of the King's Sons and Daughters, and the venerable Mr. William Woodward, age ninety-four, uncle of Mr. Summerfield Baldwin, who was one of the two men who first started a temperance society in Maryland. He spoke a few words to the Convention, relating the when and the how of that early organization and when he finished Miss Willard decorated him with the little white badge, saying, "It whitens even the white ribbon to be on the breast of a man in his ninety-fourth year whose whole life has been given to God and humanity."

Mr. William Daniels spoke encouraging words, concluding by saying: "You ladies got me into trouble in 1884, when I was nominated for vice-president of the United States by Prohibitionists, but I shall ever stand by the women of the W. C. T. U. When you eliminate woman suffrage from the Prohibition platform you eliminate me, if I can find another party which upholds woman's right to vote." (Applause.)

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The organization and work of a model union having been made the special order for the first hour of Tuesday afternoon, that part of the program was taken up after the opening ceremonies. It was conducted by Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of New York, and was one of the brightest as well as one of the most helpful features of the Convention. Mrs. Bullock preceded the novel exercise by outlining the preliminaries essential to organization, following which there filed to the platform a number of white-ribbon leaders, representing a band of women who had expressed the desire to be organized into a local W. C. T. U. We regret we cannot give space to the unique and amusing features of this bit of realism. It must suffice to say that out of their own varied experiences in the work of organization, these women kept Mrs. Bullock on the alert answering objections, meeting difficulties and straightening out tangles. The delegates fully appreciated the situation, and aside from the enjoyment of the hour learned not a little of the ways and means employed to weld firmly in a W. C. T. Union, a group of earnest women and would-be white-ribboners, uninformed in white ribbon ways.

It was moved and carried by the Convention that the constitution read as a model be published in the columns of The Union Signal.

It was requested that those who were present at the Convention in Baltimore seventeen years ago stand and be counted. Fifteen rose, among them Miss Pugh, Mrs. Chase, Mrs. Buell, Mrs. Burt, Mrs. La Fetra, Mrs. Stevens, Miss Willard and Mrs. Rounds. Then the daughters of the delegates of 1878 were asked to rise, and about a dozen responded.

At Miss Willard's suggestion, a cablegram was ordered sent to Mrs. Mary B. Willard, her brother's widow, for many years editor of The Union Signal, and whose daughter Katherine had been singing for the Convention—"just a word to let her know what has been happening here."

A motion by Mrs. Bailey that a telegram be sent to Neal Dow was carried, also one by Mrs. Barker that a letter be sent to Mrs. Walker, president of Nebraska W. C. T. U., who was detained at home by illness, consequent upon her untiring labors in the white-ribbon cause. A motion by Miss Gordon that a letter be sent by the corresponding secretary to Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, president of South Carolina, was carried, as was also a motion by Mrs. Ferguson that letters be sent to Mrs. Fessenden and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore of Massachusetts. A pleasant incident here was the presentation of a bouquet of roses to Mother Thompson by Mrs. Barton from ladies of the Christian Union, for which she thanked them in fitting words.

Dr. A. B. Leonard was introduced, also Mrs. D. Stuckenburg, formerly of Berlin, Germany, now of Cambridge, Mass., who had been placed by Mrs. Grubb at the head of the German department.

The report of the committee on resolutions was then read by Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, chairman.

The resolutions as adopted by the Convention will be found at the close of Convention report. The resolution which drew forth the most animated discussion was that in reference to the endorsement of parties. The committee had submitted the following:

Resolved, That we reiterate the pledge of our influence and our prayers to the party which represents our cardinal principles of equal suffrage and prohibition in its platform, and we would give the same support to any other party which may make the like declaration.

Mrs. Boole, believing that the Convention should strike a direct and absolute blow at non-Prohibition parties, offered the substitute which was finally adopted.

But half of the list of resolutions had been disposed of when the hour for adjournment arrived and further consideration of the report was deferred by unanimous vote until Wednesday morning.

TUESDAY EVENING.

This was Benefit Night, in honor of those states which had increased their membership five hundred and over the last year. Music Hall, as usual at the evening sessions, was "packed," floor and galleries, while choir and speakers and guests well nigh filled the spacious platform. Miss Willard explained that they had decided not to charge any admission fee but to make everything free because Baltimore had made everything so free to the Convention. There were seven states among whom the proceeds were to be divided. Pennsylvania, the state that showed the greatest gain, about two thousand, had waived its right to a share in the benefit, because, though the President did not say so, it had had Miss Willard at its state convention. New York came next with a gain of nearly two thousand. The other states were Louisiana, Maine, Iowa, Connecticut, Oregon and Southern California.

After singing by the Convention, Scripture reading by Mrs. Buell and prayer by Mrs. Hewitt, the Deems Male Quartet sang "Rock of Ages" and "Let the Lower Lights be Burning." Miss Helen Potter recited the poem, "Drifting," and as an encore "Abou Ben Adhem," after which Miss Willard introduced Pennsylvania's president, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, who set the keynote for the speeches of the evening by presenting in humorous vein the claims of the Keystone state to leadership. "An impression has gone abroad," she said, "that Pennsylvania is very much puffed up. That is erroneous. We are in a very even frame of mind. We are here in our own natural proportion, with a full delegation of thirty-six women, as good looking as any in this body." They had kept Hammer-ing away, she said, and as a result had won the prize. "And behold the prize!" indicating Miss Willard; "we wish you would offer more prizes; we intend to take all that are offered." The speaker spoke of their state convention at Harrisburg, alluding jocosely to her ride in the governor's carriage.

Mrs. Scott, president of California, was the next speaker, "our Major-General Scott," Miss Willard called her. Mrs. Scott invited the Convention to California in 1896. "A letter from the governor received to-day," she stated, "says that every one of you will be welcome, and no doubt he will gide you a ride in his carriage. California has more sunshine and more climate to the square inch than any other state in the Union, and, though Pennsylvania has gotten ahead of us this year, there is the c coming year in which to work."

The male quartet here sang again, and then Mrs. Stevens, president of Maine, was introduced.

It was not strange, she said, Maine should be one of the winning states, for each of the twenty-one years of the existence of the white-ribbon organization it had shown a gain. The past year, however, was the greatest of all, 886 new members having been added. She would not have said this but for the boasting of Mrs. Hammer, but if Maine had been as large in population as Pennsylvania, her increase would have been at least 7,000 members. Maine was a great state in every way, though only one-eighth as large as Pennsylvania and New York. She was proud of her great names, and before the next year was over her hearers would learn more of Maine's great men. But the greatest name of all, she said, was that of General Neal Dow, the grandest old Roman of them all. Another great thing for Maine to be proud of was that in the name of justice and truth and right Maine had adopted Prohibition. And whatever may be said of it the grand banner of Prohibition still waves over Maine, the state of protected homes.

Miss Eva Shontz recited a medley of popular poems. She received an enthusiastic encore and gave a touching selection by Ben King, the Michigan bard.

The collection was then taken up, Miss Willard explaining that it was the first collection for the benefit of the states. She urged the people to give liberally, stating that the collection for the Armenians, taken from an audience one-fourth the size of this one had amounted to over seven hundred dollars. The necromancy of white-ribboners, she said, instead of turning everything into gold, was able to turn gold into everything good.

A telegram from Neal Dow was read; "Thanks for your kindly greeting. May God have you in His care and keeping."

The next speaker was Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, of Iowa. She said it was hard for the Hawkeye state to take up the burden of song after the others. Its increase had been gained under unfavorable conditions. In the per cent of its new members Iowa has beaten both Pennsylvania and New York, its increase being twenty-six per cent. Many of the unions which seceded some years ago had come back to the fold. Iowa believes that her boys and girls are worth more than her corn and cattle, and white-ribboners of that state mean to stand by the men who stand by their cause. "Little Iowa stands sixth in the list of contributors to the Temple," said Mrs. Dunham, with justifiable pride. "We do not favor re-submission," she concluded, "but if the question of prohibition is submitted, we shall work to carry the state."

Mrs. Baldwin sang with much expression, "Some Glad Day," the male quartet joining in the inspiring chorus:

"It's coming! It's coming!
The morn for which we pray,
We'll take the world for Christ's own kingdom,
Some glad day."

An interesting episode here was the presentation of a gavel to Mrs. Dunham by Miss Willard (who designated this leader as the Marshal Ney of our movement), on behalf of the women of Iowa, said gavel being made from a beam of oak from the house in Churchill, N. Y., where Miss Willard was born. With beautiful, fitting words, as is her wont, Miss Willard presented this token of esteem from a loyal constituency, and Mrs. Dunham responded with feeling, saying: "If I could measure up to the confidence they have in me, not Pennsylvania, not even the great Empire state would lead the hosts."

The president then introduced the "only sergeant-at-arms at the head of a temperance army"—Mrs. C. B. Forbes of Connecticut. "So humble and shrinking as we are," said Mrs. Forbes, "what can poor little Connecticut say?" The women of the nutmeg state, she declared, are always found in the land of steady habits. Connecticut has only 167 towns, but it has 130 local unions. They would finish organizing there soon and then were going into Pennsylvania and New York to help them organize their states. As for great men—Connecticut has had the whole Beecher tribe! Speaking of the fact previously referred to that Iowa's population was largely composed of New Englanders, Mrs. Forbes said, "That's what's the matter with Iowa; that's what makes her so energetic and strong—our New England people have gone to help her."

Mrs. Narcissa White-Kinney, of Oregon, next spoke. She said she would like to take the other six presidents to Oregon, and show them its boundless acres. If Oregon could be lifted up and laid over New England, it would extinguish those states and extend twenty thousand square miles into New York. "That," she said, "is the extent of pasture over which we graze to get five hundred new members." She invited the surplus population to come along, men and women, if they were sober, and Oregon would give them all a farm. There were many more men than women in Oregon, she said, and hoped the girls would take the hint. They had only one saloon for every four hundred and fifty inhabitants and there was one W. C. T. U. woman for every two hundred and fifty. "Beat that record if you can!"

Mrs. Goodale, the president of Louisiana, one of the winning states, having been previously called home by telegram, the committee was instructed to send her word of congratulation and recognition.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, of New York, was the last of the state presidents to speak. She represented, she said, 20,000 women who are fighting the greatest battle of the age. They had forty-five delegates in the Convention. New York had added 1,700 new members the last year, and while much friendly rivalry had been expressed here this evening the truth remained that each state rejoiced with the other in every added name. "We have not only increased our membership," she said, "we have stood loyally by to aid Mrs. Mary H. Hunt; we have raised the age of consent from sixteen to eighteen years; our department of purity in art and literature introduced in the legislature a bill which would have prohibited the exhibiting of women in tights and in the nude. It was defeated, but we will try again this winter. We have shown to the world that prohibition prohibits in New York. Honor to Theodore Roosevelt, to whom honor is due! (Applause.)

A telegram was read from Rev. Dr. Anna Shaw: "I think and long to be with you daily."

The Deems Quartette then sang "Robin Adair," after which Mrs. Chant gave a brief good-night speech. "She realized," she said, "that England wasn't a speck on the map compared with this great country. "I am to bid you good-night," she concluded, "and I do it with the hope that we may all gather some day at the summit where it will always be good-morning."

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Dr. Leonard.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The committee on telegrams reported as follows:

To Neal Dow, Portland, Me.:—"W. C. T. U. sends love, honor and regret for your absence. Read Psalms 126:3-6."

Cablegram to Lady Henry Somerset:—"Gratitude, Willard re-elected. Psalms 126:3. Signed, National."

To Mary Bannister Willard, Berlin, Germany:—"Loving remembrance, Willard re-elected. Daughter wins all hearts."

To Samuel Dickey:—"National W. C. T. U. sends loyal greeting, and regrets your absence. We renew our faithful allegiance to the Prohibition party."

To Susan B. Anthony:—"National W. C. T. U. sends loving greeting. Read I. Thess. 1:2, 3."

Received from Meriden, Conn. To the National W. C. T. U.:—"Beloved Comrades, The Meriden, Conn., W. C. T. U. in weekly meeting assembled send greetings. Please read our motto, Psalm 108:13."

The Convention here listened to the report of the superintendent of penal work.

MRS. JANE M. KINNEY: Let me in brief say the work is being done as never before. Prisons, reformatories and jails are being visited. While some officials refuse to open to the saintly women, others, noble and true, are giving them every opportunity to reach those in bonds. Among these I must mention especially Warden Wolf, of the Minnesota prison, at Stillwater, who has not only let the women of the W. C. T. U. into the prison for services, but has himself gone into their state convention and given them a talk on prison life. In my own state a police matron law passed the senate and I now believe had I done as much work in the House, it would be a law. However, I shall leave nothing undone another term. The women of the W. C. T. U. are to-day doing more to secure separate reformatory prisons for women and reformatories for children than any other body, judging from the reports of bills presented by them before the different state legislatures. The work of the women this year has tended to better legislation, to the establishing of better and more libraries and furnishing much reading matter. Some report for prohibition territory, no inmates in the jail.

I am again under great obligations as in the past to editors of leading magazines and journals for large quantities of literature sent by express and freight to me, and I, in turn, have sent them to the states needing them most. A leaflet prepared by the chaplain of Jackson, Michigan, state prison especially for convicts coming into prison will prove helpful. It can be obtained of the W. T. P. A. The reading prepared by the superintendent will, I trust, prove helpful. The blank I have prepared is intended with the reading to serve as a plan of work.

Dr. James Carey Thomas, a prominent physician of Baltimore, was introduced, also Mr. Oliver Hempstead of the Sabbath Association of Maryland. The president read letter of greeting from Oklahoma and Mrs. Stevenson read greeting from Archbishop Ireland, also from the Indian W. C. T. U.

The report of the committee on resolutions being the special order for that hour, was now considered. This report as amended and adopted is published on another page.

The resolution concerning Catholic and Hebrew evoked considerable discussion, many delegates objecting to referring so pointedly to these two denominations, desiring to make it broad enough to include fraternal delegates from other organizations of kindred spirit. Miss Willard spoke in defense of the resolution as offered, saying that Catholics and Hebrews were most deeply interested in the work of temperance, that priests and rabbis had extended to her the hand of friendly fellowship and their prayers were going forth for the success of the work. Numerous delegates indorsed Miss Willard's words, stating that Catholics and Hebrews had greatly aided W. C. T. U. workers. The adoption of the resolution was almost unanimous.

A motion that a telegram from the Convention be sent to the Unitarian conference in Washington, expressing sympathy with their motion for total abstinence, was carried.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin the entire resolution of thanks was deferred until the evening and the committee given power to add thereto.

Following this came the presentation of the various local committees whose efforts had made the Convention such a pleasure and such a success. Miss Willard made the introductions in her own happy fashion, having just the right word for each.

On motion of Mrs. Bailey the Convention gave the Chautauqua salute for the white ribbon rank and file of the state of Maryland, who, as Miss Pugh remarked, had "stayed at home and killed the chickens." "Don't forget the little boy who pumped the organ," said one, whereupon Miss Willard exclaimed, "I submit if it didn't take the blessed warm heart of a white-ribboner to think of that!" The boy was brought forward and presented amid laughter and waving of handkerchiefs. A "wave" for the young men who took up the collections, was proposed by Mrs. Barker, and then some one suggested a "wave" for the press.

MISS WILLARD: "I want the representatives of the Baltimore press, who have done us up in far more reputable style than we are used to, and who in some instances have even adorned us a little—we want them to stand up and be waved to."

The reporters, with characteristic modesty, keeping their seats, the Convention vigorously waved handkerchiefs for them any way.

A motion that the report of the resolutions committee be adopted as a whole was objected to by Mrs. Rounds on the ground that the report of the Temple had not been submitted. She moved that the resolution referring to the Temple be withdrawn from the report. This was defeated and the resolutions adopted by an almost unanimous vote.

The Temple report was then called for and Mrs. Carse, president of the Temple Trustees, who had been waiting for two days to present it, came forward amid much applause and read as follows:

THE TEMPLE.

It is in a spirit of true thanksgiving that I present the report of the Temple to you to-day. In spite of the fact that the past year has been financially one of the most severe that has occurred in half a century, wheat and other products touching the lowest points ever known, gold flowing out to Europe with alarming rapidity, men's hearts failing them from fear and financial ruin staring many in the face, the receipts for the Temple have been five thousand dollars in advance of the highest point ever reached in any one year since the inception of the project, and thirteen thousand ahead of last year. From October 1, 1894, to October 1, 1895, we have received $30,612.52. The Temple Trustees the first of the year decided that we ought to try and raise $300,000 during 1895, in order to get hold of the stock not yet in our possession. I felt in order to secure this sum it would be necessary to get conditional subscriptions, as business men would be more likely to give if they knew the fund to which they subscribed would insure the W. C. T. U. the ownership of the entire capital stock. In order to start the fund properly it was necessary to find some one to lead off with a large conditional subscription. It occurred to me that Mr. Marshall Field would be just the one to do this. Accordingly I asked Lady Somerset to write Mr. Field requesting him to give us a conditional subscription of $50,000. You have all read the letter she wrote him, and his reply, which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL March 28. I called on Mr. Field February 8, and secured a subscription of $25,000. He signed the following formula in my subscription book, to which also all other donors to the fund have subscribed:

"We, the undersigned, hereby subscribe and agree to pay the amounts set opposite our names to G. B. Shaw, president of the American Trust & Savings Bank, as treasurer of the Board of Temple Trustees, on condition that the sum of ($300,000) Three Hundred Thousand Dollars is raised by January 1st, 1896, Temple Stock or Temple Trust Bonds at par value to be considered as cash. All receipts from whatever source received by the Temple Trustees during the year 1895, to be counted as part of the above sum."

Up to date we have received:

|---|---|
| Conditional subscriptions | $ 74,500.00 |
| In cash, stock and bonds | 30,612.52 |
| Total | $105,112.52 |

The balance of the $300,000, I hope to raise within the specified time. I have been so circumstanced that I could not do much until this summer about securing subscriptions, then I found that most of the people I desired to see were away from home. The next two months will be the best time of all the year to see persons of wealth, and I intend to devote myself to this object untiringly, and when the $300,000 is secured I will start out for another sum equally as large, and so on until our House Beautiful has not one dollar of indebtedness resting upon it. There is plenty of the Lord's money stored away in the strong boxes of Christian temperance people to pay all the debt on the Temple twice over; the only trouble is how to uncover it. I must know about it before I can go after it. I would be glad to have our white-ribboners write and inform me in regard to people of wealth who are interested in our cause and would be likely to give.

The new device, the Temple Wheel, on which I applied for a patent in Washington last March, has proved in these hard times quite a helper. The beauty of the plan is that the persons using the wheels, no matter how poor they are, are not required to give anything themselves unless they so desire. The intention is to catch the dimes of outsiders entirely. Each person who places a dime in the wheel is presented with a picture of the building, thirteen of which, with a history of the Temple on the back, accompany each wheel. This interests strangers in our work who have known but little about it before; and those who get the wheels filled receive a nice premium for their trouble. Mr. J. Hale Ramsay, of Montreal, Canada, was so pleased with the plan that he wrote and offered to give a prize of $50 to the person who filled the most wheels by January 1, 1896. Another person living in Chicago, who does not wish his name given, but who is also much interested in the enterprise, said he would pay $100 to the person who filled the most wheels by the first of January. The Temple trustees give a third prize of $25 to the person who fills the third most wheels by January 1. We have received from wheels in the seven months since the inception of the plan, $12,314.95. Thirty-five thousand wheels are still out in the hands of white-ribboners from Maine to California. If we could get them filled in two weeks after they are sent out, as we have requested those we have sent them to to do, we ought to receive $100,000 in a year from this source, but the tardiness of returning greatly militates against the success of the plan. Illinois is the banner state in filling wheels, but Massachusetts leads in having given the largest amount from all sources. The six states that have given the largest amount from all sources are as follows:

|---|---|
| Massachusetts | $3,430.41 |
| New York | 3,412.51 |
| Illinois | 3,397.08 |
| Pennsylvania | 2,520.49 |
| Ohio | 2,500.00 |
| Iowa | 2,154.94 |

The following persons have donated in stock and bonds the amounts below:

In closing this report it is needless to say, that although the stress of the times financially has been unprecedentedly severe, I have neither lost hope nor heart. My faith is still unwavering that He who has been leading us through the wilderness will bring us forth into the promised land triumphantly, and the House Beautiful free from debt will be the heritage of the W. C. T. U. for all time.

Mrs. Carse then introduced Miss Sara Johnson, financial secretary, who gave a detailed financial report.

MRS. DEMOREST: "I think the Temple management is entitled to a little explanation that does not appear in the report. It is well known that Mrs. Carse gives her entire time to the Temple work. It is not known that she receives no compensation whatever for it, only just her traveling expenses, and when she is not entertained in the town to which she goes, the hotel expenses, nothing more. In addition to that, it is exceedingly probable that for the next two years there will be no charge for the traveling expenses to go to the Temple. It is provided for, no matter by whom or how, but it will be for a great proportion of the time. I move the adoption of the report." The motion was carried.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Following the usual opening exercises, a motion was made and carried, that the appointing of the committee with regard to formulating plans for political action be placed in the hands of the executive committee.

Telegrams were reported as follows:

To Mrs. Susan Fessenden, Boston:—"Loving greeting from the National W. C. T. U. Your presence greatly missed. II. Cor. 1:2, 3.

To Mary A. Livermore:—"Loving greetings from the National W. C. T. U. Convention. Rev. 2:19."

From Susan B. Anthony:—"Extend to the Convention our heartfelt good wishes. Am in convention at Ashtabula. So we all work on."

To Sallie Chapin, Charleston:—"National W. C. T. U. sends loving greeting. Heb. 6:10."

Mrs. Eva Ratcliffe, President Indian Territory:—"Love and greetings from Indian Territory. Read Prov. 31:29."

Reply: "Thanks and cordial greeting. Psalm 108:13."

To the Unitarian Conference, Care Henry A. Willard:—"Cordial greetings from National W. C. T. U. and hearty appreciation of your declaration for total abstinence."

Dr. Wilbur Crafts, representing the National Bureau of Reforms, was introduced, and received enthusiastic greeting. "Not only in the battles for prohibition and equal suffrage," he said, "but also in those for purity and the Sabbath, the white ribbon leads like the white plume of Navarre. (Applause.) I do not forget that your program of reforms includes not four but forty. Indeed, the W. C. T. U. with its forty departments of applied Christianity is the prototype of the future church—as the church shall be when it understands its mission is not only or chiefly to save souls but to save society. The W. C. T. U. in this Convention, is also the type of the future Congress. I have said elsewhere that no governor or president of the United States dares to put as much statesmanship in his annual address as does your president." Mr. Crafts spoke of the work and plans of the National Bureau of Reforms, saying that he rejoiced most of all that the W. C. T. U. recognizes all particular reforms as but parts of one reform, the Christianizing of society, which means the coming of Christ's kingdom.

The reports of organizers which followed are deferred until the next number of THE UNION SIGNAL, because we find that to give them here would necessitate greater condensation than we are willing should be given these interesting records.

A pleasing occurrence here was the presentation of a bouquet of roses to Mrs. Haslup, president of Maryland, by Miss

THE Consolidated Flavoring Powders

Are constantly growing in favor, especially with temperance workers. Being entirely free from contact with alcohol, the delicate fruit flavors are preserved, and are superior to any other on the market. A large number of applications for agencies are being received, and some states are pretty well covered by those who represent this firm. These agents report very successful work, and every mail brought to the office brings praise from numbers of people who have tried both using and selling them.

Temperance workers are convinced that they are aiding the temperance reform by introducing them into the homes of the country, while those who do not agree with them in their objection to anything containing alcohol, prefer them for their intrinsic merit. The rural districts, as well as the villages and towns, are just as good a field in which to dispose of them as are the cities, and when any one secures an agency who has a horse and can drive among the farming people, the sales are surprising.

Quoting from letters received from agents such expressions as follow may be selected: "Your flavoring powders are taking immensely." "I have taken orders for 74 1 ounce and 92 ½ ounce jars in 5 days." "I sold and took orders for 40 jars in one day and 61 the next day." "Your extracts are superior to anything I have ever seen." "I never traveled with anything that sells as readily as these do." "I did splendidly yesterday—sold at every house; so I send another order." "All my extracts have given perfect satisfaction, and are delighting my patrons." "In about four days I have sold out my first order, and send for more. I find no trouble in selling them." Such quotations might be multiplied.

Mr. W. H. Morse, Consulting Chemist, of Westfield, N. J., says: "I have examined samples of the CONSOLIDATED FLAVORING POWDERS purchased of the agent, without her knowledge or suggestion, and am greatly pleased with them as regards purity, strength, economy, concentration and delicacy. Unlike any other flavors, non-alcoholic, free from deleterious and make-weight ingredients. I not only recommend them, but my wife is using them exclusively." Mr. William Lighton, expert microscopist, of Omaha, Neb., says: "The CONSOLIDATED FLAVORING POWDERS are remarkably pure and free from anything that is objectionable."

MAMMA—"Bessie, how many sisters has your new playmate?" Bessie—"He has one, mamma. He tried to fool me by saying that he had two half-sisters, but I guess that he didn't know that I studied fractions."

"Garland" Stoves and Ranges are no higher in price than the worthless imitations. Ask to see them.

A BOY of five years was "playing railroad" with his sister of two and a half. Drawing her upon a footstool, he imagined himself both an engine and a conductor. After imitating the puffing noise of the steam, he stopped and called out, "New York," and, in a moment after, "Paterson," and then "Philadelphia." His knowledge of towns was now exhausted; and at the next place he cried, "Heaven." His little sister said eagerly, "Top; I des I'll det out here."

A MAN with a troublesome memory says that whenever he is down in the village and feels as if his wife had told him to get something, he buys a yeast cake; and nine times out of ten he hits the mark.

"MAMMA," said Jack, "may I go out and play?" "No; you must sit still where you are." Pause. "Ma, can't I go down in the kitchen?" "You may not. I want you to sit perfectly quiet." Another pause. "Mamma, mayn't I sit on the floor and play marbles?" "Now, my dear boy, I have told you twice that I want you to sit just where you are and be quiet, and I mean exactly what I say." Third pause. "Ma—may I—grow?"

"GENII means spirits," explained a teacher. "Now, James, you may give me a sentence in which you use genii."

"A man went down the street and bought several bottles of genii," answered James, promptly.

ON a special occasion, in a very temperate family, some cider was put on the table. Four-year-old Eva, becoming alarmed, called out to her brother—"Willie, don't touch it! It's beer; it will make you walk crooked, and you'll talk loud and wake up the baby." The same child calls the pedal of the organ "song shoes."

A SWEDISH bride always distributes bread to the children who line her pathway on her road to church. It is a Swedish belief that each bite taken by a child prevents a future misfortune from overtaking the happy bride. Something like distributing wedding cake in America—isn't it?—only different.

Willard in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of that state.

Mrs. Stevenson gave the required year's notice of a new department—that of evangelistic training schools; also of a World's missionary department; and the following friends were introduced: Hon. S. B. Chase, of the Supreme Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars; Rev. Charles E. Guthrie, of Columbia avenue M. E. church; Rev. Dr. J. A. Price, of Jefferson street M. E. church; and Mr. Jonathan Taylor, of the State Temperance Alliance.

Mrs. Unruh gave notice that next year she should ask that a department of work among Indians be added to the list of National departments.

At this point Mrs. Graham, of the decoration committee, stepped forward and presented Miss Willard with three large palm leaves (which, crossed and tied with white ribbon had, until now, formed part of the decorations in front of the platform), saying they were "palms of victory."

MISS WILLARD: "That is the kind of palm we believe in and the only one we should receive, because victory is in the air, and so I consider it a present to the Convention. We have been presented with palms of victory, in anticipation of those crowns of glory which by the grace of God we hope some day to receive in the upper and better kingdom."

Some one here started the song, "Palms of Victory," and the familiar strain soon swelled to a triumphant chorus which lifted all hearts.

On motion of Mrs. Stevens a rising vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Jennings Demorest for the banners presented to the Convention.

On motion of Mrs. Carse all members of the W. C. T. U. were affectionately requested and earnestly urged to wear the white ribbon on all occasions. "And," aptly remarked Miss Willard, "at times that are not 'occasions.'"

The Convention chorus presented the following:

We desire to thank the Convention for the privilege we have had of participating in the Convention. We feel that it has been an inspiring influence which we will never forget; it has elevated our idea of true womanhood and we feel that the members of the Convention have beautifully illustrated the principles set forth by the name of the organization.

MISS WILLARD: "No singers ever had the sense to do that before. That is an entirely new wrinkle. It is so gracious to have the responses back and forth of good will." She then read a "beautiful letter" from Rose Summerfield, the secretary of the National Council of Jewish Women, saying it came from a great group of thoughtful women.

The "Woodbridge Y's" of Baltimore presented to Mr. Woodbridge through Miss Willard, a magnificent bouquet of roses in loving remembrance of her whose name their society bore and as an expression of their sympathy and respect, to which he responded with much feeling. At this juncture several invitations were received for the convention of '96. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Nashville, Chattanooga, Portland, Oregon, Portland, Maine, and Seattle, Wash., each invited the National W. C. T. U. to hold its 23d Annual Convention within its borders. The matter was, as is customary, left for decision with the executive committee.

MRS. BENJAMIN: I offered the following by-law:

The committee on resolutions shall be a standing committee of seven, with one member each from the executive committee on the board of superintendents. Said committee shall formulate and present resolutions expressing the principles and outlining the future policy of the organization. Special department resolutions may be offered by each superintendent immediately after submitting her report.

Also moved to amend by-law of Art. 4, Sec. 2, as follows:

Superintendents and the secretary of the Young Woman's Branch, and the secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion's Branch,

MASTER AND MAN is a translation of the Russian story by Lyof N. Tolstoi, interesting mainly because of its depiction of class life in Russia. The translators say that it "is an encyclopedia of life in the villages of Russia, wholly faithful throughout its wealth of detail." The plot of the narrative is a mere thread,—a drive through a storm of a wealthy man and his master. During the early part of the ride the latter is all overbearing selfishness, but at the last sacrifices his life for that of his faithful servant, both of whom were in danger of freezing to death.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston. Price 35 cts.

THE CHRISTLESS NATIONS. By Bishop J. M. Thoburn, D. D. Who is better fitted by experience than Bishop Thoburn to speak concerning the nations that know not the Saviour of all the world? This series of addresses is not, as may be supposed, a sketch or history of the field, "but takes higher ground, studying the subject from the standpoint of the spiritual responsibilities of those with whom Christ is present—the body of His believers on the earth. Of especial interest to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL is the chapter on "Woman in the Mission Field."

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati. Price, $1.

PHYSICAL, INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL ADVANTAGES OF CHASTITY. By Dr. M. L. Holbrook, editor of the Journal of Hygiene and Herald of Health. The author has handled this delicate subject with skill, entering strongly though briefly into the danger and degradation of impurity, and upholding in a clear, white light the safety and nobility of a chaste life. One sentence on the title-cover in the form of a pledge is noteworthy: "From now on I will walk the path chaste, calm, temperate; brave, manly; no fault-finder, an early riser, a cold bather, a hard worker; joyous, happy."

M. L. Holbrook & Co., New York. Price $1.

TURNING POINTS IN SUCCESSFUL CAREERS. By William M. Thayer. "The chance of a lifetime comes to every man," is the legend on the cover of this volume which is a most admirable study of prominent characters.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries."

To Daniel Webster, Abraham Lincoln, Henry Clay, Lucy Larcom, Cyrus Field, Oliver Cromwell, Elizabeth Fry, Leland Stanford and scores of others have come a "tide" which was "taken at the flood" and led them on to their fortune and their fame. Of these, Mr. Thayer writes in brief, comprehensive chapters. The whole aim of the book is to illustrate the value of knowledge and character and to warn against the danger of ignorance, stupidity and worthlessness.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston. Price $1.50.

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE; and Other Stories. By Alphonse Daudet. Translated by Huntington Smith.

"La Belle Nivernaise" is one of the brightest of Daudet's ever bright short stories. He can tell a story, whose hue might by another's treatment be sombre, so that it fairly sparkles under his touch. One cannot always approve the breadth of his expressions, but remembering his nationality, the reader can explain their presence. This story chronicles the adventures of good Père Louveau's canal boat, and the fortunes of its inhabitants, especially the little waif, Victor, whom the warm-hearted mariner brings home to add to his already numerous family. But in spite of Madame Louveau's indignation, the waif stays and becomes the mascot of the family. It is natural and realistic, yet romantic and poetic. The clever illustrations interspersed with lavishness, add to the "taking" qualities of the book.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

November 28 has been named as Thanksgiving Day by the usual President's and governors' proclamations.

An international wedding was celebrated in the union of the Duke of Marlborough and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt last week.

Eugene Field, the "Children's poet," passed away last week. A movement is on foot to commemorate his life by a monument to be erected by the children of the land.

Foreign dispatches announce that the Marquis of Salisbury has proposed to the other powers to proceed to the dismemberment of the Turkish empire. The new Turkish ministry is not regarded with favor.

Fifty delegates, fourteen of whom were bishops, representing the general committees of the Church Extension and Freedman's Aid and Educational Societies of the Methodist church, met in Chicago November 7 to 14. These committees distribute the funds to assist struggling churches, build new ones and supply gospel light to the negroes.

ONE UNION SIGNAL at least that we know of sheds its beams a long way. A private letter from a friend living in a little mining town among the Ozarks writes thus: "When we get through with it, J—reads it, then Mrs. T—, afterwards Mrs. C— and after her Mrs. S—." How many of our white-ribboners thus send THE UNION SIGNAL out on a missionary tour?

SPEAKING of the "almost infinite variety of topics" discussed by the W. C. T. U. Convention at Baltimore, one journal says: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union should either limit their discussions to the temperance question or change the name of the organization to something more appropriate"—which remark shows that the writer has not yet learned the true meaning of the words, "Christian Temperance."

THE National Convention was prepared to give Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin a warm reception by reason of her close relationship to its president and as daughter of Mrs. Mary B. Willard, former editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, and widely beloved by white-ribboners, but she so charmed the Convention by her singing and by her own winsome personality that white-ribboners at Baltimore adopted her into their heart of hearts for her own sake. Our readers will be glad to know that she was made musical director for the National W. C. T. U.

MRS. HUNT'S report on page 3, of this issue, is of great interest and import not only to regular readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, but to all who follow the signs of the times. When people ask, "What practical work is the W. C. T. U. doing?" just tell them about the millions of children and youth who are getting a scientific temperance education as the result of W. C. T. U. effort. Other departments are doing splendid practical work, but the work of this department appeals in a special manner to the public mind, and this report, if widely circulated, would prove both an eye-opener and an encourager.

THE so-called victory of Tammany in New York means simply that Tammany holds what it already had of certain county and judicial offices—no more. It does not affect the excise law in the least. Of course the Republicans attribute this defeat, such as it is, to the fusion policy and, as is to be expected, Theodore Roosevelt has to bear the brunt of Republican wrath. "The city," said Chauncey Depew, "was not educated up to Roosevelt." Nor will it ever be until a Roosevelt educates it. We are glad, however, that the same authority admits that "his crusade may help the milleninum." Mr. Roosevelt himself assures the public that he "will abate not one jot or tittle in the rigid enforcement of Sunday law."

HUNDREDS of friendly, earnest faces looked up from Willard Hall seats last Saturday at noontide service, when the leader of the white ribbon hosts for this and every land stepped forward to address them. She had no text but spoke in simple, stirring words, contrasting these daily prayer seasons in Willard Hall with the beginnings in old Farwell Hall of many years ago, dwelling on the dire effects of the liquor traffic, the wide efforts of the women to combat it, and what we have to be thankful for, illustrating all with pertinent simile and anecdote. At the National Temperance Hospital gathering which directly followed, there were present about thirty representatives of the board of trustees, the medical staff and house officials, to consider the proposition of the College of Physicians and Surgeons through its secretary, Dr. Holmes, to provide a building in which the art of medication without the use of alcoholics might have larger opportunity for growth. Miss Willard also addressed the Chicago University College Settlement of which Miss Mary McDowell is resident head, and spoke of the adaptation of this line of work to the W. C. T. U. Although no large meetings were held during the week, our leader's time has been completely occupied by the many demands incident to a residence near Headquarters. She expects to leave Chicago this week, going to Lexington, Ky., November 18, where she will aid in the plans of Mrs. Frances Beauchamp, our assistant National recording secretary for work in the Southland.

JOSEPH COOK and Mrs. Cook on a round-the-world tour means the weaving of a strong strand in the radiant belt of purity and temperance encircling the globe. We publish in this number an exceedingly interesting letter about temperance in the Sunrise Land, from the pen of Mrs. Cook, who, it will be remembered, is our World's superintendent of coöperation with women's foreign missionary societies. Mr. and Mrs. Cook pect to reach India about the first of January, 1896.

IN anticipation of a large demand for our Convention number, issued last week, an unusually large edition has been printed. Every delegate and visitor to that Convention will desire to send copies to their friends, and especially to put them into the homes in which they were so royally entertained at Baltimore. We want people to know what the W. C. T. U. is doing—what it stands for—and the Convention number cannot fail to prove a powerful educator in this direction. Its twenty-four pages are devoted entirely to a report of the great meeting, and a wonderful impetus will be given to our organization all over the country by a wide circulation of this issue.

THE resolutions as adopted by the Convention will be found on pages 12 and 13 of this issue. The "party" resolution elicited a spirited discussion. The committee had offered the following: "Resolved, That we reiterate the pledge of our influence and our prayers to the party which represents our cardinal principles of equal suffrage and prohibition in its platform, and we would give the same support to any other party which may make the like declaration." Immediately following the reading of this Mrs. Boole offered the following substitute: "While we heartily approve of the do-everything policy of the W. C. T. U. we recognize the fact that we were organized to push total abstinence and prohibition, and we reaffirm our allegiance not only to these principles, but also to the Prohibition party as the only political party with the courage to speak out boldly in favor of woman's suffrage and the total annihilation of the liquor traffic." The consensus of opinion was that the former resolution lacked strength and definiteness, our delegates believing that the Convention should utter no uncertain sound with regard to non-prohibition parties. Hence, Mrs. Boole's substitute was adopted.

THE old Crusade church being now a thing of the past, white-ribboners of Hillsboro, O., have undertaken (in response to what seems a general demand among W. C. T. U. workers) to build a Crusade memorial room in connection with the new Presbyterian church now being erected on the old site. "We hope to preserve in this room," writes Mrs. McSurely, "everything possible pertaining to the Crusade. We want temperance workers to still find here memorials of the beginning of the great organization which now looks to the beautiful Temple in Chicago as its center." They are only asking help of W. C. T. U. women through the sale of souvenirs, for which a great many calls are being made. Naturally they cannot afford any very extensive advertising, therefore we call attention here to the enterprise and urge our women everywhere to "lend a hand" by providing themselves and their friends with souvenirs of the historic old church. There are four designs, viz.: (1) A cabinet souvenir in the shape of a book, the covers made from the wood of the old church and containing a condensed history of the Crusade with photographs of leaders—also a photograph of the building; (2) Gavels made from two kinds of wood from the old church with sterling silver plate inscription; (3) Canes made of cherry or walnut from the old church, also with sterling silver plate inscription; (4) Cabinet photographs of the old church building. Miss M. L. Stuart is chairman of the Crusade souvenir committee and Mr. W. A. Harman, secretary.

THE CALVARY ROAD.

BY LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.

"Not for fame, nor for gain, but for love's dear sake." (Her motto.)

Once there came a soul to the doorway of heaven
Calling to the angels, "Open the door!
I am one of the great
Of the earth, and my state
And my splendor were such, men have striven
To catch sight of the print of my feet where I trod;
I have come to be welcomed and honored of God."

Spake the angels low as they paused in their singing:
"Hast thou served thy brethren there on the earth?
Hast thou righted the wrong—
Saved the weak from the strong—
Hast thou humbled thyself for love, flinging
Thy soul to the dark and the sinning of men—
Hast thou suffered, loved, saved to the best of thy ken?"

But the soul was angry—left the doorway, crying,
"These are not the words they should say to such as I!
They must have heard my name
For the trump of my fame
Must have blown to the sky, when my dying
Put the town into mourning a month at the least,
And stopped all the music, the dance and the feast."

Sang a little angel to her bright harp golden,
Carols sweet and high of a poor man's love;
Whom the rich knew not
And the great ones forgot
In the centuries time-blurred and olden;
But who blessed little ones, a life that should save them.

So the ages passed, and the angels still waited
Singing and watching to open the door,
When one night in the rain
Of earth's winter, the pain
Of a soul asking help and belated
Came into the light, where the angels in white
Were all gazing on God and aglow with the sight.

Then there came a sound as of knocking and praying—
"Open, angels, open! Let the outcast in.
For the Lord's dear sake,
Whose heart had to break
To teach men pity, know no delaying.
Here's a hurt soul I bring to the mercy of your King,
She is 'shamed and sorry, angels, oh, let her hear you sing!"

How the angels of time flew to the gold door of heaven—
Welcomed the two souls, saying, "Evermore
Be thou the greatest
Who servest and waitest,
Thou who gavest service art forgiven,
Thou hast lost self in love, and the Christ path had trod
'Twas the Calvary road to the homestead of God."

LOVE'S PROVING.

In Two Chapters.

BY JULIA NEELEY FINCH.

CHAPTER I.

"They should be as happy as human beings ever get to be," was what I said to my wife as we jogged along homeward from church in our old-fashioned doctor's buggy.

"Yes, surely," answered her quiet, old voice.

"Well, but—Elizabeth! I don't for the life of me see why you always put that tentative loop around your sentences when you don't exactly agree with me, and yet,—"

As I paused for a word she spoke again. This time, with a twinkle, as it were, running along the sweet quavers, "Don't dare disagree."

"Tut, tut!" said I, "don't talk about your not daring anything, after that time you changed the Plympton child's medicine right in the teeth of my direct and explicit commands to the contrary."

Again from the depths of her comfortable corner she answered: "If I remember aright, doctor, the Plympton child got better right soon after that!"

"Turned the corner before you meddled," I muttered, but turning at this moment and catching the glint of that eye at sixty, as blue as a periwinkle, I let loose the smile that always played about my heartstrings when Elizabeth and I were alone, and returned to my subject. "But, Elizabeth, why don't you think they are happy?"

"Who—are happy, doctor?"

"Who are happy? Well! I am happy. At least I am when I can get you a little while to myself, which is seldom enough now, God knows, since 'James the Fourth' came. (So we called our latest born grandson.) Here I felt a small, soft hand creep between the gauntlet of my driving glove and my grim old wrist. Such a little hand, on which a thin thread of gold about the marriage finger shone in the summer's sun. Soft, in spite of the forty years of serving which it had so willingly and lovingly done! Tender, with the rocking and handling of the children God had sent us, some just lent us for a little while, others grown to be great sturdy men and handsome women. Turning more fully, I answered the stealing hand and tender eyes. "Oh, yes! You're happy, Elizabeth, I know that, thank God! But—you know well enough what it was I meant to ask. Why are the Egertons not happy?"

She no longer attempted to parry my words but sat upright, and while the blue eyes seemed earnestly regarding the familiar cut of Peggy's rather large ears which had flopped before us for ten or more years, she made answer at last.

"I don't know. But this I do know. Over that poor child's face lies a shadow that all her wedding finery cannot hide, and if she hasn't cried herself to sleep many a night since she married, I don't know girls' faces, and I think I do."

"Yes," I made answer, "if twenty years of close study could teach you."

After this we drove along silently. By broad lawns of emerald hue and velvet texture, wherein sat low, wide-winged, gallery-encircled, white mansions with huge and delicately fluted pillars supporting upper galleries. Or, perhaps, in front of the mansion would be a fair and blossom-filled garden. Perhaps instead of a large dwelling house would nestle a cottage, in its rear a little garden plot, and in front a narrow strip of homely, everyday bloom. Perhaps in a stone's throw—, alas! and alas! that it should be so, a corner grocery right in the midst of these sacred homes, with a "devil's door plate," as I called it, in the shape of a green baize door, revolving with fatal softness and swiftness, at the "open sesame" of some weak one outside! Curse of our beautiful, balmy Southland, destroyer of our youth and devastation of our hearthstones, the bar-room, that adjunct to the family grocery which absorbs the little enterprise!

The pale face which had come between me and my prayers during our staid service, did not leave me as we jogged along. Such a gentle, gentle face, with its low, frank forehead, across which her brows went, like the wide sweep of some beautiful bird-wing, with their clear-cut, delicate darkness! Then her eyes,—I do not to this day know whether they are brown or gray, blue or hazel—I only know that as I looked at them, surrounded by the long curling lashes which were darker than the sunny waves tucked away behind the tiny ears, that they had the clear yet shadowy light that you see on a brook through the leafage of bending trees, when on it shines the golden sun, and that beneath them lay a circle of blue shadow, and that the corners of the fresh, young mouth had a pathetic droop, which I, the father of six happy, rosy-tinted girls, felt going straight to my foolish old heart! She was above the average height of women, and her slim, young form in its floating summer draperies, leaned lovingly toward her husband who stood brave and handsome by her side. (Show me a woman beside a man—let me see no touch of face, head or even hands, and I will tell you whether or not she loves him.) Her husband was a splendid type of manhood, with straight, clear-cut features and a superb presence. I did not scan his face closely, but I liked the way his head with its curly waves of jet black hair was set on his wide shoulders.

Hester Grey had not been long in our town, coming there as the organist in our church. Ere long half the young fellows were wild about her sweet face and simple, tender ways. She said but little of her past. Wife and I had at once taken our girls to see her, and found her seemingly very comfortable and happy in her boarding place, with a decent, pleasant old couple, the Farleys, who, having no children of their own, were glad to welcome the young face to their quiet home. She told Elizabeth during our first visit that she was an orphan, and had been in Boston three years studying music, so as to prepare herself for her chosen profession, "having," she said, "to make my own way, and being so alone in the world, I thought it best to take a little sum left me by my aunt, who reared me, and put it all on my musical education, trusting to possible success to support me after it was exhausted." Elizabeth fell perfectly in love with the girl, and as we came home told me of the meager account she gave of herself, and wound up by saying, "Doctor, that girl has some sadness or trouble in her past as sure as you are James!" To this I made no answer, for I had long ago learned that Elizabeth's "feelings" about things and people were not to be despised. Her tender heart saw more than did the eyes of all the rest of us, and I had no doubt in my mind but that gentle Hester Grey had just what wife said, "a dark spot to look back upon." But as time went on she fell so pleasantly and easily into the ways of our young folks, became so beloved of all, that I ventured to hope her shadows lay behind her. Soon, from out the phalanx of young men who hovered about her, she made choice of one of whom I only heard that he had money and purposed settling in our quiet town for the sake of the love Hester had earned by her lovely face and lovelier nature. This spoke well for the boy at once. For him to be willing to relinquish the associations of his life in a much gayer city, for the sake of his girl-wife, seemed a very manly and tender thing to do, and I prepared to place him alongside Hester in my regard. They went away after their marriage to visit his relatives, and this was their first attendance at church, and really the first time I had had a chance to see Hester's husband.

I had come to M— a spruce, dandified youth, forty-five years before, and after marrying the first and only girl I had ever loved, settled down to my profession, and had become as much a part of M— as were its grand old oak trees and the shining, placid waters of the bay, which ran along its southernmost borders.

On the whole, I had been a successful practitioner, and one thing I did surely know, I had a firm hold on the hearts of the people! The family physician in our staid and trial-sobered South is one of the family, literally, and as much a part of the inheritance of the young ones as the family Bible or the worn spoons and big, shining coffee urn.

So I drove about the country lanes where the star-eyed briar-rose wreathed the "snake fence;" about the hot, dusty streets, where the green baize doors were kept slyly slamming from dawn until God knows when! But, strange to say, busy a man as I was, I never quite forgot, from week to week, the gentle face which dawned on me on Sabbath day. Elizabeth and I had many talks in the night-time of the same tenor as our first. There were no rumors about the young couple. The young man was a lawyer, had a fair practice; the older men liked his frank, social ways, and besides, old lawyers, as old doctors, are glad to take in their ranks recruits with flashing eyes and warm, gay hearts, and sturdy, rapid-moving young legs. Southern hearts are as warm and open as our sunshine and roses. Flowers of feeling bloom as readily and root as firmly as do our orange flowers and jasmines.

Months had passed, and Hester only came to service now and then, and while I liked, of course, to think that young Egerton had been brought up to "attend divine service," still more than once as we drove along home, Elizabeth, or perhaps I, would speak something after this fashion: "Before the baby (for our first had always been "the baby!") "came, Doctor, you couldn't go to church without me,"—or, "I couldn't go to church, dear, and leave you before the baby came," or, "How foolish we used to be when you wouldn't go and I was glad that you wouldn't." Elizabeth would, as the chance occurred, chide, saying, "Poor boy! The idea that we should want to blame him for attending church! Still, I wonder what Hester does with herself while he's away!" And as sure as the Monday dawned wife would either go with some of her incomparable jelly, or perhaps a snowy napkin hiding a batch of golden-topped, fleecy-white rolls, "just to see how Hester was feeling," and the two would soon be intent on the little lace-edged shirts, or mysterious doll-clothes which were always well to the fore, during those hot summer days!

I had about settled myself after tea one evening, my feet in my oldest, easiest slippers, when all at once, into my mind popped the thought of Hester, and up I sat, my paper down at my feet and eager inquiry in my tired, old eyes.

"Why, wife, Elizabeth, I don't remember the day when I've seen Hester! How in the world could I so completely forget her? I declare, I'm positively disgusted with myself."

"Don't be. It's all the same. I've been seeing her every day or so and she understands, dear. Read your paper. I told her if she felt the least bit badly to send for one or both of us. Why, James! don't you remember seeing her the day little Mary lay unconscious so long? Don't you know she ran right over or around, rather, in a white wrapper and sat there bathing Mary's head? Oh, she did look so beautiful! My girls, bless their hearts, are just as sweet as girls can be, but somehow Hester seems to touch my heart, with her pitiful pale face and sad mouth."

No more reading for me, for I remembered too well, now that wife brought it to my forgetful mind, the dewy pallor on Hester's temples and how, as my eye, during our anxious working with the little fair body lying there between life and death, took in her face, I noticed the transparent look of her brow, and how there showed against it like a stray violet, a purple vein, wandering along the temple, into the too hollow cheek; and I chided myself for forgetting her. Looking up I saw that tender eye regarding me and involuntarily I smiled to its love.

"But, mother, she might need me at any moment."

"Well, suppose she does; you're right here, and mammy is staying there now while Mr. Egerton is away so much."

"Away? What's he doing away at such a time as this? What right has he to be away, confound him!"

"Why, doctor!" Elizabeth made as though to laugh, but her tender mouth quivered and her eye dwelt on mine as though to question it.

Just here I heard the front door close quietly and softly and a light tapping foot came hurriedly along the hallway.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.

BY MARY H. HUNT, SUPERINTENDENT.

We are so often asked for a brief history of what has been accomplished that it has seemed best to briefly rehearse in this annual report what may seem like ancient history to those who have been familiar with the facts of this progress as they have transpired.

Impelled by a sense of the great need and by a courage born only of faith in "God's supreme designs" of mercy for our land and race, we began thirteen years ago the work of petitioning legislature after legislature for the enactment of laws making the study of scientific or physiological temperance a compulsory public school study. These petitions have been granted by the legislatures of forty-one states for all schools supported wholly or in part by public money, and by the national Congress of the United States for all schools under federal control, including the territories, District of Columbia, military and naval academies, and Indian and colored schools.

THE OUTLOOK.

At this time (October, 1895) only three states in the United States, Arkansas, Georgia and Virginia, are known to have failed to enact a more or less stringent law requiring the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics in connection with physiology and hygiene to be taught all pupils in all public schools. The state board of education of Virginia at one time ordered that scientific temperance be taught in the schools of the old Dominion, but as this action of the state board may not prove as permanent as a statute requirement, the friends in that state propose in due time to petition for legislative enactment requiring the study in all schools. Georgia, the empire state of the South, is expected this year to come into line with the other temperance education states. We are unable to report the exact status of Utah in its transition from a territory to statehood, but as the other new states did, it will probably adopt the national temperance education law which has been in force there since 1885.

We may confidently expect that in two years more at least our entire country will be under temperance education laws.

REQUIREMENTS OF THESE LAWS.

These laws differ somewhat as they necessarily must to be adapted to the varying school systems of the different states. The best laws contain the following provisions:

1. That this study must be pursued by all pupils in all schools. The laws of thirty-one states require this.

2. That it be pursued with well graded text-books in the hands of pupils able to use text-books in other studies. Sixteen states have made this requirement.

3. That the text-books used shall give a specified and adequate space to the consideration of the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics. In the laws of nine states this provision is made.

4. That this branch shall be taught as thoroughly and in the same manner as other required branches. Twenty-two states embody this clause in their laws.

5. That all teachers must pass a satisfactory examination in this subject before being granted a certificate. The laws of thirty-three states require this.

6. That a penalty be attached for non-compliance with the provisions of this law. Twenty-two states have penalties.

LEGISLATIVE GAINS OF LAST YEAR.

South Carolina, thanks to the efficient labors of Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, in December of 1894, enacted a temperance education law like that of North Carolina. In March, 1895, Indiana enacted a law making physiological temperance a mandatory study in all schools. The same month the legislature of Tennessee passed a law of this kind.

The New Hampshire legislature of 1895 enacted a penalty or fine of two hundred dollars for non-compliance on part of school boards with the temperance education law of that state, and added the requirement that "well-approved text-books in temperance physiology" must be provided for both teachers and scholars.

New York was one of the first states to pass a temperance education law, eleven years ago in 1884. The statute then enacted was as specific and stringent as the condition at the time of its passage warranted. This movement was then in its initiatory stage. With not a text-book in the world on the subject the law required taught, and no grading of the topic nor methods of study tested by experience at that time, the first New York law could be only general in its requirements, with no penalty for non-enforcement. As a result, while there was some good work done, there was much evasion of this law, especially in the cities. Consequently, the Christian churches and philanthropic organizations of the state united to form a central committee for a stronger scientific temperance education law in the public schools of that state. This committee decided upon a bill which represented the best features of the best laws on this subject in other states, and committed the plan of work for its passage to the National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction. The campaign, which was one of education, continued through five months of active work, when the bill passed without a dissenting vote in either house. As it passed so near the close of the session, the governor had thirty days in which to sign or veto it.

Then to influence him to do the latter, began a siege of newspaper misrepresentations of the requirements of the bill with strong educational names attached. It was a battle exceeding anything of the kind in all our legislative experience. There was no going to Europe for your National superintendent who was ready to sail when this phase of the war broke out. God heard and answered prayers, and blessed the work done for the childhood of that state, and for the coming of His kingdom. June 15 the welcome telegram came saying, "The governor has signed your bill." But while we were thanking God and taking heart for the future of our republic, resolutions passed by the New York State Teachers' Association showed that the enemy proposed to work for the repeal of this good law if possible another year. But the same omnipotent power that guided its passage will still further defend this beneficent law, if we do our part.

Personal attack in the form of the old "book job" charge against the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the National superintendent was as usual one of the methods of the opposition which also as usual failed. One wonders that the opponents do not tire of rehearsing the same old falsehoods.

TEXT-BOOKS.

There are now between twenty and thirty different school text-books on this subject, adapted to the various grades, which bear the endorsement of the National superintendent of this department and her advisory board. These books are issued by seven different publishing houses, and neither the National superintendent of this department nor her advisory board ever asked or received a cent for endorsing the same, and neither have they nor the Woman's Christian Temperance Union any pecuniary interest whatever in said endorsed books. It ought to be needless to say this, and that the public good is the only object sought in all the vast work that has been accomplished for the temperance education of the children of this country; but as there is nothing that can be reasonably said against the proposition, the opponent is driven to implication of motive, making personal defense necessary in defense of the work.

Is not the accuracy of the statements of the text-books sometimes called in question? Yes, by parties who tell us in the next breath that they "do not believe in total abstinence teaching anyway." These critics are very slow to make specific charges of inaccuracy in any particular statement. They generalize in a lofty way that means nothing to the one who wants to know in what the inaccuracy consists. No one has yet been able to point to a passage which could not be sustained by an authority more than equal to the critic. That those who believe in alcohol should dislike the testimony of modern science against its character and use is to be expected. Meeting these critics with the testimony on the other side is an important part of the battle for the day when alcohol shall no longer be king in our land, and is no inconsiderable part of the work of the National and international department of scientific temperance instruction.

The great work of research in the medical libraries and literature of this kind which this department has conducted for the last ten years is an invaluable equipment for this phase of the battle. No one who is familiar with the trend of thought and discovery as shown in the great medical journals of to-day, need fear for the outcome of total abstinence teaching.

THE NATIONAL DEPARTMENT HEADQUARTERS.

The National superintendent gives her entire time to the cause. From five to eight or more secretaries and helpers are in constant service in the various lines of this branch of our temperance endeavor; three typewriters click, click through the long hours of every day, taking off thousands and thousands of letters to be sent to all parts of this and other lands as well as manuscripts for the printer. More than twenty-one million pages of printed matter in the interests of the scientific temperance education of the future men and women of this land were prepared, published and sent broadcast last year from these headquarters.

ENFORCEMENT.

Are the sixteen million children of school age under temperance education laws in this country really getting this education? Experience has shown that there are four essentials to the enforcement of a temperance education law.

1. Endorsed text-books adapted to grade in the hands of all pupils using text-books in other studies, with oral lessons in the case of pupils unable to read.

2. A course of study in this branch, with not less than three lessons per week for fourteen weeks of each school year below the second year of the high school.

3. The same examinations or tests for promotion in this as in other studies.

4. The interested teacher.

The reports from the various states show a marked gain in the adoption of indorsed books put into the hands of pupils.

[For a detailed account of work in different states, which is appended to Mrs. Hunt's interesting report, we must refer our readers to the printed Minutes.—Eds.]

REPORTS OF ORGANIZERS.

(Condensed from those read at the National Convention.)

Most of my time this year has been spent in Maine, New York and Arkansas, although I have done some work in Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Virginia, Tennessee, Missouri and Texas, speaking one hundred and seventy-one times including state and county conventions, besides conducting a seven-day school of methods at Central New York Assembly. I have organized twenty-two unions, including two Lady Somerset Y's in colleges, one of which made tobacco a condition in its pledge. Notwithstanding the blizzards in northern New York, and smallpox in Arkansas, which somewhat interfered with my work, I have this year traveled by steamer, railroad and carriage ten thousand two hundred and forty-nine miles. I am thankful to have had the privilege of giving the pledge and our white-ribbon badge to nine hundred and forty-one active and four hundred and twenty-one honorary members. One difficulty the organizer often meets with in seeking to strengthen the old unions is the inefficiency of the local treasurer. Many local treasurers refuse to ask for dues, and because of this, hundreds of members secured by the organizers, who have accepted the badge, taken the pledge and promised to pay their dues (which they do not happen to have with them when they join), lose their interest and never really take up the work.

Mrs. Helen M. Bullock.

My work has extended over six states, the largest number of addresses being given in New York and New Jersey. Have attended eighteen county conventions, two state conventions as speaker, eight summer camps or open air meetings. Gave two addresses before the food exposition in Albany, addressed the Y. M. C. A. of Buffalo at one of their Sunday afternoon meetings, conducted a parliamentary drill before the New York state Y. W. C. A. convention, delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the New York college and hospital for women, and lectured for local unions, making in all 101 addresses, —many short talks and Bible readings not included. The work is growing. Christian people are aroused, the churches are opened to our work, and other organizations are calling upon our workers to help systematize and simplify their work.

Mrs. Ella Boole.

As you already know, am one of those so fortunate as to represent the children. Miss Willard said to me yesterday, "Mrs. Blair, you are in clover," and we feel that we are in clover. We never were so jubilant as we are to-day over the victories won. Several years ago we began to pray. We were praying for representation on this floor, and we were delighted last year when our first L. T. L. delegate was introduced from Pennsylvania. This year we expect to introduce two, next year we expect to introduce at least four, and this year we have become more dignified still, for now we belong to the executive committee. By and by we expect to be one of the general officers, and then later on we are going to be a W. C. T. U. Convention ourselves, because in a few years we are going to be old enough to be a W. C. T. U. of our own. During the past year I have been in the homes of nearly two hundred of our choicest, most consecrated women. When I attended the state convention of the L. T. L's in New York, there were 175 young men and young women, all of them over fifteen, twenty-eight of them public school teachers, and they marched into the church singing a marching song, took their places in front and gave their salute. Then their president on the platform said, "Salute from the head," and this was the salute, "For God and Home and Native Land," and oh, my sisters, it sent a thrill through me to think of those young people being trained to take our places by and by.

Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton-Blair.

Last year before our Convention closed in Cleveland I had promised to remain behind to tackle the German work. After leaving Cleveland I worked in Ohio until March, organizing six unions and from there I started through the great state of Kentucky. There I organized not only among white people, but also among colored people. On my way to Nebraska I became sick in Chicago and had to go to our Temperance Hospital. As soon as I could travel I went on to South Dakota, where I remained for two months. After taking appointments in Nebraska I went into Wyoming, organizing unions and calling a state convention. An urgent letter called me to Iowa and I went there a month ago. I organized during the year twenty new unions with a membership of 575, besides a large number of honoraries. During the year I wrote 865 letters, also 114 double postal cards to make sure of return.

MRS. HENRIETTA SKELTON.

This year I have lectured in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and District of Columbia. Yesterday word came to me of a union I commenced to form in Maryland Seminary, in which there were fifty-seven members, and while I have not had many calls from unions to do any specific work among the colored, I have found a field of work in my own city, and every Sunday when I am at home I go down in one of the sin-cursed parts of our city, where Jewish and colored children gather together, and tell them Bible stories. It is now nearly forty-one years since I entered the lecture field and gave my first temperance lecture in the state of Maine, and now, at nearly seventy years of age, while I am ready to respond to calls for work, I do not feel like going from city to city. As long as I am able I shall continue to work among my own people.

MRS. F. E. W. HARPER,
Organizer among Colored People.

Since our last annual meeting I have traveled fifteen thousand miles in the interests of our work, visiting the states of Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and the Indian Territory, attending the conventions of the first five named, and the Y conference at St. Louis in February. In June accompanied the World's W. C. T. U. party to England, France and Switzerland, and had a place on the program of the Convention in London. Have given eighty-three public addresses and many parlor talks, and have written more than twelve hundred letters and cards. Called into organized rather than unorganized districts, I can report fifteen new societies only, one a Somerset Y in the Cherokee Girls' Seminary at Tahlequah, Indian Territory. Everywhere young women were ready to enlist under our banner where there was opportunity to bring the matter before them, and to consecrate their talents to "the cause that needs resistance."

MISS CLARA PARRISH.

The winter months I spent in New York, assisting our general secretary, also speaking at several points in New York state and New Jersey, and attending the state Y Conference at Camden. Five weeks I have spent in Virginia and two in Illinois, have organized nine Y unions, six W. C. T. U's and reorganized one Y. Have written 770 letters, 213 postal cards and distributed 4,000 pages of temperance literature. Have also continued in charge of the Young Woman's Branch in Ohio. Our young woman's work meets special difficulties. One is the numerous young people's societies of the day, more popular than a reform movement can hope to be. Yet still the Y's—a Gideon's band, tried and true, keep their splendid colors flying—total abstinence, purity and prohibition. We summon every young woman to adopt our colors, who possesses the "grace, grit and gumption" of which reformers are made. Sisters, the organizers are your servants and your messengers. Help us carry our principles to the remotest corners of our land. Help us bring "the arrest of thought" to our young women, and thus to train up workers fitted to take your places in the future.

MISS FRANCES ENSIGN.

My work as National organizer this year has been done in five states. In the state of Arkansas, in the city of Little Rock, one Sunday afternoon, a wonderful mass-meeting of young people was held. This was brought about not by advertising that a lecturer for the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union was to speak, but there was a call for a temperance mass-meeting of all the young people's societies, and when once they were gathered together I had the pleasure of addressing such a meeting as had never been brought together in that city before. I traveled in Texas and in Indian Territory and have just come from a month's work in the state of Virginia, where I had the pleasure of attending the state W. C. T. U. convention. The result of all this labor has been, total number of lectures, 125; meetings, 63; unions organized, 13 Y's; members gained, 496; honoraries, 224; pledge signers, 125, not to mention the many schools, colleges, Christian Endeavorers, Epworth Leagues, teachers' institutes which I have attended and addressed. Have circulated the World's Petition, have taken subscribers for our National paper everywhere.

MISS CARRIE LEE CARTER.

I may be pardoned, perhaps, a thought of retrospection, and not only for the pleasure of retrospection, but for the benefit of such beloved young ladies as have just addressed you prior to my coming forward. I want to point to a few milestones in the history of this great movement. Thirty-one years ago I made my first temperance speech in Westmoreland, Pa. A few months later I was introduced to a larger public by John B. Gough, of sacred memory, in Music Hall, Philadelphia, where I delivered two lectures. It is amusing now to recall with what curiosity I was in demand and with what criticism. Ten years later the bands were broken from the spirits of my sisters in Ohio, and they came upon the platform in multitudes. To-day you have acknowledged your appreciation of the invitation by Bishop Vincent to have a permanent day annually at New York Chautauqua. I pleaded with that man in 1874 for the first meeting which was held there. At my second coming I took Mrs. Bishop Simpson with me; at my third coming we were the guests of the great-hearted Lewis Miller, took him with us and prevailed with the very conservative Dr. Vincent, as he was then, because he was afraid of an Ohio Crusader, afraid for the proprieties of the occasion. There at the close of my speech it was my privilege to nominate Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing as chairman of an organizing committee. Mrs. Ingham afterwards invited us to Cleveland; at Cleveland there joined us the other mighty soldiers of the movement. You will probably remember that when we asked that Dr. Warden, now bishop, who had been very helpful to us as Crusaders in the state of Ohio, should pronounce the benediction on a day's closing, the chairman advised us that no man's voice should be heard in that convention. Nor was it. Now how changed! These good ministers and bishops and gentlemen for every kind of business interested in our great cause are introduced as coadjutors in the great work in which we are engaged. This is progress. This is life. And it is not our life, but Christ within us, He doeth the works.

MRS. MATTIE MCCLELLAN BROWN.

Two hundred and fifty days of the last three hundred and sixty-five I have spent in the field. Lectures given, 170; women's meetings held, 66; young women's meetings, 4; chalk-talks, 60; unions organized, 18; Y's organized, 1; L. T. L's organized, 12; miles traveled by wagon, 1,150; by rail, 3,000; by boat, 150; total, 4,300. The one hundred days I have spent at home, part of them, at least, resting, darning socks, sewing on buttons, and three weeks this summer I cooked for my husband, and he did not have the dyspepsia when I came away, and was alive at last accounts. For the Indian union I want to say just a word. I do not want to claim the credit of the organization of that union; it did not any of it belong to me at all. I simply thrust in the sickle, and reaped the harvest that another had sown, and I want to mention her entire name, which will always be dear to me, that of Jane Altron, of the Warm Springs, Dak., organization, who had worked so long and faithfully among the Indians there at Warm Springs agency. I want to say that to the dear sisters of Oregon is largely due the fact that I have been enabled to do the work in the four or five different states in which I have labored during the past year.

MRS. ADA UNRUH.

Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson, of North Carolina, reported that she had traveled in North Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana, had attended three state and one district convention, organized twenty-four unions and delivered numerous addresses. We regret being unable to give a more detailed report of the good work done, but Mrs. Tomlinson's copy has failed to reach us.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

"What means this stone?"

I doubt not that she who wrote this question in inspired verse, saw down the years with vision clear—saw Willard Hall, and thousands of people coming and going, heard sighs and sobs and sins confessed, and saw its altar wet with tears.

. . . . . .

Yesterday I watched a sea gull's flight, now outward, now downward, now upward. There was plan, dash, cunning in every stroke of his wing.

For a moment he was hidden beneath the wave, but when he rose he bore in his beak a poor, luckless member of the finny tribe, and then his course was shoreward. Imagination ran ahead and saw a mute struggle and a red stain upon the sand.

. . . . . .

Down the river were many colored buoys bobbing and tossing about, while solemn bells kept saying, danger, danger, danger! And ever the bells sound, and ever the waves toss, and ever the danger lurks.

A warning signal rang sharp and clear and instantly purser, steward, passengers were going aft, but the writer waved her hand to a white-ribboner on the opposite deck saying, Hail! and straightway she fell to thinking of a great city two thousand miles away, of souls adrift on its merciless tide, of cruel fishers of men, of pitiful appeals for help, and thinking, she listened, while on her strained ear fell the sound of other bells, hopeful bells, Temple bells, and one had in it the ring of a voice that is stilled.

"What means this stone?" And I said it means that long after I am dead and gone, long after my puny efforts there shall have faded from the thought of man, Willard Hall will stand, a haven for the tempest tossed, a refuge for the weak.

. . . . . .

Leaning over the ship's side I marked the endless tumble of the waves, softly humming the while,

"There's a wonderful isle
Down the river Time
And we bury our treasures there,
There are snatches of song
That nobody sings,
There are broken vows
And pieces of rings
There are trinkets and tresses of hair."

. . . . . .

The leader's vacation is over, and to-day her heart was made glad by the testimony of a young man who stands high in the councils of the Y. M. C. A. of ours and other lands. He said: "I have been in noonday prayer meetings from New York to Mexico, but this meeting surpasses them all."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A Plan of Finance.

TO MY SISTERS:—The executive committee did not have time at its post-convention session to consider the following plan, but voted to have it printed in THE UNION SIGNAL, and I am sending it in the hope that state, district and county officers may find it helpful. Indeed, I see no reason why it should not be of use in local unions also.

The United Kingdom Alliance of Great Britain has for years employed this method and it has raised more money than any other temperance society in the world so far as I can learn. Therefore, the plan is not a theory but has been "tried and proved."

The Alliance employs twenty-six district agents, each of these agents has a prescribed territory (with us it would be a state, a district, a county or the territory of a local union); a certain salary is guaranteed for the first month or for two or three months according to the arrangement made. The agent collects subscriptions from men and women favorable to philanthropic and reform work, reporting them monthly to the executive committee of the society that employs him (or her). At the same time subscriptions are taken for the official organ, temperance literature is circulated, temperance meetings are addressed by the agent and collections taken. If at the end of the first month any agent has not brought in enough money to cover salary and expenses he is discontinued. It is important that the agent should be doing temperance work in the district in which he collects money so that the people shall realize that they receive some equivalent in the education of public sentiment. The value of this system is that the agents get acquainted with the leading temperance people in their districts and coöperate with them in the work of organization, and that it is much easier for those to obtain subscriptions in any given locality who are known to be duly accredited and who are constantly moving about in the same neighborhood so that they become personally acquainted with and gain the confidence of the community.

This is a general statement of the plan, and I am confidentt hat there are young women graduates of high schools, seminaries and colleges who would gladly try their abilities by accepting such positions from our societies.

One of the reasons that we do not receive more subscriptions from the general public is that our leaders have not time for the patient, plodding work of seeking out those who would be willing to give small sums annually. Young women, or older ones, appointed to such a work would develop into something larger if they had the ability to do so, and this would be manifest at the end of a year. I feel confident that if we would patiently carry out this plan it would prove to be one of the most practical methods of recruiting our corps of efficient workers, and that is what we most desire.

As a matter of course, any young woman appointed to such a position as I have described should be an earnest Christian, should have a fair education, womanly manners, and a "nice thrifty white ribbon look."

When you read this plan you will be likely to say, "Why, that is nothing new." To be sure it is not, and perhaps this is its greatest merit, but just try it in your local union, in county, district or state and report results in THE UNION SIGNAL, for experience has proved that this plan faithfully carried out has in it the sinews of war.

Yours for the "wherewithal,"

Frances E. Willard.

N. B.—May I ask each of our state papers to copy the foregoing?

NEW YORK NOTES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There are a half dozen tickets in the field in this city this fall, and, with one exception, they are all united for the liquor dealers' program—a Sunday local option law, which means legalized Sunday saloons. Tammany is the unblushing advocate of all that is bad, as heretofore. The reform forces, which won such a signal victory last year, are divided now, and the general advocacy of what really amounts to the Sunday saloon has dampened the enthusiasm of the women and the large church element, which was such an effective factor in the fight last year against Tammany. As a result, a portion of the influence and vote of this class will go to the Prohibition party, which alone opposes the saloon, but a great majority of these workers will do nothing rather than assist either of the old parties, or factions, in winning a saloon victory.

Acting Chief of Police Conlin, in a recent report to the police board, says: "It is admitted on all sides that there is practically a full and complete compliance with the liquor laws on the part of all the licensed liquor dealers of this city, a condition which, I venture to state, has never existed here before. During the past four months three thousand and thirty-six arrests have been made for violation of the excise law. In by far the majority of these cases the prisoners were held for trial and punished. However, the thoroughness of the work of the police in enforcing the law is not to be judged by the number of arrests made for its violation, but rather by the uniform manner in which the law is now observed, and by the evidence on all sides apparent to even the most casual observer, that the saloons of this city are effectually closed on Sundays and during prohibited hours." Mr. Conlin says that no less than one hundred and ninety-seven houses of prostitution have been suppressed, and that the old custom of raiding them to-day and permitting them to open in full blast to-morrow no longer exists. A like result has been achieved in regard to gambling houses, sixty-five of which have been raided and suppressed. "No public gambling exists in this city, and if it is carried on at all, it is only in places to which admittance is refused to every one except those well known to the proprietors or persons in charge." Not a single paper, as far as I have observed, has expressed any doubt as to the truth of these statements. It is a great point gained, to be able to show that the law against criminals can be enforced to the letter in cosmopolitan New York—the largest city in the nation—if the officials are disposed that way.

The change which law enforcement has wrought is wonderful. President Roosevelt reports that thus far, crimes committed on the Sabbath have fallen off fifty per cent. Resolutions of approval signed by many pastors in the lower and crowded section of the city, headed by Bishop Potter, which were sent to the police board, attest the beneficent effects of Sunday closing among the poorer classes. It was claimed by the liquor dealers and the advocates of Sunday saloons, that the prohibitory Sunday law caused the wholesale bribery of the police, and that this state of affairs would never cease until Sunday saloons were legalized. Many believed this falsehood. There is, however, no bribery of the police now, and it has been made pretty clear that it was the enforcement and not the repeal of the excise law that was needed to stop the bribery.

Superintendent Skinner, of the state department of public instruction, has issued a circular to every school commissioner and school officer in the state, containing an official interpretation of the law passed by the legislature last spring, providing for increased instruction in the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics in connection with physiology and hygiene in the public schools. It shall be taught as thoroughly as any other subject prescribed in any course of study. The length of each lesson must be determined by local school authorities, but it should be of sufficient length to insure such instruction as will prepare pupils to pass required tests. The law does not specify whether instruction shall be given during any particular ten weeks of the year, but care should be taken to provide instruction sufficiently early in the school year to avoid the danger of failure to comply with the law. The instruction in this subject must be given in each grade, whether semi-annual or annual. The local school authorities must fix the required tests for promotion from grade to grade.

TEMPERANCE PROSPECTS IN JAPAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is less than a week since I landed in Yokohama, but I have already seen and heard something of aggressive temperance work by the soft-voiced and gentle-mannered women of the Sunrise kingdom. Before I had finished breakfast yesterday morning three Japanese ladies were announced—Mrs. Yajima, the president of the Japanese W. C. T. U., Mrs. Harada, the treasurer of this organization, and a lovely looking young teacher from one of the schools who had come to act as interpreter between Mrs. Yajima and myself. One feels unpardonably big and brusque in all social intercourse with this diamond edition of humanity. Even our profoundest bows and best American manners are not equal to the situation. Mrs. Yajima is a woman of middle age, and is the Japanese principal of the Presbyterian Girls' School in the city of Tokyo. She is the aunt of Mr. Tokoi, who is now in America and who is well known in Congregational circles. Combining sweetness with force, dignity and capacity she seems well fitted to be a leader in this comparatively new reform. There are now ten societies in as many different towns in Japan; the first one organized being this society of Tokyo, in 1886, the immediate outcome of Mrs. Leavitt's visit. Work among the women is necessarily slow, as they have been so long kept in the background, but I am assured by those who have been for twenty-five years resident in this country that the Japanese women are natural speakers, and when through Christian education, they emerge from the restrictions of a purely domestic life they have a freedom and force of expression that their American sisters might well envy. It is to be hoped that they will never lose that exquisite delicacy and refinement which lend such a charm to the Japanese women, but I do not at all agree with Sir Edwin Arnold, that a broader education and social emancipation would spoil this lovely type of womanhood.

When I rallied Mrs. Yajima on the fact that although the men's temperance society was of later date, it already largely outnumbered the women's organization, she told me the story of a case of wine being sent to the president of the men's society when he was living in Honolulu. It was his wife who persuaded him to break the bottles, or in some way to dispose of the wine, and this was an illustration of the quiet home work many women were doing, even though their names might not be enrolled as members of any society. Mrs. Yajima brought me copies of their monthly magazine, the Woman's Herald, which was started at the beginning of this year, and which she herself publishes in Tokyo. There is a graceful design on the cover by a Japanese woman artist, who exhibited some of her work at the recent Columbian Fair in Chicago. It represents a blossoming palm tree, with a bird among the branches. The significance of this design is that as the palm tree often blossoms under snow, so the cause of temperance will flourish in spite of obstacles. All the articles in this magazine are in Japanese, but the contents are in English, and I saw that both men and women were contributors. Some of the translations of the Japanese into English are rather peculiar. For instance, unfermented wine is called "alcoholless vine liquid." Another article appears under the title of "Mathematical Idea of Women," which I found to mean the importance of Japanese women learning to keep accounts, as the wife is responsible for all the household expenditures.

During the recent Industrial Exhibition in Kyoto the local Young Men's Temperance Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union coöperated in the prosecution of their particular work. While Japanese women have never been secluded like the high caste Hindu ladies, nor foot-bound like the Chinese ladies, yet they have always occupied a position subordinate to men except in rare instances where superior intellectual ability forced them to the front, so it is an encouraging sign of the times when there is public coöperation between Japanese men and women who are interested in the same lines of reform. I have received a call this morning from Mr. Sho Nemoto, whose name is well known to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. He will arrange for temperance lectures from Joseph Cook when he arrives in Japan from Australia next month. It is hoped that in the near future there may be some plan of coöperation between English and American women connected with the various missions and the Japanese women themselves in the work for temperance and social purity. The women of this country have the deepest love and reverence for their Empress, and deplore the fact that, "according to the custom of the country, his Imperial Majesty is unable to give undivided attention to his noble consort." This same writer, in the Japan Evangelist for August, says: "Religion, we mean the religion, will have a hard fight against national usages handed down from centuries, before this source of grief shall disappear."

If Japan is to take her place among the leading nations of the world she must be made to feel that concubinage is a relic of barbarism. And may Miss Willard's motto, "A white life for two" speedily become a popular sentiment in Japan.

MRS. JOSEPH COOK.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MISS WILLARD.

Miss Frances Willard, President World's W. C. T. U.

WORTHY SISTER:—Your communication to the I. S. L., I. O. G. T., which recently closed a very successful session at Boston, was received and presented to the meeting of that body and the following resolutions were adopted regarding the same:

"In reference to this we propose that this International Supreme Lodge cordially reciprocates the fraternal greetings tendered by Miss Willard and hereby authorizes the Right Worthy Grand Templar to designate a fraternal deputation to the next convention of the W. C. T. U. and this lodge will cordially welcome any fraternal delegate from that organization to any open meeting of this lodge and (if the deputation be also members of our lodge) to closed sessions of this body."

You have our best wishes for the continued success of your organization and hope the time will soon come when there can be such unity of action between all the various temperance organizations from people who think with us and those not connected with any such organizations, that we may move in a solid phalanx against the greatest enemy of mankind.

With kind regards and best wishes, I remain

Fraternally yours,

B. F. PARKER, R. W. G. S.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us; we perish. And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm.—Matt. 8: 25, 26.

The modern Sanballat is out in his annual tirade against the Temple. It appears in an interview in a Chicago paper of October 24. The statements of this man who seems desirous either to "rule or ruin" are entirely untruthful and would be beneath our notice were it not for the fact that he will, without doubt, do as he has done in the past—buy up a large edition of the paper in which his article appears and send it broadcast over the land to intimidate our women and make them stop giving to the Temple. One of his statements is so cruelly false I am forced to mention it. He says, "She (Mrs. Carse) is supporting herself and an expensive force of women on the contributions of white-ribboners." He and every one else knows that my services for the Temple and everything pertaining to temperance have been entirely gratuitous, from first to last.

The sixth chapter of Nehemiah is good reading for our women just now, especially verses 8 and 9. "Then I sent unto him (Sanballat) saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart. For they all made us afraid, saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands."

The following persons have subscribed towards the $300,000 fund: Mr. and Mrs. Summerfield Baldwin, Baltimore, Md., $500; Mrs. Howard Smith, Newport, R. I., $500; Mrs. Theodore Hooper, Baltimore, Md., paid $100; Mrs. Charles N. Wood, Baltimore, paid $100; Mrs. Emily B. Gardner, Sanderstown, R. I., paid $100. In Temple Items, October 17, in speaking of a resolution pledging $100 to the Temple by the Caledonia county, Vt., W. C. T. U., we credited it to New York instead of Vermont. The three persons who have filled the most Wheels to October 23, are as follows: Mrs. F. J. Grim, Franklin Grove, Ill.; Mrs. Evelyn Graham, Newark, O.; Jane Weeden, Danville, Ill.

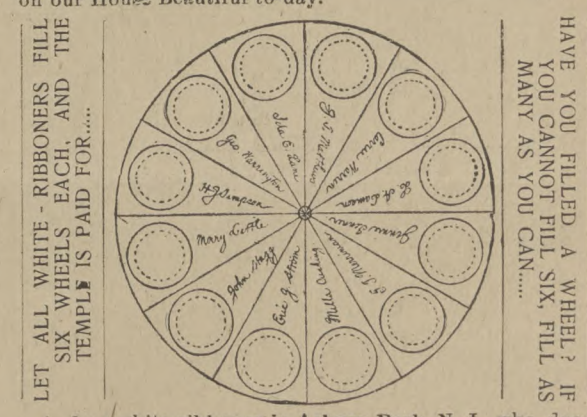
Why can't we have a revival of filling mite-boxes? They are always in order and in fashion as long as hearts are grateful and God's cause needs money. Won't all who sent to us for mite-boxes in the last two or three years and have not yet returned them get them out of their hiding places, and set them where they will catch some small, daily thankoffering? We will send a Temple souvenir spoon to all who return to us a mite-box filled. Mrs. M. E. G. Curtis, Arlington, N. J., returns a filled mite-box which has been a long time out. Sickness and the death of her husband caused the delay. She sends $5, and says the extra amount is for interest. Mrs. A. E. Caswell, Dublin, Tex., sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.65, and promises to fill it again. The above amount contained some coins most precious. Mrs. Caswell writes: "Two dollars of this money belonged to my dear boy who was just entering manhood when the summons came from the Master to come to His temple. That was ten years ago. These coins had a particular value to him, but I know it would have pleased him to have them put in our beautiful Temple." Mrs. Preston Manrass, Mill Village, Pa., sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.90. She says: "I am in warm sympathy with the Temple work, and believe many could fill a mite-box if they would but try. This is the fifth one I have filled, and I begin to see how the littles count." If all our white-ribboners had been as faithful in the last five years there would be no indebtedness resting on our House Beautiful to-day.



A dear white-ribboner in Asbury Park, N. J., who does not wish her name mentioned, returns four filled Wheels, and sends for two more. She has been very ill and a great sufferer for months, but this did not stop her work of love. She kept a wheel under her pillow, and when friends called she talked about the Temple, and got them to slip in a dime. Mrs. F. B. Phillips has filled sixteen, which she wishes credited to Littleton, N. H., W. C. T. U. Mrs. D. W. Pottes sends $20.60 on the pledge of the Walbow, Me., W. C. T. U. She says that the L. T. L. children are helping by filling Wheels; $15.60 of the above amount came from this source.

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

MOTHERS WHO WEAR THE RIBBON WHITE.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

Mothers who wear the ribbon white,
Longing to keep the hearthstone bright,
Yearning to make the home so fair
That nothing evil can enter there,—
Dearer, oh, dearer than life to you
Is the beautiful boy with eyes so true,
Oh, could you only keep him so—
Sweet as violets,—pure as snow!

Mothers who wear the ribbon white,
A dainty daughter is yours to-night,
A wee, little, soft-eyed, clinging girl,
Pure and fair as the rarest pearl,
Innocent-hearted, free from guile,—
But oh, she is yours such a little while!
Could you but keep her as she is now,
With the innocent eyes and the truthful brow!

Mothers who wear the ribbon white
Are we in earnest in this great fight?
Are we believing that good will come
If only our part of the work be done?
Oh, are we striving as strive we should
With all the power of womanhood,
Pleading in prayer, and laboring too,
That the world may grow honest and good and true?

He who has promised His blessing will give,—
He who suffered that we might live,—
He who took to His pitying breast,
Those long-ago children so wondrously blest,—
Ask it in faith and only believe
And strength for the burden the soul shall receive!
Oh, mothers who cherish the ribbon so white,
'Tis coming! 'tis coming! the triumph of right.

THE NEXT THING.

BY EVA K. MILLER.

At present the work of the temperance reform in many places seems to be progressing on a dead level of determination rather than up the joyous heights of inspiration. The whirlwind of the Crusade was succeeded by a wonderful enthusiasm for organization, which was in turn succeeded by the war-cry of prohibition by means of a party. Now, this last great onward wave of the reform seems to have spent itself on the sands of everyday-ness and become hopelessly mingled with the general current of the yet-to-be-accomplished reforms.

"What next?" is the question being asked by many workers who have gone up and down with the three last waves, and yet are obliged to look out over their country and see saloons flourishing, hearts broken, homes despoiled, husbands and sons lured on to ruin, and the terrible liquor traffic more strongly entrenched than ever behind the protection of government license and party rule.

What next? Why not try systematic house to house visitation? The evolution of business and political methods have long ago reached this way of working.

Time was when great corporations equipped themselves for work, got everything in order for business, then engaged men to stand behind counters or sit in offices and attend to the custom which came to them. Now, they send out after the custom lest some other rival corporation get it away from them.

There was a time when political parties depended on stump speeches and public harangues to win new converts and keep the old adherents in line. Now, these means are found inadequate, so cities are divided into wards, and wards into precincts, and every precinct thoroughly canvassed, each voter interviewed, and if one is found doubtful every possible argument or inducement offered to keep him "in line." This personal work is again followed up with systematic and careful distribution of campaign documents.

Why should not the Christian and the gospel temperance worker adopt these same well-tried methods? Suppose in every city, town and country district a federation of all temperance societies and workers was formed, and the country districted in such a way that every worker, from leaders and lecturers down to the humblest layman, be given five or more families to visit and look after for a year.

It is said that Gladstone, when occupying the position of Premier of England, found time to visit among the poor at least two hours of each week. Phillips Brooks, another busy man, did as much. Think you there is any Christian temperance worker among us that can be any busier than these?

Suppose the first family called upon consists of a drunken father, a slatternly mother, and four or five wild unkempt children. The first work of the visitor should be to get the children washed and clothed and attending school and Sunday-school. The next work, to induce the mother to attend a mothers' meeting, held somewhere in the neighborhood, and the man, perhaps, to attend a gospel temperance meeting, while tracts and papers suitable to their needs are left with them. All this work could not be accomplished in one visit, it would require infinite tact, patience and Christian love. Then, if the family move just as the visitor has begun to see some improvement, it should be reported to the society that has charge of the district to which the strangers move, that the work well begun may be continued, until all, or part of the family are won over to work in the interests of the cause.

Perhaps the next family called upon consists of a purse-proud man and wife who are devoted to the world, forgetting all obligation to God and their fellowmen. A formal but friendly call, accompanied, if best, by the gift of a book or leaflet, with a prayer to God that the word may be blessed to them, is all that could be done at first, but by faith, prayer and continuous effort the way would gradually open to interest them in the work of the kingdom.

Suppose another visit be made on a Christian family, poor in this world's goods, with a number of interesting young people struggling against odds for an education. What a pleasure to lend them books and papers and interest others in helping them on.

The visitor should keep a record of each family visited, reporting proper cases to the Y. M. C. A. or Y. P. S. C. E., when those societies can be of use to them, while the superintendents of departments in the W. C. T. U. should be informed of any work which belongs especially to them.

The kingdom of heaven languishes because of a lack of unity and personal effort on the part of those pledged to its interest. Unity, personal devotion, federation, district visiting, should be the watchwords of the hosts of Christian reformers in every path during the next few years.

If my pen were tipped with the gold of universal human love and dipped in the ether of an irresistible inspiration, I would like to write on the sky of every earnest Christian reformer, "Go ye out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in."

HAVE WE TIME FOR THE W. C. T. U.?

BY EVA JONES.

"There are so many things to go to and so many demands on our time that I have dropped out of the active temperance work. I used to belong to the W. C. T. U., but I felt I could not afford to give them any more of my time. I have to be a little careful of my strength, and there are the other societies, the missionary, and our church aid society, and I am one of the old first members of the Floral Club, and so many things, you know."

So said a sweet, Christian lady to me the other day, a type of many lovely women. There were twenty saloons in the town in which she lived, and she was a busy church worker and the center of a circle of friends and neighbors to whom she was a perpetual sunshine. She was not a member of any "society" organization that existed for selfish amusement, and her life was sweet and noble.

But underneath it all was the feeling that the W. C. T. U. cost a great deal in effort and money for what it accomplished, it was such discouraging, hard work to helplessly meet with a few women, realize the horror of the liquor evil and women's impotence in the struggle, and just fuss at "ways and means" that did not seem likely to drive out a dozen saloons in a million years. It seemed like dues thrown away. What better off was the town for all that the W. C. T. U. of Bentonville had ever done? And it was a shivering horror to feel that you were responsible all the time you were a member for such want of accomplishment. It was so much more comfortable to send a box of supplies to the far-off needy minister's family, and enjoy the pleasure of their gratitude for the gift, or to make money and work for the upbuilding of the church, where she could see the result in visible improvements. One could have courage for such work, you know. But she was glad that the W. C. T. U. was kept up by others, for she did wish, oh, so much, that something would be done to stop the dreadful evil. If she felt that it would really make any great difference with the saloons of Bentonville, of course she would belong. But the union did not seem to do much anyway, and she was sure she was not missed.

It set me to thinking what heroes, far ahead of the Christian vision of the times in which they live, are these women who are loyal to truth and duty, when there is naught to be seen but the dust of conflict, an overwhelming and insolent foe secure in the strong intrenchments of custom, law, and the power of gold, a few true men voting their principles while the mass of men within and without the church vote in solid harmony for parties and men who do not care or dare to undertake this warfare,—a band of women small in numbers as compared with the army of Christian women collected in the churches, a select few, almost as much noted for their zeal and energy within their own churches as for their courage and zeal for temperance, yet left to themselves in the temperance struggle. Almost as lonely do they feel as did Mary Clement Leavitt, when she persevered, year after year, until she had blazed a path for the white ribbon around the world. Tears of awful loneliness, and horror for the suffering and anguish of the victims of the traffic, a burden of soul that causes many a union to give up from very dread of "valley of shadows" through which they walk so alone, are the portion of the not over popular Gideon band.

Only remembering the loneliness of the Man of Sorrows, the hopeless conditions against which He struggled, and His promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee," and "Lo, I am with you," could ever enable them to succeed in standing firm and having done all in their power against home's deadliest foe, however seemingly unavailing, still "to stand."

Now what ought to be reasonably expected of the W. C. T. U. in Bentonville or any similar rum-governed and rum-cursed town?

From the time, twenty-one years ago, when the inaudible prayer of the mother-heart of the people became so suddenly audible that it was heard well-nigh around the world, the W. C. T. U. has been above all things else a prayer, organized and unceasingly audible, a prayer to God for help and strength and victory, and to men to rise and be men and rid home and native land of this awful crime and desolation, in the name of the God that this nation professes to adore.

Incidental is all the rest, the educating of public sentiment by literature, the press, the public meeting, scientific instruction and Sabbath-school lessons, organizing until the "sun never sets" on the W. C. T. U. Forty departments of work are little more than forty ways seized and used to make every one hear and reëcho the prayers of the organization.

Were the ballot to-day to be taken from men's hands and given to women it would be theirs to achieve, to overturn, to destroy evil, to put away saloons and legislate for the kingdom of God. They would be then the defenders of their own homes, and if their laws protected the greatest evils the world has ever known and established them, there would be left nothing for the ballotless half of the race to do but unite their voices in petition for needed reforms and keep on petitioning until their wish was respected and answered. But now are women the suppliants for the lifting of the rum curse at men's hands, and for the ballot for women that they may have the right to help protect themselves, and it is trite to say that there is no temperance society in the world that has had the strong and wide reaching influence for temperance that the W. C. T. U. has had.

We often wish that our strength were greater, our time more, that we could undertake more than we are able to do for the Master. There are so many things that need to be done, so many calls upon our sympathies, and so many duties waiting that we cannot reach unto—we have no choice but to choose. We cannot do half that we would. Shall we begin by leaving out the active temperance work? Is this what the Master wants of us? Is there a service more needed than to forward the temperance cause? And that it is a struggling, uphill, unpopular reform, for which the hour of victory has not yet been sounded, that it calls for special courage, devotion and faithfulness—these are only reasons that prove that it needs and ought to have our support above many other and easier things.

God grant us a baptism of His spirit that will make us choose—since choose we must, choose in His name to do the duty that calls for the bravest and stoutest and most determined consecration we can offer, the W. C. T. U. work, and that He will lead us along the rough and toilsome and tearstained way unto the bringing in of righteousness. It will not be the only thing we shall do. And about many things we shall hear the Master saying, "This ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

WANTED---A BOY!

Mr. A——, the rector, is dying to-day,
With the hope of heaven on his face;
He'll be missed in the pulpit and home, when we pray.
Wanted—a boy for his place.

Mr. B——, the judge, is dying to-day,
With the lines of true life on his face.
He'll be missed on the bench for many a day.
Wanted—a boy for his place.

Mr. C——, the doctor, is dying to-day,
And a sympathy beams on his face;
He'll be missed in the homes, when disease comes to stay.
Wanted—a boy for his place.

Mr. D——, the saloon-keeper, is dying to-day,
With a look of dread on his face;
He'll be missed where the path leads downward alway.
Wanted—a boy for his place.

Mr. E——, the drunkard, is dying to-day;
Oh, the marks of sin on his face!
He'll be missed at the club, in saloon, in the fray.
Wanted—a boy for his place.

HOW KATIE WAS FOUND OUT.

Grandpa came slowly down the back stairway into the kitchen, where Katie sat eating an apple, and trying to look as if she had never done any mischief in all her life. He came directly toward her, and sitting down in his rocking-chair, drew her up to him and patted her hair lovingly, while he looked rather seriously into her blue eyes.

"This morning," he said, "a little girl went up to my room, where her mother had forbidden her to go, climbed up at the foot of my bed, holding on by the tall bedposts, and walked all the way up to the head; then she reached up to my watch and took it off the nail, and sitting down on my pillow, looked at the watch as long as she wished. Having done that, she walked carefully down to the foot of the bed and jumped off, thinking that nobody saw her."

"Who did see me?" asked Katie, letting out the guilty secret.

"Please get me the Bible, my dear, and I will tell you."

Katie stood quietly by while her grandpa put on his spectacles, and slowly turned over the leaves till he found what he wanted.

"Read that, my dear."

But Katie could only spell out the words, and so it took her some time to make it out. After two or three trials she succeeded in reading distinctly, "Thou God seest me."

Then grandpa talked very seriously with her about the sin of disobedience and the guilt of covering sin, and Katie was very penitent, and resolved then and there to be a better girl. She looked at grandpa with great awe.

"God told him," she said to herself. "Oh, how dreadful to have God look right at me and then tell grandpa, all alone in his room, what I did! How good grandpa must be to have God talk with him. Seems to me his face shines just like Moses' when he came down from the mount."

"Did you take off your shoes, grandpa?"

"My shoes? What for, my dear? What do you mean?"

"When God talked with you upstairs and told you I walked on your bed, did you take off your shoes, like Moses?"

"Oh, my dear little girl," said grandpa, with rather a queer expression on his face, "God does not nowadays talk to His children face to face, but He leads and directs them just as truly as He did in the time of Moses. I think He led me to my room this morning, and to see on my soft feather bed the deep footprints that you left there; and then seeing my pillow that your mother had smoothed so carefully, all tumbled and wrinkled, and observing as I did your little mistake in hanging my watch with its face to the wall, I could not help knowing what you had done."
